There was a dispute between the proprietors of two neighbouring villages as to the possession of certain forest and jungle lands, and, as a breach of the peace was likely, proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were drawn up. The result of those proceedings was that the disputed jungle and forest lands were attached: that was on the 13th June 1921. There is nothing on the record to show how the matter came to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner, but, on the 27th January 1922, he directed that notices should issue to the parties to the effect that the property would be released from attachment and made over to the second party in accordance with the entry in the Settlement record. It seems that the Deputy Commissioner found that neither party was going to the Civil Court for a determination of the dispute and he found that in the Survey and Settlement operations, there was a dispute as to this same land under the provisions of section 40 of the Bengal Survey Act in the form of a village boundary dispute, and the Assistant Superintendent of Surveys found that the land lay in the village of the second party. This decision had not been appealed against and the orders were made final under section 62 of the Survey Act. It is on the fact of that decision that the Deputy Commissioner proposes to release the property from attachment in favour of the second party. Now, I am afraid that the Deputy Commissioner has no jurisdiction to pass the order he contemplates passing It may be that the application has been made a little too early to the Court but it might just as well be dealt with at once to save further trouble. An order passed in proceedings under section 145 cannot be upset by the Magistrate of a District; the remedy is to move this Court in revision or to go to the Civil Court for a decision of the claims of the parties. The proceedings under section 145 were not taken by the Deputy Commissioner and even if he himself had originally passed the order for attachment, he would not be able to review his order in the manner in which he proposes to pass an order now. It is not necessary to say more than that. The notice issued by the Deputy Commissioner stating that, unless a civil suit be brought within a certain period, the lands would be released from attachment, cannot stand and should be cancelled.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation—Continuing under influence of provocation—Act, whether must immediately follow provocation.

Accused suspected his wife of being intimate with one M. and frequently remonstrated with, and warned her: one night accused and his wife were sleeping in the courtyard of their haveli when, after some little time, accused awoke and found his wife's bed unoccupied: his suspicious being aroused, he immediately proceeded to the khola adjoining the haveli, where he found his wife and M. together: he attacked M. and killed him, and then attacked his wife and killed her also: he was placed upon his trial for the offence of murder and was sentenced to death, the Sessions Judge holding that the accused did not receive such grave and sudden provocation as to deprive him of the power of self-control. On appeal:

Held, that the provocation received by the accused was grave and sudden, and he continued to be under the influence of provocation until he had killed his wife, and that he was entitled to the mitigation provided in Exception (1) to section 300 of the Penal Code, as that exception does not contemplate that, in order to entitle an accused person to earn the mitigation, the act must immediately follow the provocation. Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 20th January 1920,

Mr. Noad, for the Appellant.

Lala Jai Lal, R. B., Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Kadir Bakhsh, was charged under section 302, Indian Penal Code, with the offence of murdering Musammat Nurai, his wife, and one Muhammad, Mammar, on the night between the 5th and 6th of June 1919. He has been found guilty and has been sentenced to death. Khuda Bakhsh, Allah Bakhsh and Mubarak were charged under section 302 read with section 109 with the offence of having abetted and aided the said Kadir Bakhsh in murdering either of the two deceased or one of them. The charge was not established against either of the three last mentioned accused and they have consequently been acquitted. Kadir Bakhsh has come up in appeal to this Court and his case has also been referred to us under section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the confirmation of the sentence of death.

The facts of the case are somewhat peculiar and beyond the fact of the murder of the two unfortunate victims nothing definite has come out of the evidence to establish the circumstances under which the deed was committed. According to the evidence of Musammat Bakht Sawai, widow of Muhammad, Kariman, nephew of Muhammad and Wahid Bakhsh, a Kureshi, who are alleged to be the eye-witnesses, on the night in question a hue and cry of thieves was heard upon which these three witnesses along with Muhammad deceased went inside the haveli of Ranjah, father of Musammat Nurai deceased, and Khuda Bakhsh accused. Muhammad was going in front. He was caught by the four accused and taken inside the khola belonging to Ranjah. They accused him of being a thief and of casting eyes on their womenfolk. Inside the khola they saw Muhammad on the ground overpowered by Kadir Bakhsh who had taken hold of his testicles. The other three accused were seen assisting Kadir Bakhsh in various ways. Khuda Bakhsh is said to have held the arms of the victim; Allah Bakhsh was holding his hair and Mubarak was seen beating him with fists and kicks. Musammat Bakht Sawai's cries brought on the scene Ilahi Bakhsh, Khuda Bakhsh and Allah Bakhsh, Kureshis, from Chunjanwala well. On arriving there these three Kureshis saw Kadir Bakhsh sitting on the neck of Muhammad who was probably dead. Karima was sent to fetch Sonhara Arain from his eastern well Jhariwala. According to Musammat Bakht Sawai, Musammat Nurai was sitting on her bed from where she was pulled off by Kadir Bakhsh and was dragged to a spot near the khola where she was struck with an axe on the head and face. The witness Musammat Bakht Sawai actually saw two blows being given to the unfortunate woman. Accused Kadir Bakhsh is stated to have then gone to the khola and to have delivered four blows on the body of the unfortunate Muhammad. The axe with which the victims were struck is said to have been brought by Kadir Bakhsh from a kotha belonging to Ranjah. Accused Kadir Bakhsh with his wife Musammat Nurai lived with Ranjah, her father, in the same house. Kariman and Wahid Bakhsh substantially corroborate Musammat Bakht Sawai in almost all the details of her evidence. It is not necessary to discuss in greater detail the evidence of these three witnesses inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge has practically disbelieved them and has discarded their evidence. The gist of their evidence is that a false alarm was raised by the womenfolk of the family of Kadir Bakhsh accused in order to entice Muhammad, Mammar, into the courtyard of their haveli and then to catch him and accuse him of being a thief. Enmity on account of certain dispute relating to land was alleged as the motive for the offence. This on the face of it was wholly inadequate and we do not think that the evidence of the so-called eye-witnesses can be safely relied upon.

The second group of witnesses included Ilahi Bakhsh (P. W. No. 5), Khuda Bakhsh (P. W. No. 6) and Sonhara (P. W. No. 10). They on hearing an alarm, as mentioned above, proceeded in the direction of the khola in the haveli of the accused from which the cries came. They on their arrival on the spot saw Kadir Bakhsh standing on the deceased and kicking him. The other three witnesses were seen standing by. Neither of them saw Musammat Nurai alive or dead at night, but later on in day time on being called to the spot they saw the dead body of Musammat Nurai lying outside the khola. Ilahi Bakhsh and Khuda Bakhsh then proceeded to the Thana to make the first information report. It is translated and printed at page 5 of the paper-book. It was recorded on the 6th of June 1919 at 10 A. M., the Thana being six miles from the scene of occurrence. In this report Musammat Nurai was said to have hidden herself somewhere when they had caught hold of Muhammad, Kammar, and had begun to beat him on the night of the 5th and 6th June. The report brought the Police on the spot and it was then that the real facts relating to the capture and murder of Muhammad and Musammat Nurai were discovered. Muhammad Ali, Sub-Inspector, after writing the report at once went to the spot and arrived there at 12 noon. Malik Gaman, Zaildar, was present at the spot and also the four accused, Kadir Bakhsh and others. The Zaildar produced the axe P-3. The body of Musammat Nurai was found lying in the courtyard outside the khola. The body of Muhammad, deceased, was discovered lying inside the khola some five karams from that of Musammat Nurai. Naqsha i-surat hal and statement of injuries in respect of both these deceased was prepared by the Sub-Inspector. Near the body of Muhammad were found two kachi bricks, a rope, a topi and a turban. A pair of shoes (Exhibit P. 7) was found on the roof of Ranjah's house. They were identified as belonging to the deceased Muhammad. The Sub-Inspector got the Patwari to prepare the plan (Exhibit P-B). On the back of this plan the Sub Inspector made a note to the effect that marks were observed on the wall in the corner between the northern wall of the khola and a wall of the house of Ranjah. The shoes were found at the edge of the roof towards the khola. According to the Sub-Inspector the shoes had evidently been placed there by the deceased Muhammad. As to the fact of the presence of Muhammad inside the khola and his murder, of course there can be no possible doubt. The only question is whether he was caught hold by the accused person on going into the haveli after hearing the alarm or that he had stealthily gone into the khola by getting on the top of Ranjah's house and climbing down the wall into the khola. The circumstantial evidence as to the discovery of the shoes on the roof of the house and the marks on the wall below establishes beyond any reasonable doubt the latter theory. There is evidence on the record to show that there was illegal intimacy between Muhammad and Kadir Bakhsh's wife, Musammat Nurai deceased. According to Ranjah, father of Musammat Nurai, Kadir Bakhsh accused her of being intimate with Muhammad deceased and kept warning her He himself had not seen anything personally, except that he had seen the deceased Muhammad and Musammat Nurai talking together several times. Besides the evidence of Ranjah, there is other evidence also on the record from which it appears that the deceased Muhammad and Musammat Nurai had been intimate for some time. On the night in question the appellant Kadir Bakhsh says he found the charpoy of his wife unoccupied. His children alone were found there crying. Naturally suspicions were directed towards Muhammad and the appellant at once proceeded to the khola where he found them together.

As regards general facts relating to the occurrence, there is also the evidence of a third group of witnesses, namely, Musammat Aishan, sister of Kadir Bakhsh and Musammat Sabhai, wife of Ranjah, which more or less goes to corroborate in certain parts the evidence given by the previous witnesses already mentioned. The most important piece of evidence, however, against the appellant is his own confession. He first confessed his guilt before a Magistrate on the 7th of June. In this confession the appellant made the following statement:—"My honour has been spoiled and ruined. I killed my wife, Musammat Nurai, and Muhammad, son of Lal. Both of them were in the act of sexual intercourse on the ground when I killed them. I at first caught Muhammad by his hair. I caught hold of his testicles. He fell down. I struck him with kacha bricks. At this he fell on the ground. I struck a second brick and he became unconscious. He lay there. The bedstead of Nurai, my wife, was close by. She left the ground and lay on the charpoy. She was then seated when I struck her the axe which struck in her head. I dealt out three or four blows of the axe. I then returned to see whether or not Muhammad had expired. I found him dead. Thinking lest he be alive he was really dead. I struck one more blow of the axe at his (Muhammad's) head." He adhered to his confession and made practically the same statement before the Committing Magistrate. He maintained the same attitude in the Sessions Court and confessed his guilt, but pleaded grave and sudden provocation. Whether the accused saw Muhammad and Musammat Nurai actually committing adultery or whether he simply found them together in the khola there cannot be the least doubt that grave and sudden provocation must have been caused. The learned Sessions Judge, however, did not accept the plea and dismissed it with the following somewhat remarkable observation:—"There was no grave and sudden provocation, but, assuming that both the deceased were committing adultery and were caught in the act by Kadir Bakhsh, do his acts, as stated by himself or brought out by the evidence, show that he was deprived of the power of self control? I do not think so." We entirely dissent from the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge. This is not a case of the first impression. Under circumstances similar to those established in this case sudden and grave provocation has been held to have been established [vide Said Ali v. Empress (1), Fazal v. Queen-Empress (2)]. The learned Sessions Judge further made the following striking observation in his judgment:—"Angered no doubt he must have been, but his anger was not, in my opinion, such a violent and ungovernable passion as to deprive him of all self-control. I do not find it possible to connect any of the blows with the violent agitation alleged to have been aroused in the mind of accused by what he alleges he witnessed." This, in our opinion, is not an accurate estimate of the situation. Further, the learned Judge held:—"Assuming this to be the case, however, in respect of the death of Muhammad, there is absolutely nothing to support this contention in the case of the murder of Musammat Nurai. She was undoubtedly murdered a little later when accused must have re-gained his self-control even if he had lost it before." That there was sudden and grave provocation cannot be denied. How long that provocation continued to prey on the mind of the appellant is the only question to be determined. In our opinion the rule contained in section 300, Exception (1) of the Indian Penal Code, does not contemplate that in order to entitle an accused to earn the mitigation provided for, the act must immediately follow the provocation. In the case of Abalu Das v. King-Emperor (3) the learned Judges who decided the case thought that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after the culprit was found in the company of the wife of Abalu Das. In this case, however, it is not necessary for us to go to that extent, for in this case the evidence does not justify us to hold that any considerable period intervened between the murders of Muhammad and Musammat Nurai. All that happened was that Musammat Nurai escaped while the appellant was grappling with the deceased Muhammad. Having finished him he proceeded to deal with his wife whom he dragged from her bed and killed her. In the circumstances we are justified in holding that the appellant continued to be under the influence of provocation until he had killed Musammat Nurai. The case comes under Exception (1) to section 300, Indian Penal Code.

We accordingly set aside the conviction under section 302 and in lieu thereof convict the appellant under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to five years' rigorous imprisonment. To this extent the appeal is accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Dispute about land—Complainant out of possession—Proceedings justified under s. 145—Opposite party, whether may be bound over under s. 107.

A dispute about land which would justify proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not bar proceedings under section 107 of that Code. But if the complainant is out of possession of the land in dispute, and there is no danger of a breach of the peace unless he resumes possession, he should be referred to his remedies under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or in the Civil Courts, and the facts that his attempting to resume possession may cause a breach of the peace and that his dispossession was illegal are not sufficient grounds for binding over the opposite party to keep the peace.

Application against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Wardha, dated the 28th February 1922, in Criminal Case No. 27 of 1921.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, Standing Counsel, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Dhuma, alias Atmaram, has been bound over under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is contended for him here that the evidence on record does not justify the order passed, because it does not show that the applicant is likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity. It seems that there is some dispute between the applicant and one Dada Patel of Wadgaon over a field. Applicant was prosecuted for criminal trespass said to have been committed on 18th July 1922 in this field but in that case he was acquitted. It has been held by this Court that, a dispute about land which would justify proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, does not bar proceedings under section 107 of that Code. But if the complainant is out of possession of the land in dispute, and there is no danger of a breach of the peace unless he attempts to resume possession, he should be referred to his remedies under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or in the Civil Courts, and the facts that his attempting to resume possession may cause a breach of the peace and that his dispossession was prima facie illegal are not sufficient grounds for binding over the opposite party to keep the peace: see Hira Singh v. Mohan Singh (1).

The applicant seems to have now left the village and to have gone to reside in Berar. It is only a Chief Presidency or a District Magistrate who can take these proceedings when either the person informed against or the place where a breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended is not within the local limits of the Magistrate's local jurisdiction.

Taking this case as a whole, I think the order complained against is wrong, and that if any disturbance is anticipated owing to the quarrel between the applicant and Dada Patel over the field, proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is the appropriate remedy. I cancel the order directing applicant to execute a bond to keep the peace.

EMPEROR v. DURGA CHARAN BEPARI.

Misdirection—Murder—Jury, method of charging—Language of charge to Jury—Misinterpretation of words by Jury.

Where in a trial by Jury the Judge wishes to inform the Jury as to what are the terms of a particular provision of the law, it is necessary for him to read the actual words of the section containing that provision to the Jury, and, if necessary, to explain what is meant by the section; if, instead of doing this, the Judge gives his own opinion of the meaning of the section, that would amount to a misdirection.[p. 409, cols. 1 & 2.]

In charging a Jury in a trial for murder, and in directing them as to what constitutes murder, the Judge should refer to the sections of the Penal Code which relate to culpable homicide, and direct the Jury as to what is culpable homicide, and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder. To direct the Jury that "murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought," although a comprehensive way of describing what the meaning of murder is, is not the way in which a Jury ought to be charged, and amounts to a misdirection. [p. 409, col. 2.]

Where, in dealing with one of the charges against the accused, the Judge in charging the Jury uses words which the Jury might misinterpret, and might thereby be induced to come to the conclusion that there was nothing more to be said about the matter, that would amount to a misdirection. [p. 409, col. 2.]

Criminal reference and appeal against the order of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Bakerganj.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar (with him Babus Mahendra Kumar Ghose and Sachindra Kumar Roy), for the Accused.—This a reference under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code. The three accused have been found guilty of murder and sentenced to death. The first and the third accused were found guilty of murder by the unanimous verdict of the Jury under sections 302, 34, Indian Penal Code, and the second accused under sections 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. They were also found guilty under section 364, Indian Penal Code. My points in this appeal are that the charge of the learned Sessions Judge is seriously open to criticism. The common interpretation of section 34, Indian Penal Code, which is followed by the learned Judge is entirely wrong. He says that section 34 provides "that where it is doubtful which of several persons has taken the chief part in any given crime committed in furtherance of a common intention of all of them, each of such persons is severally liable as if he alone had done the deed." I submit this is a mistaken construction of the section. The true view has been enunciated in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (1). Sir Henry Stephen developed the view further in an article in the Calcutta Weekly Notes, 18 C. W. N. 222 (Notes); see also Nibaran Chandra Roy v. King-Emperor (2). The direction of "murder" in the charge is also open to serious comment. It is no direction in law to describe it as the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought. My next grievance is that the Judge has not referred to the salient points in favour of the accused. It was the clear duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the Jury to the case of each individual accused. Lastly, I submit the Judge's charge on sections 148, 364, Indian Penal Code are all erroneous and wrong.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer (with him Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee), for the Crown.—I submit the "Heads of the Charge to the Jury" does not contain everything actually said by the Judge. The directions complained of are quite proper and they have not occasioned failure of justice. The learned Judge has not discussed the evidence in detail in the heads of charge. There having been no failure of justice, the case should not be sent back.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a reference under section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in a case which was tried by the learned First Additional Sessions Judge of Bakerganj and a Jury, and in which the three accused were found guilty of murder and were sentenced to death. There is also an appeal by the three accused. Two of the accused, Durga Charan Bepari and Hasan Dewan, were found guilty of murder by the unanimous verdict of the Jury under sections 302 and 34 of the Indian Penal Code, and the other, Alimuddi Mistry, was found guilty of murder under sections 302 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code. All three were found guilty on the remaining two charges, namely, under section 364, which is the section dealing with abduction with intent that the person abducted may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered, and under section 148, which is the section which deals with rioting by a person or persons armed with deadly weapons.

(1) 24 Ind. Cas. 340; 41 C. 1072; 18 C. W. N. 723; 15 Cr. L. J. 460.
(2) 21 C. W. N. 1035; 6 Cr. L. J. 304.

The first ground—or rather, the ground, upon which the learned Vakil, who argued the case on behalf of the accused, mainly relied, was, that the direction of the learned Judge to the Jury was open to criticism. In my judgment, the direction by the learned Judge to the Jury is open to certain criticisms and I have come to the conclusion that there are material matters which, as far as I can ascertain from the heads of charge to the Jury which are now before us, were not brought to the attention of the Jury. Before I deal with those matters attention should be drawn to the way in which the learned Judge dealt with section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. I am quite aware that the document which we have before us is not more than "heads of charge to the Jury," and I cannot accept the suggestion which was made by the learned Vakil for the accused, that the learned Judge said no more to the Jury than what appears in the heads of charge. The case lasted, (if my recollection serves me right) for six days, and the seventh day of the trial was reserved for the learned Judge's summing up; it was not until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon that the Jury retired to consider their verdict. I, therefore, regard this document as no more than "heads of charge to the Jury." But, even so, I may say that there are certain matters in the heads of charge which are open to criticism. In the first place, the learned Judge has stated as follows:—"Section 34 provides that where it is doubtful which of several persons has taken the chief part in any given crime committed in furtherance of the common intention of all of them, each of such persons is severally liable as if he alone had done the deed." If the learned Judge intended thereby to be informing the Jury as to what were the provisions of section 34, no one can deny that it is a misdirection, because the provisions of section 34 are not as stated by the learned Judge.

But I take it that the learned Judge was giving his own view of the meaning of the section. In my judgment, it is necessary for a learned Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the Jury, if he purports to give them what are the provisions of the section and then, if necessary, to explain what is the meaning of the section. The learned Judge did go on to say: "In other words, it provides for those cases in which all help to commit, e. g., a murder, but in which it is, in the nature of things, difficult to say exactly whose hand actually caused the death of the murdered person." It seems to me that, in that sentence, the learned Judge was on sounder ground; but, even then, having regard to the first part of the direction, I regret to say that I cannot regard it as a satisfactory direction with regard to the provisions of section 34.

Then, his only direction as to what constitutes murder is contained in one sentence "Murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought." That may be a comprehensive way of describing what the meaning of murder is but it is not the way in which learned Judges ought to charge the Jury in this country. It is usual to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide and to direct the Jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder: I should not, however, reject this direction to the Jury by the learned Judge on this ground alone, if I felt quite clear that the misdirection had not occasioned a failure of justice. Further, I do not approve of the last paragraph but one at page 40 of the paper-book where the learned Judge was dealing with sections 302 and 149, viz.: "This charge is to some extent redundant, and strictly applies only to Alimuddi, for Hasan and Durgh Charan are supposed to have been the actual murderers. By section 149 Alimuddi becomes a constructive murderer and liable for the substantive offence, just as by section 34 all these accused are equally liable for the murder, as though each of them had committed it single-handed." In my judgment, if the charge was, in fact, delivered to the Jury in those words or in words which would convey that meaning, in my opinion, the Jury might misinterpret it and they might have been thereby induced to come to the conclusion that there was no more to be said about the matter. In my opinion, this amounts to a misdirection.

EMPEROR v. DURGA CHARAN BEPARI.

The next paragraph is material in another respect. The learned Judge was dealing with section 148 and said: "Similarly, though all three are charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons under section 148, Indian Penal Code, it appears from the evidence that the charge will only apply to Alimuddi who was armed with a spear, the other two being unarmed." In spite of that direction by the learned Judge the Jury found all three of the accused guilty under section 148. This goes to show that apparently the Jury had not appreciated the learned Judge's direction. In effect, he directed the Jury that only one could be convicted under section 148 and yet the Jury found all three of them guilty under that section?

It is difficult to believe that all that the learned Judge said about the evidence is represented in his heads of charge: If it be a full and correct representation of his charge with regard to the evidence, then it appears that the learned Judge did not draw the attention of the Jury to the fact that many of the witnesses who were called on behalf of the prosecution were related to Ananda, who was alleged to be the prime-mover in the prosecution, or to each other: nor did he draw the attention of the Jury to the discrepancies in the evidence of some of the witnesses—discrepancies which certainly did occur.

Again, the learned Judge said: "The plot was apparently hatched on Wednesday and carried into effect on Thursday." I have read the evidence carefully. I do not know what evidence is supposed to support the suggestion that a plot was hatched on Wednesday. The learned Counsel and the learned Vakil were not able to assist me on this point. There is the evidence of Iswar Charan Bepari who proved that at Sabdar's house there was a feast and that Alimuddi, Biraj Ali Jemader, Kuti Mollah and Jabbar Ali were invited to it. Hasan Dewan is the son-in-law of Alimuddi and he lived in that house. The feast took place on Thursday and not on Wednesday, and I do not find anything in that evidence which would justify the suggestion that any plot was then hatched.

Towards the end of the learned Judge's summing up, he said: "The evidence is that Durga Charan had tied the cloth round the poor woman's neck at the time of the capture, and that so they dragged her away." It is true that Swarna, the woman who is alleged to have been present at the time the abduction took place, used the words "tied a cloth round her neck." On the other hand, the first witness for the Prosecution, Nagarbasi, said: "Durga Charan had put the upper part of her cloth round her neck and so had caught her," which may mean that he tied it or it may mean that he had merely wrapped it round her neck for the purpose of dragging her away. That by itself would not be so important but for the sentence which follows it; because the learned Judge says: "long before she got to the river she must have been half-choked, and it would require little more pressure to complete the suffocation." That depends to some extent upon how the cloth was tied, and the learned Judge did not draw the attention of the Jury to this question.

The learned Judge further said: "The Jury must also take into consideration the admitted hatred that existed between the deceased and her husband's relatives and must ask themselves whether in their experience such hatred does not, in nine cases out of ten, at any rate in Bakarganj District, furnish a powerful motive for such a crime."

In my judgment, the learned Judge ought to have drawn the attention of the Jury to the evidence of Nagarbashi with regard to this point. Nagarbashi said that as between Kalidas and the deceased there was a settlement of the dispute and it was called an amicable settlement, and he went so far as to say: "there was no quarrel between them after the case between them was amicably settled last Assarh." In view of this statement I fail to see how the Judge was justified in telling the Jury that there was existing "admitted hatred." Finally, the learned Judge directed the Jury as follows:—"As I have already said, which of those abductors actually applied the pressure that ended her life, if this was how she died, is immaterial."

There were three men involved in the charge of murder. It seems to me that the attention of the Jury should have been directed to the individual cases of the three men. As for instance, it may be that Alimuddi had no intention of murdering Nandarani, though he may have been willing to take part in the abduction of the woman. There is no evidence that he laid his hand upon the deceased, though there is evidence that he assisted the actual abduction by holding back and threatening the would-be rescuers. For these reasons, in my judgment, it would not be right to allow the verdict of murder to stand in respect of the three accused. Consequently, in our judgment, the verdict of murder and the sentences of death passed upon the three accused must be set aside

That, however, does not dispose of the case.

The learned Vakil for the accused pressed us to remit the case for a fresh trial, but with regard to the charge under section 364 the learned Vakil frankly admitted that he could not say that there was a misdirection as regards that charge, at all events, so far as the two accused, Durga Charan Bepari and Hasan Dewan, are concerned. In my judgment, there was ample evidence in this case to justify the Jury in coming to the conclusion that these two men did abduct the woman and that they abducted her either with the intention of murdering her or with the intention that she might be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered. The Jury unanimously accepted the evidence in this respect, and there being no misdirection in respect of this charge as regards these two accused it is not necessary to send this case back for a fresh trial, and, in our judgment, this Court should uphold the convictions of Durga Charan and Hasan Dewan in respect of the charge under section 364 of the Indian Penal Code.

With regard to Alimuddi I have considerable doubt whether the conviction under section 364 ought to be upheld. As I have already said, it is possible that this man may have taken part in the abduction without any intention of murdering the woman or putting her in danger of being murdered. The object of the abduction, so far as he was concerned, may have been something quite different. In this connection it is to be remembered that the evidence of Abdul was to the effect that he had seen two men only near the place where the body was found, and, in our judgment, it would be safer in the interests of justice to hold that in the case of Alimuddi, the conviction under section 364 should be set aside.

There remain the convictions under section 148. With regard to Durga Charan and Hasan Dewan, I agree with the learned Judge that there is no evidence that these two men were armed with any deadly weapon, or with any such weapon as is mentioned in section 148. Consequently, the convictions of those two men under section 148 must be set aside. The conviction of Alimuddi, however, under section 148 ought, in our judgment, to stand. He was armed with a deadly weapon and he was guilty of rioting. There was an assembly of five or more persons and on the evidence, which has been accepted by the Jury, there is no doubt that the common object of that unlawful assembly was to abduct the woman, and by means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to compel the deceased woman to do what she was not legally bound to do. In other words, the case would come within the meaning of section 141, sub-clause (3) or sub-clause (5) of the Indian Penal Code. In our judgment, therefore, the conviction of Alimuddi under section 148 must stand.

The result of our judgment is that the convictions of all the three accused, namely, Durga Charan Bepari, Hasan Dewan and Alimuddi Mistri, for murder, and the sentences of death passed upon them are set aside. The conviction of Alimuddi Mistri under section 364 of the Indian Penal Code and the convictions of Durga Charan Bepari and Hasan Dewan under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code are also set aside. But the convictions of Durga Charan Bepari and Hasan Dewan under section 364 of the Indian Penal Code are upheld and the conviction of Alimuddi Mistri under section 148 is upheld. Under these circumstances, we do not think it necessary to direct a new trial.

Now, there remains the question of sentence. My learned brother and I regard this as a very serious case and it is such a serious case that we have had considerable hesitation whether we ought not to remit the case in order that there should be a further trial on the charge of murder, but after due consideration we have decided not to take that course.

JIWANI v. EMPEROR.

Having regard to the facts of the case, the sentence we pass upon each of the accused, Durga Charan Bepari and Hasan Dewan, is ten years' rigorous imprisonment under section 364; and the sentence on the accused Alimuddi Mistry is three years' rigorous imprisonment under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 407 (2)—Sanction to prosecute, refusal of—Magistrate specially empowered to hear appeals, if can grant sanction.

A Magistrate of the First Class upon whom special powers of appeal have been conferred by the provisions of section 407 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is not a Court to which an appeal "ordinarily" lies under section 195 (7) of the Code from the orders of a Magistrate exercising Second Class powers.

Sadhu Lall v. Ram Churn Pasi, 30 C. 394 and Ramdayal v. Ramprasad, 3 N. L. R. 50; 5 Cr. L. J. 432, relied upon.

Accordingly, where sanction to prosecute under section 195 of the Code is refused by a Magistrate of the Second Class it is not open to a Magistrate specially empowered under section 407 (2) of the Code to hear appeals to grant the sanction on appeal.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with appellate powers at Moga, District Ferozepore, dated the 24th June 1919, reversing that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Moga, District Ferozepore, dated the 18th March 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. A. Razaq, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case an application was made to a Tahsildar, Magistrate of the Second Class, for sanction to prosecute Musammat Jiwani, the complainant, and her chief witness, Tilok Singh, for making false statements. This application was rejected. It was renewed before a Magistrate with appellate powers who has granted the sanction, and Musammat Jiwani and Tilok Singh have applied on revision for the cancellation of this sanction.

This petition must be accepted for many reasons. In the first place the Magistrate who granted the sanction is not the ordinary Appellate Court from the decisions of a Second Class Magistrate. He has merely been granted special powers under section 407 (2), Criminal Procedure Code. The conferring of such powers do not constitute a Magistrate the Court to which an appeal ordinarily lies under section 195 (7) from a Magistrate exercising Second Class powers, see Sadhu Lall v. Ram Churn Pasi (1) and Ramdayal v. Ramprasad (2). In the second place the Magistrate failed to specify what the false statements were on account of which he granted sanction and the Court before which and the occasion on which the offence complained of was committed. In this respect he disregarded the provisions of section 195 (4), Criminal Procedure Code.

Finally, on the merits there was every reason for refusing sanction. The case first came up before Pandit Maharaj Kishen who considered the prosecution evidence reliable and framed a charge. On the transfer of this officer the evidence was recorded de novo, and the Second Magistrate again considered the evidence sufficiently reliable to frame a charge. Again, the same Magistrate on a consideration merely of discrepancies in the prosecution evidence and on account of enmity which was abundantly clear from this evidence acquitted the persons accused in the case. From the above facts it is clear that two trying Magistrates did not consider the case prima facie false.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the petition for revision and set aside the order of the Magistrate.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24—"Person in authority," if include the prosecutor—Confession suspected to be obtained by inducement—Prosecution to show that confession freely made.

The words "person in authority" in section 24 of the Evidence Act include the prosecutor.

If, in the circumstances of a case, it appears to the Court that there is reason to suspect that a confession was obtained by inducement so as to bring it under the provisions of section 24 of the Evidence Act, the prosecution, to make the confession admissible in evidence against the accused, must show that it was freely made.

Reg. v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q. B. 12; 62 L. J. M. C. 93; 5 R. 392; 69 L. T. 22; 41 W. R. 525; 17 Cox C. C. 641; 57 J. P. 312 and Reg. v. Warringham, (1851) 2 Den. C. C. 447*n*; 15 Jur. 318, referred to.

Rule against the order of the Magistrate, Alipore.

Mr. C. J. Hazara, Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Promode Kumar Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Magistrate of Alipore convicting the petitioner, Ashotosh Dutt, under section 379, Indian Penal Code.

The point in this Rule is whether a certain statement made by the appellant was admissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of section 24 of the Evidence Act. The complainant's story is that after the theft he went home and told his brothers what had happened and they decided that the best chance to get back the money was to get hold of the appellant soon and make him give it up so that they did not inform the Police. When they found the appellant, he told them that if they did not beat him he would tell them where the money was and eventually gave them certain information. The learned Sessions Judge held that section 24 was not admissible, because the persons to whom the statement was made had no authority over the appellant. But it is settled law that the words "person in authority" in section 24 include the prosecutor.

As regards the question whether the making of the confession was caused by any inducement, the evidence on the record does not clearly show exactly what was said. But in the case of Reg. v. Thompson (1) the Court of Crown Case Reserved held that it was the duty of the prosecution to prove in a case of doubt that the prisoner's statement was free and voluntary, and the following dictum in the case of Reg. v. Warringham (2) was cited with approval that the Judge will require the prosecutor to show affirmatively to his satisfaction that the statement was not made under the influence of improper inducement and in the event of any doubt subsisting on this head will reject the confession. On this authority we hold that if in the circumstances of the case it appears to the Court that there is reason to suspect that if the confession was obtained by inducement so as to bring it under the provisions of section 24, the prosecution must show that the confession was freely made. In this case having regard to the admission of the complainant that he was willing to drop the Police proceedings if he got his money back we are bound to suspect that some such offer was made to the accused and that it was this that induced him to confess. We also find that in cross-examination the complainant said, we spoke to him, that is, the appellant, in flattering terms, so he said he would realize the money after dawn. Having regard to the state of the evidence we think that the admission made by the appellant ought not to be proved as it was inadmissible under section 24 of the Evidence Act. The case against the appellant depends mainly on the evidence of the complainant. Whether his evidence should be believed without strong corroboration or whether there is other evidence sufficient to corroborate him apart from this admission we express no opinion.

We set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner and direct that he be re-tried.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250 (Prov.)—Compensation to accused—Duty of Magistrate to hear complainant—Absence of complainant on days of hearing—Effect.

A Magistrate is bound to hear the complainant before making any order against him under proviso to section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

No inference can be drawn against the complainant from the mere fact that he has been absenting himself on the appointed days of hearing.

Criminal application for revision against an order passed by the First Class Magistrate at Rajapur.

Mr. Jinnah (with him Mr. Ratanlal Kanchhoddas), for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C. J.—In this case the Magistrate has made the order under section 250 of the Code of Crimical Prosedure without giving to the complainant an opportunity of putting forward his objections to the order. The reason given by the Magistrate for adopting that ecurse is that in his view the complainant had been absenting himself on the appointed days of hearing, and, as he conjectured, probably fearing that he would be called upon to pay compensation. It is difficult to understand how any inferenos could be drawn against the complainant from his absence. He was not bound to be present at those dates of hearing, or at any rate, on the day on which the order was made. There is nothing to show that he was bound to be present, and in fact he was absent. The Magistrate has read the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 250 as though it contained the words " if the complainant be present." But those words are not there and it is difficult to read words in the proviso which are not there. It is clear that under the proviso the Magistrate was bound to hear the complainant before making the order which in the present case he failed to do. It appears from the judgment that the complainant's Pleader was there, but he was unable to urge any objection on behalf of the complainant as he had no instructions from the complainant on the point. Under the circumstances the presence of the Pleader on that date could not be treated as dispensing with the necessity of the Magistrate's calling upon the complainant to state his objections to any order that he might propose to make under section 250. On this ground alone the order in the present case ought to be set aside.

I, therefore, make the Rule absolute, and direct the amount, if paid, to be refunded to the complainant.

The accused in this case, though served, has not appeared to support the order.

Revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 20th August 1921, setting aside that of the Magistrate, First Class, Barabanki, dated the 30th June 1920.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. D. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Nazir Hasan brought a complaint against Mohammad Yamin and a number of other persons under section 147, Indian Penal Code, in which he charged Mohammad Yamin as having been present and instigated the riot which was said to have occurred on the 5th of October 1920. Mohammad Yamin and Nazir Hasan are Zemindars living in the same village and the quarrel which resulted in the charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code, arose out of an irrigation dispute. Nazir Hasan himself gave evidence before the Magistrate who tried the case under section 147, Indian Penal Code, in support of the charge on the 16th of October 1920. The learned Magistrate acquitted Mohammad Yamin and convicted certain other persons who had been charged along with him. All these persons were, however, acquitted in appeal by the Sessions Court. The Magistrate held it proved that Mohammad Yamin was not present at the time when the riot occurred. The judgment of the Sessions Court is dated the 10th of January 1921. On the 30th of January, Mohammad Yamin applied to the Magistrate for permission to prosecute Nazir Hasan under sections 193 and 211 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate by his order of the 30th of June 1921 refused to grant the sanction applied for. In that order he stated that there had been an inveterate enmity of long standing between Nazir Hasan and Mohammad Yamin who are rival Zamindars and there was no doubt that Nazir Hasan had been beaten by Mohammad Yamin's party on account of that enmity. He refused sanction on the ground that the application was clearly made to satisfy a private grudge and for the purpose of coercing Nazir Hasan and that the interest of justice would not be served by granting it. This order has been reversed by the learned Sessions Judge who has granted Mohammad Yamin permission to prosecute Nazir Hasan. In his order he has not discussed the reasons given by the learned Magistrate for refusing sanction but has merely stated that he sees no reason why Mohammad Yamin should be refused permission to prosecute Nazir Hasan for having brought a complaint against him which was false and which he must have known to be false. Nazir Hasan has now applied to this Court to have the order of the Sessions Judge set aside and the sanction granted by him revoked.

The application is headed as an application under sub-section 6 of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is clear that this Court is not given power under that section to interfere with the order of the learned Sessions Judge. Sub section 6 of section 195 provides that any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate. The words "any sanction given or refused under this section" are clearly applicable only to a sanction given or refused upon an original application and this sub-section does not provide for interference by Third Court. This is the view taken in Musoji v. Mohamed Walayatullah Khan (1) and the same view has been expressed in Kanhai Lal v. Chadami Lal (2) and Baran Barai v. Mata Prasad (3). But this Court has clearly power to interfere with the order of the learned Sessions Judge in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as that section expressly provides that in any case which has come to its knowledge the High Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 195. The case before us is one in which that discretion should, in our opinion, be exercised and the sanction revoked. Sanction was refused by the learned Magistrate who saw the parties and heard the evidence and he was clearly of opinion that the interests of justice would not be served by granting sanction. Nazir Hasan is about 70 years of age and there can be no doubt that the riot in the course of which he was very severely beaten was engineered by his enemy, Mohammad Yamin, although the latter was not actually present. The affair occurred more than 14 months ago and the statement on which it is proposed to charge him with having given false evidence was made so far back as the 16th of October 1920. Had the learned Sessions Judge thought it desirable that Nazir Hasan should be prosecuted for bringing a false charge or giving false evidence against Mohammad Yamin he should have taken action himself and directed his prosecution, but in view of the inveterate enmity between the parties it is certainly not desirable nor in the interests of justice, that such a powerful lever should be placed in the hands of his enemy, Mohammad Yamin.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C. J.—In this case the original order which is said to have been disobeyed was made by the First Class Magistrate, Mr. Date. It appears that the present petitioner made an application to the District Magistrate for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, as an authority to which Mr. Date would be subordinate. The District Magistrate was of opinion that as Mr. Date made his order as a First Class Magistrate and that the Court to which he would be subordinate in that capacity would be the Sessions Court to which appeals from his decisions as a First Class Magistrate would ordinarily lie. On that ground the District Magistrate refused to entertain the application. We are not concerned with the application which the complainant subsequently made to the Sessions Court, nor with the result of that application. The present application is against the order of the District Magistrate; and it is urged on his behalf that Mr. Date must be taken to have made his order as a public servant within the meaning of clause (a), sub-section (1) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and that though he was a First Class Magistrate, as a public servant he must be taken to be subordinate to the District Magistrate, though as a Court he may not be subordinate to the Court of the District Magistrate within the meaning of section 195. On the construction of the section, I do not feel any difficulty in disallowing this contention, but the point has been decided by the Madras High Court in the case of Arunachalam Pillai v Ponnuswami Pillai (1) and it is needless to deal with it at any length. I accept the view taken in that case and hold that under clause (a), sub-section (1) of section 195, if a public servant making the order is a Court, in respect of that order, the Court to which that Court would be subordinate would be the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie, that is, in the present case, the Sessions Court and not the District Magistrate. I am of opinion that the order of the District Magistrate is right.

Hindu Law—Succession—Illegitimate son—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889)—Illegitimate son of Sudra—Succession by survivorship—Succession Certificate, whether necessary.

Under the Hindu Law an illegitimate son in the three high classes never takes by inheritance but is only entitled to maintenance from the estate of the father. The illegitimate son of a Sudra might, under certain circumstances, inherit either jointly or separately.

The illegitimate son of a Sudra can be a co-parcener with his father, when he would be competent to sue to recover a debt due to his father without the production of a Succession Certificate.

Revision against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 13th February 1922, in Civil Suit No. 226 of 1921.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-applicant in this case is an illegitimate son of one Ramlal in whose favour the defendant in suit executed a bond. It was pleaded inter alia that a Succession Certificate was required before plaintiff was entitled to a decree and that Ramlal, being a Khatri and not a Sudra, plaintiff could not form a co parcenary with him. For the plaintiff it was stated that Ramlal was a Sudra by caste and hence plaintiff could be a co parcener.

Now, it is a settled law that the illegitimate sons in the three high classes never take by inheritance but are only entitled to maintenance from the estate of the father. The illegitimate son of a Sudra might, however, under certain circumstances, inherit either jointly or severally.

The lower Court has directed the plaintiff-applicant to produce a Succession Certificate but the first question to decide in the case is whether Ramlal was a Sudra or a Khatri. If he was the latter, even the Succession Certificate would not enable the plaintiff to sue, but if the former, the plaintiff would be a co-parcener with his father: Sadu v. Baiza (1), Jogendro Bhuputi v. Nittyanund Man Singh (2) and confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nittyanand Man Sing (3). Therefore, if plaintiff is the illegitimate son of a Sudra a Succession Certificate is not necessary: see Mukund Balkrishna Buti v. Purnia (4).

I set aside the order directing the plaintiff to obtain a Succession Certificate and remand the case to the Trial Court with advertence to the above remarks. I fix Pleader's fee at Rs. 15 and costs will follow the event.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 1468 OF 1921.

July 5, 1921.

Present :—Mr. Justice Ghose.

Kumar MANMOTHA NATH MITTER—PLAINTIFF

WALTER LOCKE AND CO., AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS.

Calcutta Rent Act (III B. C. of 1920), s. 11, scope of—Lease for term of years—Tenant informing landlord of his intention to quit after expiry of lease—Landlord entering into agreement to lease to another—Act, coming into operation of, before expiry of lease—Tenant, right of, to take advantage of Act.

The Legislature in enumerating, in the proviso to section 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the grounds upon which a landlord can successfully claim an order for possession did not intend to limit the claim to these grounds but merely enumerated these grounds for the purpose of indicating the grounds upon which a landlord would be entitled to possession as of right, leaving it open to the Court to exercise a discretion in his favour upon any other grounds which might appear to the Court to be satisfactory. [p. 423, col. 1.]

Certain premises in Calcutta were demised to defendant No. 1 for a term of twenty years beginning from the 1st April 1901; on the 7th January 1920, defendant No. 1 intimated to the plaintiff landlord that he would not remain in occupation of the premises after the expiration of the lease. Thereupon on the 16th January 1920 the plaintiff entered into an agreement with E. for letting out the premises to him for a term of 10 years from the 1st of April 1921 or as soon as the defendant No. 1 vacated the premises. The defendant, however, refused to vacate the premises on the strength of his supposed rights under the Calcutta Rent Act which came into operation in March 1920. Whereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit to eject the defendant from the premises:

Held, that the arrangement between the plaintiff and E. being not conditional if possession was not given to E. the plaintiff would be exposed to the consequences of a breach of his agreement with E. Consequently, it was just and proper that protection should be afforded to the plaintiff and that the latter had shown cause which ought to be deemed satisfactory by the Court for the purpose of coming to the conclusion that he was entitled to the order he sought vide proviso to sub-clause ', sub-section 1, section 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh (with him Mr. T. Ameer Ali), for the Defendants.

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Mr. B. K. Ghose), for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the owner of premises No. 4, Esplanade East, has instituted this suit against the defendants, (1) Walter Locke & Co. Ltd., being a Company registered under the English Companies Act; (2) Walter Locke & Co. Ltd. being a Company registered under the Indian Companies Act; (3) H. Hobbs & Co., a firm carrying on business in partnership at 4, Esplanade East; and three persons named (4) J. B. Fulton; (5) G. R. Stanley; (6) P. R. Dunckley residing at 4 Esplanade East, and described as Merchants' Assistants, praying for the recovery of possession of the premises. The suit against the defendant No. 5 (G. R. Stanley) has been withdrawn as the plaintiff was informed that he was not in possession of any portion of the premises. The defendants J. B. Fulton and P. R. Dunckley, although served with the writ, have not appeared in this suit.

The circumstances under which this litigation has arisen are as follows:—On the 25th July 1901 the premises in question were demised to Walter Locke & Co., Ltd., (hereinafter described as the defendant English Company) for a term of twenty years beginning from the 1st April 1901 at the monthly rentals of Rs. 1,875, Rs. 1,925 and Rs. 2,025 for the first six years, the second period of seven years, and the third period of seven years respectively. By the Indenture of Lease the defendant English Company, inter alia, covenanted with the lessor not to assign, transfer or part with the possession of the entirety of the said premises without the previous consent in writing of the plaintiff, so that the defendant English Company should be at liberty, without such consent, to sub-let the upper flats of the said premises or any part thereof respectively. The said Indenture also contained a proviso for the entry by the plaintiff in case of failure or neglect of observance of any of the covenants, conditions or agreements on the part of the defendant English Company to be performed and observed. The plaintiff alleges that, in or about the month of March 1920, Walter Locke & Co. Ltd., was registered in India to acquire and take over as a going concern the undertakings, assets and liabilities of the defendant English Company, and that the former Company thereafter carried on business at premises No. 4, Esplanade East, and that by reason thereof, there was a breach of the covenant hereinbefore referred to, and that thereupon the plaintiff became entitled to re-enter upon the premises. The plaintiff further alleges that on the defendant English Company's attention being drawn to the last mentioned fact, the defendant English Company informed the plaintiff that there had been no transfer of the business of the English Company to the Indian Company. The plaintiff on the faith of this assurance received the rents which had accrued previous thereto and which had not been received by him and also the subsequent rents up to December 1920. He states, however, that he has ascertained that a transfer to the Indian Company has been effected and that on account of the breach of covenant on the part of the defendant English Company, he has not accepted the rents from January to March 1921, and has also not received any portion of the monies due for the use and occupation by the defendant English Company of the premises in question after March 1921. The plaintiff further states that before the lease of the 25th July 1901 came to an end, the defendant English Company definitely informed the plaintiff early in January 1920 that they were not going to occupy the premises after the expiration of the term of the lease of 25th July 1901, and that thereupon the plaintiff entered into an agreement on the 15th January 1920 with one B.N. Elias for letting out the premises in question to the latter for a period of 10 years from the 1st April 1921 or as soon as the English Company vacated the premises in question. In these circumstances, the present suit has been instituted by the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendants from the premises in question.

The ground of forfeiture alleged in the plaint is not now relied upon and I do not propose to refer any further to the defendant Indian Company. The defendant firm of H. Hobbs & Co., occupy the first floor of the premises which was sub let to them by the defendant English Company under a sub lease expiring on the 31st March 1921. The defendants Nos. 4 and 6 are occupiers of the remaining portion of the premises under the English Company.

The English Company in their written statement deny that their undertakings, assets and liabilities have been transferred to the Indian Company; or that there was any breach of covenant on their part as alleged in plaint. They say further that they duly tendered the rents in respect of the months of January to March 1921 to the plaintiff, but owing to the refusal of the latter to accept the same, the said rents as also the rents for the months subsequent to March 1921 have been duly deposited in the office of the Controller of Rents. They go on to add that some time prior to the expiration of the lease there were negotiations between the defendant English Company and the plaintiff for a fresh lease of the premises: that those negotiations did not mature owing to the plaintiff having insisted on a rent of Rs 5,000 per month besides the payment by the tenant of the owner's and occupier's shares of the rates and taxes: that, although the defendant English Company had intimated to the plaintiff sometime in January 1920 that they were not prepared to accept the terms which had been proposed by him, they notified to him on the 17th May 1920 that, having regard to the fact that the Rent Act had come into operation, they proposed to remain on in the premises and to avail themselves of the benefits conferred by the Rent Act. They also state in their written statement that they had made all possible endeavours to secure accomodation elsewhere but had failed, and that, unless they are allowed to remain in occupation of the premises, their business will suffer grave and irreparable injury. The defendant firm of Hobbs & Co, in their written statement adopted the statement made by the defendant English Company and maintained that, having regard to the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act, they were entitled to remain in occupation of the first floor of the premises.

On these pleadings the following issues were settled between the parties:—

(1) Is the plaintiff entitled to eject the defendant Nos. 1 and 3 from the premises No. 4, Esplanade East?

(2) Is he entitled to the mesne profits claimed?

On behalf of the plaintiff one Jacob Ruben Jacob has been called. He describes himself as the constituted attorney of one B N. Elias and states that on the 16th January 1920 an agreement was arrived at between the plaintiff and Elias under which the latter was entitled to the grant of a lease of the premises in question for a period of 10 years at a monthly rent of Rs. 5,000 Under the agreement of 16th January 1920 the lessee would be required to pay the whole of the rates and taxes, to put the property in thorough repairs, to insure it for the benefit of the lessor in a sum of not less than Rs. 3,00,000 against accident, fire and earthquake and to deposit with the lessor a sum of rupees one lakh in cash or proper securities to be approved of in writing by the lessor. On the lessee fulfilling these terms he would have an option at the end of the period of 10 years to the renewal of the lease for a further term of 10 years at the enhanced rent of Rs. 5,500 a month.

The witness Jacob stated that the above terms were proposed by the plaintiff in his letter of the 16th January 1920 and that they were accepted on the same day by Mr. Elias and that thereupon a cheque for rupees one lakh was handed to the plaintiff. That cheque, the witness believed, had been cashed by the plaintiff; at any rate, no portion of the amount of the cheque has been returned by the plaintiff to Elias. The witness further stated that Elias had all along been and was still willing to carry out his part of the agreement of the 16th January; that he considered himself tied to the plaintiff; and that he wanted possession to be given to him within a reasonable time. It appears that, pursuant to the agreement of the 16th January 1920, a formal lease of the premises has been drawn up and has been executed by the plaintiff and by Eliar, the date of the execution of the lease by Elias being the 5th January 1921. The leate was tendered in evidence, but it appearing it was not registered, it was not admitted in evidense as a lease; but portions of the document have been tendered in evidence for the purpose of showing that the agreement between the plaintiff and Elias was to the effect that Elias should have possession of the premises in question on the determination of the existing leate to Walter Locke & Co. Ltd. and as soon as the landlord gave vacant possession of the same. In cross-examination the witness stated to Mr. Pugh that Elias has, since the execution of the lease, raised the question as to whether, in place of the clause in the document which I have just read out, a clause to the effect that possession of the premise in question should be given by the plaintiff to Elias within a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease to Walter Locke & Co. Ltd, should not be substituted. The witness further stated in cross-examination that he had been advised by his Solicitors that the words now occuring in the lease were "all right"; but that owing to the absence of a clause to the effect that possession of the premises in question should be given to Elias within a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease to Walter Locke & Co. Ltd. Elias had not yet registered the lease granted by the plaintiff.

On behalf of the defendant English Company Mr. Brandshaw, their Director and General Manager in India, has been examined before me. He stated that there were negotiations between the plaintiff and the Company in 1919 for a new lease of the premises after the expiration of the old lease but no agreement was arrived at; that he interviewed the plaintiff on the 5th January 1920 when the latter told him that he had an offer of Rs. 5,000 per month plus all rates and taxes plus the cost of repairs and insurance. The witness considered the demand excessive and accordingly refused the same. Thereupon the witness wrote to the plaintiff a letter on the 7th January 1920 in these terms:—

"With further reference to my interview yesterday afternoon with your son and Mr. Ghosh, your Solicitor, re the terms on which you were willing to renew our lease, I write to say that upon mature consideration I regret we are unable to accept the terms offered. As the building cannot now be termed modern and has not the convenience of present day buildings, it would be impossible to get any thing like the same rent for the residential flats, and it would be impossible to saddle the business with a rent out of all proportion to its value. We are sorry, therefore, to have to decline your offer especially after the long and pleasant relations we have had during our tenancy of the last 20 years."

He admitted that after he had written the above letter, he was informed by the plaintiff on or about the 17th April 1920 that the plaintiff had contracted with one Elias on the 18th January 1920 for granting him a lease of the premises with effect from the 1st April 1921, i. e., on the determination of the tenancy under the lease of the 25th July 1901. He stated that on the 17th May 1920 he had informed the plaintiff that the defendant English Company desired to remain in occupation of the premises after the expiration of their lease and that if the plaintiff was unwilling to grant them a further lease they proposed to seek the protection of the Rent Act. He said he had endeavoured to secure premises No. 2, Chowringhee, for the Company but the negotiations in respect of No. 2, Chowringhee had not matured, and added that after the expiration of the lease of the 25th July 1901, he had taken steps to move the Rent Controller for fixing a fair rent of the premises in question from April 1921, and that those proceedings were still pending before the Controller of Rents. In cross-examination the witness very frankly stated that he did not wish to suggest that Elias had no rights whatsoever under the agreement arrived at between him and the plaintiff on the 16th January 1920; his point was that he had never refused to pay proper rent in respect of the premises and that owing to the difficulty of getting suitable accomodation elsewhere he had been obliged to seek relief under the Rent Act.

This is practicatly all the oral evidence in the case, (the defendant H. Hobbs & Co. have not given any evidence) and I now propose to turn to the documentary evidence which has been put in. I need not refer to the letter of 7th January 1920 as I have already set out the same; nor to the letters which passed between the plaintiff and Elias on the 16th January 1920 because I have set out the substance thereof. As I have said, on the 17th April 1920 the defendant English Company were apprised of the fact that the plaintiff had entered into an agreement on the 16th January 1920 with Elias for granting him a lease of the premises in question for a period of 10 years after the expiration of the then existing lease to the English Company. The defendant English Company did not reply to the letter of 17th April 1920 till the 17th May 1920, i. e., not till the Rent Act had come into operation. On the 17th May 1920 they informed the plaintiff that they desired to remain in occupation of the premises and proposed to seek the protection of the Rent Act. On the 20th July 1920 the defendant English Company stated that, although they had given notice to the plaintiff, that they proposed to remain on after the expiration of their lease "under the protection of the Rent Act," they were, however, negotiating to take other premises and that they hoped to give the plaintiff vacant possession of the premises in suit on the 31st March 1921. On the 8th February 1921 the defendant English Company wrote to say that, owing to the failure in obtaining possession of premises No. 2, Chowringhee, they would be unable to give vacant possession of 4, Esplanade East, on the expiration of their lease on the 31st March 1921. On the 11th February 1921 the plaintiff stated in reply that the defendant English Company had given him definitely to understand that they would not remain on after the expiration of the lease on his terms and that thereupon he had entered in January 1920 into a binding agreement with another party for the lease of the premises which was to commence from the termination of the then existing lease in favour of the defendant English Company, and that he could not help stating that the defendant English Company were going back upon their promise. On the 14th February 1921 the defendant English Company explained to the plaintiff the position and stated that owing to their failure in securing accomadation in premises No. 2, Chowringhee, they had been obliged to seek the protection of the Rent Act in respect of premises No. 4, Esplanade East. On the 16th February 1921 there is a letter in which the position taken up by the defendant English Company is contested in great detail on behalf of the plaintiff. On the 22nd February 1921 there is letter from the defendant English Company in which the position of the Company is reviewed at great length. Then there is a letter of the 2nd March to which no reference need be made, having regard to the fact that the ground of forfeiture referred to above has now been abandoned by the plaintiff. Lastly, the defendant Company have produced before me the receipts which had been granted by the Controller of Rents in respects of the rents of the premises from January 1921 which were deposited in his office under the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act.

In this state of the evidence, oral and documentary, it has been contended before me on behalf of the plaintiff that he is entitled to the relief he seeks on two grounds: (1) that the defendant English Company have not observed the provisions of subsections 4 and 5 of section 11 of the Rent Act and (2) that inasmuch as the defendant English Company had definitely refused to accept the terms which had been proposed by the plaintiff in respect of a fresh lease of premises No. 4, Esplanade East, so far back as on the 7th January 1920, i. e., long before the Rent Act came into existence, the plaintiff was free to let out the premises to any one he liked and that he did in fact let out the premises to Elias on the 16th January 1920 long before the Rent Act had been thought of and that I ought not to pass such an order as will result in the plaintiff being exposed to the consequences of a breach of his agreement with Elias.

On behalf of the defendant English Company the contention has been advanced that there was at no time any definite refusal on their part to take a lease of the premises in question from the plaintiff on terms which were fair and equitable. It was true that the defendant English Company had not accepted the plaintiff's terms as they thought they were extravagant; but the policy of the Rent Act was to prevent the tenant from having his rent raised against him, or from being turned out, though his tenancy by agreement had expired, so long as he was willing to pay the rent authorised by Statute. In other words, the defendant English Company became statutory tenants of the premises in question on the expiration of the term of the old lease and that, so long as they observed the terms of the Statute, they and the other defendants as well were entitled to remain in the premises in question. Lastly, it was argued, having regard to the nature of the business which the defendant English Company carried on in these premises, it was extremely inconvenient to and hard on them that they should be asked to move out of the premises at a month's notice, especially as no suitable accommodation was to be found elsewhere.

So far as the plaintiff's first contention is concerned, I do not think that there is any substance in it. The rents up to March 1921 were due to the plaintiff under the lease of the 25th July 1901. Those rents as they became due had been tendered to the plaintiff in due and proper time. The ground of forfeiture alleged in the plaint has been given up, and, that being so, I am unable to hold that there was any valid reason whatsoever on the part of the plaintiff which justified him in refusing to accept the rents which has been tendered by the defendant English Company in respect of January to March 1921. Be that as it may, on the refusal of the plaintiff to accept the rents so tendered, the defendant English Company deposited them in the office of the Controller of Rents on the 1st April 1921, i. e., on the first available date on which he could deposit the rents under the Statute. As regards the rents for the months subsequent to March 1921, I am satisfied, on the evidence produced before me, that the defendant English Company deposited those rents in proper time in the office of the Controller of Rents. That being so, I hold against the plaintiff's first contention, and I am of opinion that the defendant English Company have duly observed the provisions of sub-sections 4 and 5 of section 11 of the Rent Act.

The second question raised by the plaintiff raises, however, a difficult point. Undoubtedly, the policy of the Rent Act is as has been contended for on behalf of the defendant English Company. In other words, the objects which the Legislature had in passing the Rent Act included restriction on increasing rents, restriction or right to possession and restriction on premises. In the case of rent, a standard is fixed and any rent in excess of that standard is declared by the Statute to be irrecoverable from the tenant, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary. In the case of the restriction on the right to possession, section 11 provides as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, or the Indian Contract Act, 1872, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made so long as the tenant pays rent to the full extent allowable by this Act, and performs the conditions of the tenancy: Provided that nothing in this sub section shall apply where the tenant has done any act contrary to the provisions of clause (m), clause (o), or clause (p) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or an annoyance to adjoining or neighbouring occupiers, or where the premises are bona fide required by the landlord either for purposes of building or re building, or for his own occupation, or for the occupation of any person for whose benefit the premises are held, or where the landlord can show any cause which may be deemed satisfactory by the Court." It is further provided that the fact that the period of the lease has expired or that the interest of the landlord in the premises has been transferred, shall not, of itself, be deemed to be a satisfactory cause within the meaning of the last mentioned proviso, provided the tenant is ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Act. I need not refer to the case of restriction on premiums, because nothing turns upon it so far as this case is concerned.

The question now is whether in this case the plaintiff landlord has shown any cause which can be deemed satisfactory by the Court for coming to the conclusion that the defendant English Company are disentitled to relief under the provisions of the Rent Act. I think the Legislature in enumerating in the proviso to section 11 the grounds upon which a landlord can successfully claim an order for possession did not intend to limit the claim to those grounds but merely enumerated those grounds for the purpose of indicating the grounds upon which a landlord would be entitled to possession as of right, leaving it open to the Court to exercise a discretion in his favour upon any other grounds which might appear to the Court to be satisfactory.

What are the facts here? As I read the correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant English Company, it is reasonably clear that on the 7th January 1920 the defendant English Company intimated to the plaintiff, in pefectly clear and unambiguous language, that they would not remain in occupation of the premises in question after the expiration of the terms of their lease on the 31st March 1921. They, therefore, suggested to the plaintiff that he should look for a new tenant in respect of the premises in question. Within 9 days of the date of the letter of the defendant English Company, the plaintiff succeeded in securing a tenant who was agreeable to accept his terms, and who gave ample evidence of his solvency and of his bona fides by immediately depositing with him a sum of rupees one lakh. All this took place long before the Rent Act came into operation. I do not think it can be suggested on the evidence before me that there is not at the present moment a definite and binding agreement between the plaintiff and Elias. The whole evidence points to the conclusion that the plaintiff and Elias consider themselves tied to each other. It is said that Elias is a speculator. For the purposes of this case, this question is, to my mind, irrelevant. It is next argued that the lease taken by Elias from the plaintiff in respect of the premises was conditional on Elias getting vacant possession of the premises from Walter Locke & Co. Ltd., and considerable stress has been laid on the words in Exhibit H to which I have already drawn attention. It is argued that where the landlord has secured a lessee on condition that possession should be given to him on the defendant English Company vacating the premises there was no chance whatsoever of the landlord being exposed to the consequences of the breach of any agreement which he might have arrived at between himself and Elias if he failed to give possession. In support of this contention, my attention has been drawn to the case of Hunt v. Bliss (1). It has been pointed out on the other hand, on behalf of the plaintiff that Hunt v. Bliss (1) has no application whatsoever to the facts of this case and that the case to which reference may usefully be made for the purpose of deciding the matters in controversy between the parties, is of Green-Price v. Webb (2). It is perfectly true that on the expiration of a lease the lessee, if he chooses to remain in the premises becomes a statutory tenant under the provisions of the Rent Act. The Legislature presents him with a statutory tenancy at the will of the tenant for so long as he liked and no longer. Now, if no other circumstances were present in this case, I should have unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the defendant English Company were entitled to remain in the premises in question for so long as they liked and that no order for recovery of possession could be made in favour of the plaintiff; but in this case the tenant suggested to the plaintiff long before the expiration of the term of the lease of the 25th July 1901, that the plaintiff was free to negotiate with other people for letting out the premises in question On the faith of that representation the plaintiff has entered into a binding agreement with Elias. And is there any reason why that agreement should not be carried out? I do not think the arrangement between the plaintiff and Elias is conditional. The landlord, in my opinion, has undertaken to give possession of the premises to Elias on the expiration of the term of the lease of the 25th July 1901, or at any rate within a reasonable time thereafter. Mr. Elias considers six months to be a reasonable time. I do not think the words in Exhibit H referred to above can possibly mean that Elias would have to wait for an indefinite period to obtain possession of the premises. That being so, I think if possession is not given by the plaintiff to Elias, the plaintiff will be exposed to the consequences of a breach of his agreement with Elias and that it is just and proper that protection should be afforded to the plaintiff. It is said that the tenant has certain definite rights under the Rent Act: so indeed he has; but the rights of the landlord have not yet been wholly taken away by the Legislature. It is further said that the view I am taking would render the whole Act nugatory; I do not agree that I am doing anything of the kind. Each case must depend upon its own facts; and to my mind the facts disclosed in the present case are more near the facts in Green-Price v. Webb (2) than to the facts in the case of Hunt v. Bliss (1), I am, therefore, inclined to think that the plaintiff landlord has shown cause, which ought to be deemed satisfactory by the Court for the purpose of coming to the conclusion, that he is entitled to the order he seeks (vide proviso to sub-clause], section 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act).

While, however, I have been constrained to come to the conclusion which I have just mentioned. I think, having regard to the peculiar facts of this case, I ought at the same time to mitigate the stringency of any order as far as possible. So far as the defendant H. Hobbs & Co., are concerned I find that they had a sub-lease of the first floor in these premises expiring on 31st March 1921. Therefore, so far as they are concerned, they stand or fall with the defendant English Company. The defendants Nos. 4 and 6 have not shown any cause whatsoever why I should not decree the suit against them. The order, therefore, which I propose to make is that the plaintiff will be entitled to recover possession of the premises in question, but he will not be entitled to execute the decree for ejectment for a period of six months from date against the 1st, 3rd, 4th and 6th defendants. I have already stated that the suit has been withdrawn as against the defendant No. 5. The plaintiff will get the costs of the suit on Scale No. 2 against the 1st and 3rd defendants and on Scale No. 1 against the 4th and 6th defendants.

There is no evidence before me that the Indian Company was at the date of the suit in possession of any portion of the premises. I think, therefore, the suit, so far as the Indian Company is concerned, should stand dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, I do not, however, propose to allow any costs to the Indian Company.

As regards the question of mesne profits, it is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that I ought to allow to him at least Rs. 3,500 per month on Mr. Bradshaw's evidence. What Mr. Bradshaw did really say in his evidence is this: that he thought that if the plaintiff was minded to give a fresh lease of the premises after the premises had been thoroughly repaired, and after modern conveniences had been put in including the installation of an electric lift and so on, he would be willing to pay a rent of Rs. 3,500 per month. It is in evidence that the permises in question have not been repaired for a period of 6 years; taking all circumstances into consideration, I allow mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 3,000 per month from the 1st April 1921 till the date when possession of the premises is given to the plaintiff. The defendant English Company has deposited certain rents in the office of the Rent Controller. There is no difficulty as regards the rents up to 31st March 1921; the plaintiff will be entitled to take them out.

As regards the monies deposited in respect of the months subsequent to March 1921 the plaintiff will also be entitled to take out the same from the office of Rent Controller; he will give credit for the same in taking the account of the mesne profits from the 1st April 1921 up to the date when possession is recovered by him. Inasmuch as I have held that the defendant English Company were not entitled to remain in possession of the premises after the 31st March 1921, I think the mesne profits ought to run from the 1st April 1921. Interest on mesne profits at 6 per cent.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No 173-B OF 1921.

December 3, 1921.

Present :—Mr. Dhobley, A. J. C.

SHRIRAM SHANKERLAL THROUGH OWNER INDERSINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

MADHO PATIL—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Suit in name of shop by one partner only, whether maintainable.

One of the partners in a shop is competent to sue in the name of the shop, and, in such a case, it is not necessary that all the partners should be named in the plaint as plaintiffs or that the plaint should be signed by all of them.

Application for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Causes Court, Malkapur, dated the 27th July 1921 in Civil Suit No. 374 of 1921.

Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The suit giving rise to this revision was brought in the Small Cause Court, Malkapur, by one Indersingh, who described himself as the owner of the shop known as Shriram Shankerlal. The promissory-note for the enforcement of which the suit was brought was executed by the defendant in the name of the shop. The suit was heard ex parte and during the course of the evidence it transpired that there were two partners in the shop, Indersingh and one Haridas. Taking this circumstance into consideration, the Court awarded a decree only to the extent of one-half of the amount claimed apparently on the ground that Indersingh had not power to realise the debt on behalf of the other partner. The decree cannot be upheld, as there was no plea that Indersingh had no power to bring a suit in the name of the shop or that either the defendant or the other partner had questioned his right to bring a suit for the whole amount. The suit was brought in the name of the shop and one of the partners could bring it on behalf of all the partners. It was not necessary that all the partners should have been named in the plaint as plaintiffs or should have signed the plaint. The decree must, therefore, be modified and a decree for the full amount claimed passed. The plaintiff is given a decree for the full amount claimed together with his costs in this and in the lower Court.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Midnapore, dated the 29th of July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Fourth Court at Tamluk, dated the 26th of March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jyotish Chandra Hazra (with him Babus Mohesh Chandra Banerjee and Santosh Kumar Paul), for the Appellants.—The defendants Nos. 1 and 6 are appellants. The appeal is against a decree awarding possession on payment of Rs. 45 in satisfaction of rent decree. Defendant No. 6 is the landlord and defendant No. 7 is the original tenant against whom the landlord defendant No. 6 obtained rent decree. Plaintiff is the usufructuary mortgagee of the holding from defendant No. 7. In execution of his rent decree the landlord purchased the holding. Hence the present suit. The question is whether I have any right to maintain this suit and whether there has been abandonment. The finding is that it is an incumbrance being non transferable occupancy holding which not having been annulled the landlord is not entitled to possession. Two of the plots which were mortgaged to me have been found to be not within the holding. I submit it is not an incumbrance. The case in Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (1), is distinguishable. Refers to Meherun-nesa v. Sham Sundar Bhuiya (2). This case lends support to the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. Refers to Rasik Lal Dutt v Bidhu Mukhi Dosi (3), Krishna Chandra Dutta v Khiran Barania (4). The case in Rajendra Kishore Adhikari v. Chandra Nath Dutt (5), is distinguishable. Refers to Kali Nath v. Kumar Upendra Chandra (6). If it is not an incumbrance it need not be annulled. The case in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (7), is rather in my favour than against me.

Babu Hiralal Sanyal (with him Babu Charu Chandra Biswas), for the Respondents—They now set up a totally new case. My client lentRs 400 on an usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagor wilfully defaulted and allowed the properties to be sold and purchased it himself. When I came to know of this I instituted the suit impugning the above proceeding as collusive. The defence was that there was no mortgage. These questions were never raised in the Courts below. They said that the plaintiff is a trespasser and that the mortgagor's tenant had either abandoned or that I could eject the trespasser. That is their argument. I submit that argument has now no force in face of the Full Bench decision in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (7), or the Special Bench decision in Chandra Benode Kundu v. Ala Bux (8). An occupancy holding is now saleable and transferable with this exception that the landlord may not recognise the transferee. The transfer to me is not by way of sale but as a mortgage. Abandonment implies cessation of interest. Rent suit was instituted with the idea that the tenant had subsisting interest. The mortgage was in 1909. The suit for rent was in 1913. It has been found that there was no abandonment. I submit under these circumstances the landlord is not entitled to re-enter. Refers to Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (7).

[GHOSE, J.—Look at Ajodhya Prasad Singh v. Jagdeo Singh (9). But see Explanation to section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.] That was a Patna case. There has got to be abandonment in law and fact.

Mr. Jyotish Chandra Hazra in reply.—Section 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, is not exhaustive. Refers to Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (1).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 1 and 6 against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapore modifying a decision of the 4th Munsif at Tamluk. The plaintiff in the suit was a usufructuary mortgagee. The mortgage was executed in his favour by defendant No. 7. The appellant, defendant No. 6, is the landlord and the first defendant is a new tenant with whom defendant No 6 purports to have settled the lands. The holding, which is a non-transferable occupancy holding, was sold for non payment of rent and was purchased by defendant No. 6, the landlord. The lower Appellate Court has passed a decree for possession of the land in suit in favour of the mortgagee, the plaintiff, on condition of his paying to the landlord, the appellant, defendant No. 6, a sum of Rs 45, the amount of the arrears of rent for which the holding was brought to sale.

Two points have been urged before us in this appeal. First, it is said, that the plaintiff cannot maintain the suit inasmuch as the execution of the usufructuary mortgage by defendant No 7 gave the landlord a right to obtain possession of the holding, and it is said that, by virtue of the mortgage, the plaintiff acquired no rights in the land. Secondly, it is said that there was no prayer for redemption in the original plaint. So far as the first point is concerned, what has been argued before us is that the mere execution of the usufructuary mortgage by the tenant followed by possession of the mortgagee, even without any definite evidence that the tenant has abandoned the holding, is sufficient of itself to entitle the landlord to possession, and in support of this contention we were referred to several cases, the one which bears the most upon the point being the case of Krishna Chandra Dutta v. Khiran Bajania (4) where it is held that by creating a usufructuary mortgage an occupancy raiyat not authorised to transfer his holding makes himself liable to ejectment by the landlord.

As against this on behalf of the respondents it is stated that that decision must be taken to have been impliedly overruled by the decision in the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (7), for it is said that where a transfer is not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding unless there has been an abandonment. So far as the abandonment is concerned, there is an express finding in the judgment of the lower Court that there was no abandonment of the holding by defendant No. 7; consequently, it seems to us that the argument advanced before us on behalf of the respondent is well-founded and that the mere execution of a usufructuary mortgage followed by possession does not entitle the landlord to re-enter on the holding or recover possession. Reference may be made in support of the conclusion at which we have arrived to the case of Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (1) which is a decision that a transfer by way of usufructuary mortgage stands on the same footing as other partial transfers; and in the case of Monohar Pal v. Ananta Moyee (10) it is said (at page 800*) that the mere execution of a usufructuary mortgage might not of itself be sufficient to establish abandonment. So far as the second question is concerned it seems to us that the suit was adequately framed for the purposes of the decree which was obtained.

In the result the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The cross objections are not pressed. They are dismissed but without costs.

MAHEBULLA KHAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 920), ss. 6, 110—Retrospective effect of s. 6—C. P Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 41—Absolute occupancy holding—Transfer without consent—Landlord's right to sue for possession—Section, whether one of procedure.

In case of a transfer of an absolute occupancy holding section 41 of the C. P. Tenancy Act XI of 1898) not only gave the landlord a right of pre-emption, but it also gave him the right to sue the transferee for ejectment.

Lahanu Bai v. Satischander, 1 C. P L. R. 148, Ramji Patel v Syed Nur, 4 N. L. R. 4', Beni Prasad v. Mul Chand, 6 Ind Cas 817: 6 N. L. R. 65, referred to.

The section did not relate to procedure merely but created rights.

Therefore in view of the express provisions of section 110 of the C. P Tenancy Act (I of 920) section 6 of that Act cannot have retrospective effect so as to deprive the landlord of his rights under section 41 of Act XI of 1898 in respect of transfers made while that Act was in force.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Chanda, dated the 27th April 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 3 of 1921,

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V Deosher, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants-appellants bought by a deed of sale, dated 20th July 1919, three absolute occupancy fields situated in Mouza Kokdi, Tahsil Garchiroli, from one Paiku. The plaintiff is the malguzar lambardar of that village. He sues stating that the sale took place without his consent, that it should be declared invalid against him and asks for possession. The claim is decreed in the First Court and the decree of that Court has been confirmed in appeal.

The arguments advanced here are threefold. First, that under section 41 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, 1898, the only remedy of the landlord was to exercise his right of pre-emption; (2) that, that section lays down merely a rule of procedure; it creates no vested rights; and (3) as the present Act, section 6, does not give the landlord any right to sue for possession on the ground that the tenant was not entitled without sanction to transfer, as the suit was brought when the Act of 1920 was in force, the landlord has not the remedy he claims in this suit. It is contended that the intention of section 6 of the present Act is to take away from the landlord any right that he may have had of bringing a suit of this nature. Now, it is clear that section 41 of the Act of 1898, Act XI, gave the landlord more than a mere right of pre-emption. Sub-section 7 states:—

"Any transfer made in contravention of this section shall be voidable at the instance of the landlord."

And the following sub-section allows the tenant when the transferee has been ejected by the landlord to apply to a Revenue Officer within one year of such ejectment to be re instated in possession of the holding on his depositing for payment to the landlord the costs incurred by the landlord in procuring the ejectment. There is a string of cases of this Court showing that the landlord's right to sue the transferee in a case where the sale has been made without his consent has been allowed. I need only mention Lahanu Bai v. Satischander (1), Ramji Patel v. Syed Nur (2), Beni Prasad v. Mul Chand (3) and Nakulsao v. Ramadhinsao (4).

It is clear that section 41 of the Act of 1898 refers to more than procedure: it gives two rights to two persons. It gives the malguzar the right of pre-emption and ejectment and the tenant the right of re-entry. It cannot, therefore, well be argued that section 6 of the Act of 1920 which came into force on the 1st of July 1920 has retrospective effect as regards the present transfer. Section 110 of the present Act distinctly states that rights acquired under the former Act shall, so far as may be, be deemed to have been acquired under the present Act and it seems to me that the lower Appellate Court's argument on this question is correct. The provisions of section 6 do not give the landlord the power to bring the present suit; but his right to do so had already arisen under the former Act and he could sue to enforce that right; and the right being exercised under the former Act, it seems to me that the tenant can under sub-section 8 of section 41 of the Act of 1898 apply to be re instated within one year of his ejectment under the present decree. The case has, in my opinion, been rightly disposed of. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Co-sharer landlords—Suit for possession against trespasser—One co-sharer, whether may sue to recover entire holding.

One of several joint owners of a holding cannot bring a suit for possession of the entire holding where the person in occupation of the land is not a tenant but a mere trespasser. He can only sue for possession of his own share.

Budh Singh v. Mihan Singh, 65 P. R. 1894, distinguished.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 18th July 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Class, Hissar, dated the 10th March 1919.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Soni, for Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The plaintiff, Lal Chand, in this case is one of several landlords who were recorded as owners of the land which formed the subject of the suit. One Dani was an occupancy tenant. He died leaving a widow, Mussammat Sundar, who re married in 1903 and abandoned the land. The defendant, Dipa, came into possession of the land and he sold a portion of it to Nathu. The plaintiff sued for possession of the whole land, and has been given a decree, it having been found that Dipa had no right to succeed as an occupancy tenant and that his position was that of a trespasser. So far as the land sold to Nathu is concerned, the decree has become absolute, but Dipa has appealed without success to the District Judge, and has preferred a further appeal to this Court. The only question now raised is, whether the plaintiff can be given a decree for more than his own share in the land. For the respondent it is contended, on the authority of Buah Singh v. Mihan Singh (1) and other rulings, that each individual landlord is landlord of the whole tenancy, and that each landlord can, therefore, maintain a suit for possession of the whole land. The question here, however, is not one between landlord and tenant. It has been found that the tenancy is extinguished and that the appellant Dipa is a mere trespasser. This being so, I fail to see how the plaintiff, as one of several joint owners, can get a decree for more than his own share, and I consider that the appeal must succeed. Neither side, however, is in a position to state what share was held by the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the suit, and I accordingly remand the case to the lower Appellate Court under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, for a finding on this point. Return to be made within three months.

Appeal from an order in Execution Case No. 51 of 1921, dated the 2nd April 1921, arising out of Civil Suit No. 205 of 1919, passed by the Additional Sub Judge, Akola.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. R. Ohandurker, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—A house at Akola covered by a mortgage, the subject of Suit No. 205 of 1919, was put to auction and sold in execution of the decree on 13th November 1920. It was purchased by Balwant Ram Krishna Gadgil, the present appellant, for Rs. 4,300. He applied on 14th December 1920 saying that he learnt that the house was mortgaged for Rs. 3,000 and interest to one Rangildass Ballabhdas of Khamgaon, a fact not mentioned in the proclamation of sale or at the auction, it being then stated that the house was free from encumbrance. He asked under O. XXI, r. 90 that the sale be set aside and that the money be not paid to the judgment-creditor. The rule referred to runs:—

"Where any immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets or whose nterests are affected by the sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it :

Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applisant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud."

The application was opposed, it being contended that (a) it was time barred.

(b) That it was not tenable under O. XXI, r. 90.

(c) That with reasonable diligence the decree-holder could not assertain the incumbrance existed and hence there was no material irregularity.

The petitioner claimed his application was in time as that ran from the date of the confirmation of the sale and as knowledge of the mortgage was fraudulently kept from him. If the application did not fall within the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, still, the Court had inherent powers to correct a wrong brought about by fraud.

The contentions of the parties led to the following issues :—

(1) Whether the decree holder knew of the mortgage of Rangildas at the time of applying for sale proclamation or at any time before sale ?

(2) Did the decree-holder admit to give the said information purposely to fetch higher price ?

(3) Whether the omission to give such information and to make enquiries amount to fraud ?

(4) Whether the applicant came to know of the incumbrance two days before the application and is the application within time, even if the allegations of the applicant are proved ?

The Judge finds, dealing with the fourth issue, that a purchaser cannot apply under O. XXI, r. 90 relying on Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry (1) and quoted Sheo Gobind Singh v. Dhanukdhari Singh (2) in support of the proposition that the applicant's remedy was by way of a regular suit.

The Judge declined to deal with the application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the auction-purchaser was not a representative of the judgment debtor. He quotes Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and Narsinhbhat Chintamanbhat v. Bandu Krishna Kulkarni (4) in support of this view.

It is here contended that the above views are erroneous and that the appellant is entitled to get relief in the lower Court.

In view of the authorities quoted it seems to me that the application under O. XXI, r. 90 did not lie. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the question of limitation. The auction-purchaser is not the judgment debtor's representative and cannot move under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. He may have other remedies open to him.

Ground No. 5 of the memorandum has not been argued.

The result is, that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Appellant to pay respondents' costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 20.

Appeal against a decree of the First Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 12th May 1919 reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Dacca, dated the 26th March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sasadhar Roy (Senior), for the Respondent, took a preliminary objection that the appeal is not competent under the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Nabadwip Chandra Saha), for the Appellant.—I will not press the appeal as the other side has raised an objection, so I will argue the Rule. The execution of the kabuliyat on which I base my claim has been proved and that is the concurrent finding of both the lower Courts. It is quite surprising that the lower Appellate Court did not grant the decree in spite of his findings in my favour, and that is, I submit, a clear failure of the exercise of jurisdiction vested in the learned Judge by law. Rama Charan Chowdhury v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1) covers the whole of the present case. As to jurisdiction, even if section 115, Civil Procedure Code, does not help me, I can come under the Charter Act under which your Lordships' powers are very wide. However, the error is so apparent that under section 107 of the Government of India Act your Lordships can act. The Judge has refused to exercise jurisdiction in not giving me a decree when kabuliyat has been proved, the relationship of landlord and tenant has also been proved. The Court has refused to exercise jurisdiction which he ought to have exercised on an erroneous view of law. Facts are all found in my favour still the Judge does not give effect to the contract, it is a cardinal error of law. He must give effect to the contract.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Respondents.—The presumption raised by the Record of Rights has not been rebutted.

I submit that the Judge has a right to decide erroneously if he has jurisdiction. If a Court decided the question of res judicata wrongly, does that mean that he had no jurisdiction or failed or refused to exercise jurisdiction? Section 115, Civil Procedure Code comes in where there has been admitted failure of jurisdiction. Refers to Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (2) and Ganga Prasad v. Nandu Ram ( ). Has my friend made out that it is in interest of justice that your Lordships should interfere? To come under section 115, one must show that the decision is by a Judge who has no jurisdiction on the matter or refused to exercise jurisdiction he had in the matter.

On the merits also my friend cannot succeed There is no evidence to show that the kabuliyat has been acted upon or rent paid. Kabuliyat is nothing but a piece of admission. The conduct of the parties shows that it was not intended to be acted upon.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit for rent against the principal defendants basing his claim on a registered kabuliyat. He was given a decree by the First Court On appeal that decree was reversed. A second appeal has been preferred to this Court and also a Rule has been granted on the opposite party to show cause why the decree of the lower Appellate Court should not be set aside. On the objection taken that section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars an appeal the appeal has not been pressed and the Rule has been argued.

Both the Courts have found that the execution of the kabuliyat on which the plaintiff based his claim has been proved. In the lower Appellate Court the defendant-appellant's Pleader was not allowed to argue undue influence or coercion as no such plea had been taken in the written statement. The First Court found that there had been payment of rent in accordance with the terms of the kabuliyat. The lower Appellate Court came to the opposite conclusion on this question of fact. Nevertheless, the lower Appellate Court held that the relationship of landlord and tenant had been proved, but he refused the plaintiff a decree on the finding that the kabuliyat alone was insuffisient to prove the amount of yearly rent payable by the defendants to the landlord in view of the entry in the Record of Rights showing that no rent had been paid. The reasons given by the learned Additional District Judge for holding that the kabuliyat was insufficient to prove the yearly rent payable do not appear to us convincing. But we are unable to hold that, in coming to this erroneous finding the learned Judge exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or failed to exercise a jurisdiction which is vested in him by law, or acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity so as to make section 115, Civil Procedure Code, applicable to this case.

On behalf of the appellant before us it is contended that on the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court he was bound to grant him a decree, and not having done so he failed to exercise his jurisdiction. We are unable to accept this contention. On the finding that the annual rental had not been proved the suit was bound to fail and though we may think it was a wrong finding, it was not such an error in the exercise of jurisdiction as to justify our interference. Several cases as to the powers of this Court when sitting in revision have been cited before us, but we think it sufficient to refer to the case of Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (4), where the point has been discussed at some length. That decision supports our view that we should not interfere in revision on the ground that there has been a serious error in law in coming to a finding in a matter in which the Court had jurisdiction.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed as being incompetent and the Rule is discharged. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs in the appeal. We make no order as to costs in the Rule.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1 —Receiver, appointment of—Vesting of property, when takes place.

The mere appointment of a Receiver under O. XL, r. 1 a of the Civil Procedure Code, does not immediately vest the property in him. It is only when the provisions of clauses b, c and (d) of the rule have been complied with, that the property vests him. [p. 433, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 22nd July 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 5 of 1921.

Mr. M. B. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr A. V. Zinjarde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In 1916 the plaintiff respondent obtained a decree for arrears of rent of the ordinary holding with which we are concerned. He eventually applied for ejectment of the tenant, and a warrant was issued on 16th August 1918 and executed on 30th August 1918. The appellant, Ramkrishna, who was the fourth defendant in the present suit, held a decree for money against the tenant, in execution of which he applied for the appointment of a Receiver for the holding and an order was passed on 30th April 1918 of which Exhibit D-1 is a copy. It is in the following terms:—

"30th April 1918. Decree-holder by agent Daulat. Judgment-debtor absent. He appears now. Dhada, son of Kawdu, Receiver, present. He undertakes to lease out the field on thekz and deposits the lease money in Court on 15th of April in each year after deducting rent and cesses of the field which will be paid to the malguzar concerned. Receipts will be filed. He will get Rs. 5 per cent. as his commission. He to produce security of Rs. 200. For 14th May 1918."

(2) It is difficult to construe this as an appointment of a Receiver. It is an adjournment of the making of the appointment till the person designated for it had furnished security. But it may be taken for the purposes of this case that Dhadu was appointed on 30th April 1918 under clause (a) of r. 1 (1) of O. XL, to be the Receiver of the property. It is, however, very clear from the terms of that rule that mere appointment does not immediately vest the property in the Receiver. The transfer of the property to his possession, actual or constructive, and the conferral of special powers on him require specific orders under clauses (b), (c) and (d) of the same rule, and no such order was passed at that time. What orders were passed on 14th May 1918 we do not know, as the order quoted above is the only one of which a copy has been filed.

(3) The next event of which we are informed is the issue of a warrant on 13th December 1918 for the transfer of possession by the tenant to the Receiver. The Receiver took possession under this warrant on 22nd December 1918 and put in three persons to whom he had given a lease. These three persons figured as defendants in the case. As has been said, even if the order of 30th April 1918 was an appointment, it is impossible to hold that of itself it vested the property in the Receiver, that is to say, in the Court; much remained to be done before that could happen, and it was not done till 22nd December 1918, nearly four months after the tenant against whom the decree was being executed had been ejected and the land had passed to the malguzar.

(4) The entry of the lessees of the Receiver on the plaintiff's land was undoubtedly a trespass, and the decree-holder who procured that trespass and benefited by it is undoubtedly bound to make good to the plaintiff any loss he suffered by it. The only point that really arises in the case seems to have been missed entirely. The measure of damages has been assumed to be the benefit received by the decree-holder who caused the trespass, though there is a finding by the First Court that the plaintiff never suffered any damage at all. As he had leased out the village at the time and was not in actual possession, this finding is very probably correct. But the question of the amount of damages to be awarded has not been raised and cannot be discussed now. The appeal is dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—On the 11th September 1916 the appellant-landlord instituted a suit against the tenant-respondent for the following reliefs :—

(1) For a declaration that the defendant No. 1 is liable to pay fair and equitable rents for his Nakdi holding and for fixing the Nakdi rent at Rs 258-10-6 excluding cesses for his 30 bighas 14 cottahs and 14 dhurs.

(2) For a decree of the Nakdi rent at the sum determined as aforesaid for the years 1320-1323.

(3) For a decree of Rs. 3,031-3-4 on account of the Bhawli fields of defendant No. 1 from 1320-1323.

(4) For a decree for damages at the rate of 25 per cent. on the amount decreed under prayers Nos. 2 and 3.

On the 7th July 1917 the tenant respondent filed a suit against the appellant-landlord for the following reliefs :—

(1) For a declaration that the status of the plaintiffs was and is that of a raiyat holding at fixed rates and not that of a settled raiyat.

(2) For a declaration that the landlord's share in the produce of the aforesaid Bhaoli lands is 7/16ths only and not half.

(3) For a declaration that Batai and not Danabandi used to be made of the produce of the said Bhaoli land.

(4) For a declaration that the entries in the Khatian concerning the above three facts are incorrect.

First Appeal No. 73 of 1918 arises out of the first mentioned suit which was Suit No. 632 of 1916.

First Appeal No. 154 of 1918 arises out of the second mentioned suit which was Suit No. 232 of 1917. It will be convenient to dispose of these two appeals together as the issues arising in these two appeals are identical.

It will appear that these two appeals call for the determination of the following points :—

(1) Whether in respect of the Nakdi lands the landlord is entitled to the rent of Rs. 258-10-6 excluding cesses from the tenant ?

(2) If not, what is the Nakdi rent to which the landlord is entitled in respect of the years 1320-1323 ?

(3) Whether in respect of the produce rent the system of assessment is that of Danabandi or Batai ?

(4) What is the landlord's share of such rent ?

(5) Whether the landlord is entitled to recover produce rent from the tenant in respect of the years 1320-1323 ?

Now on the first question it is admitted in the evidence, though not in the plaint filed by the landlord, that the rent payable by the tenant to the landlord before the institution of the suit was Rs. 94-6-0, but the landlord maintains that he is entitled to a determination of what is fair and equitable rent that ought to be paid by the tenant to the landlord and that on such determination he would be entitled to a rent of Rs. 258 10 6 on the ground that other raiyats of the village holding lands of a similar description and with similar advantages in the village pay Nakdi rent at the rate mentioned, and also on the ground that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the last fifteen years. The tenant contests the claim of the landlord on two grounds : first, on the ground that he is a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent and that accordingly rent is not liable to be enhanced, and, secondly, on the ground that, in the circumstances of the case, there ought not to be an enhancement of rent. Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha, on behalf of the tenant, took as his first point that the landlord is not entitled to a decree for enhancement of rent in this suit, even though he establishes that the tenant-defendant is not a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent. In my opinion the contention of Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha is correct and ought to prevail. It is quite clear, reading the plaint, that this is not a suit for enhancement of rent but a suit for the determination of a fair and equitable rent payable by the tenant to the landlord. A suit for enhancement of rent proceeds on the admission that a rent is now paid by the tenant to the landlord and asks for enhancement on any of the grounds mentioned in section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A suit for the determination of a fair and equitable rent, on the other hand, proceeds on the assumption that no rent has hitherto been paid by the tenant. Now the present suit is confessedly a suit for the determination of fair and equitable rent and the landlord claims the fair and equitable rent which he puts down at Rs. 258-.0-6, not for future years but in respect of past years for which, admittedly, rent has accrued due. In my view the action, so far as it is an action for the determination of fair and equitable rent, does not lie, because he is not claiming this fair and equitable rent in respect of future years but because he is claiming it in respect of the past years for which rent has already accrued due. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is right and ought to be affirmed. Having regard to this finding it would be ordinarily unnecessary to deal with the question whether the defendant is a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent. But the question has been raised by the tenant not only in the written statement but in the suit which he instituted against the landlord and we think it expedient to deal with this point.

Now, admittedly in this case the Record of Rights has been published and the Record of Rights records the defendant as an occupancy tenant, not as a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent. Section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides as follows:—"When the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b), have been recorded under this Chapter in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy." I may mention that the learned Subordinate Judge has decided this issue in favour of the tenant defendant on the ground that he was entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that view he decided that the tenant-defendant was a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent. Now, as I have said, section 115 declares that, when the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b), have been recorded in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy. Prima facie, therefore, the tenant was not entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50. But Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha, who argued this case with very great ability and fairness on behalf of the appellant, contended that he was entitled to the benefit of this presumption exactly in the same way as he would have been entitled to the benefit of the presumption in a suit under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now his argument may be summarised as follows:—As the provision under section 115 has no application in a suit under section 106 brought by the tenant against the landlord for the purpose of contesting the correctness of the decision of the Revenue Officer in regard to an entry as to his status in the Record of Rights, so it ought not to have any application in a suit brought by the landlord before the publication of the Record of Rights when he is contesting it mainly on the ground on which he could have maintained an action under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In other words, if the tenant had instituted a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he would undoubtedly have been entitled to the presumption of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha argues that he ought not to be in a worse position, because, instead of instituting a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he has preferred to put forward his plea in the landlord's suit which was instituted a few days before the final publication of the Record of Rights. This, I think, was the argument which was put forward before us by Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha.

In order to determine the validity of this argument, it will be necessary to give certain dates and to remember that the landlord in this suit asked for no declaration, whatever as to the status of the defendant. The following dates will be important. The landlord's suit, that is to say, Suit No. 632 of 1916, was instituted on the 11th September 1916. The Record of Rights was published on the 16th September 1916. The written statement was filed in the landlord's suit by the tenant on the 18th December 1916 and the tenant instituted his own suit, that is to say, Suit No. 232 of 1917 on the 7th July 1917. It will appear, therefore, that the tenant put forward his plea that he was a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent more than three months after the publication of the Record of Rights. Under section 106 he had altogether three months from the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights to bring his suit for correcting an entry as to his status in the Record of Rights. On a narrow view of the case one would be entitled to say that, having put forward his defence more than three months after the publication of the Record of Rights, he is not entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But I do not intend to decide this case on a narrow view of the case. In my opinion, the Legislature has said as plainly as it knows how to say that when there has been a final publication of the Record of Rights the tenant is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only in a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now the policy of the Legislature is perfectly clear that no one is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 after the final publication of the Record of Rights. That policy emerges clearly and free from all complications in section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But in laying down this policy the Legislature has safeguarded the interests of the tenants in various ways. First of all, after the draft publication of the Record of Rights the tenant may contest the proposed entry before the Settlement Officer in a proceeding under section 103A. Next, he may proceed by way of appeal or revision under section 104 G against every order prior to the Record of Rights before the Revenue Authorities. Then, after the final publication of the Record of Rights the Legislature reserves to him the liberty to institute a suit before the Revenue Officer at any time within three months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the Record of Rights by presenting a plaint on stamped paper for the decision of any dispute regarding an entry which a Revenue Officer has made in, or any omission which the said officer has made from, the record. It is quite clear, therefore, that the interests of the tenant have been safeguarded in various ways. Having done that, the Legislature had to consider which presumption was to prevail in a competition between section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 103B, sub-section (3), of the Bengal Tenancy Act? There is a presumption under section 103 B that every entry in a Record of Rights is correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. There is a presumption under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that, if a tenant has held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding he has held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. The question which the Legislature had to determine was this: In a competition between the two presumptions, which was to prevail? The Legislature has said, that the presumption under section 103B is to prevail. In my opinion, therefore, it is not open to the tenant to argue in this appeal that, notwithstanding the entry in the Record of Rights he is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain Sinha then argued that he was entitled to prove by evidence that he was a tenant at a fixed rate of rent. In the first place, he argues on the authority of certain cases, to which it is quite unnecessary to refer, that although it may be that he is not entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50, still if he shows that his rent has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, he would be entitled to ask the Court to presume that he has held at that rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. To accede to this argument, in my opinion, would be to fritter away the provision of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and I decline to accede to this argument. There are cases on both sides and I prefer to follow those which have held that a tenant is not entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 when once the Record of Rights has declared that he is not a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent but that he is an occupancy tenant. Next, he argues that there is evidence in this case which establishes that he has held at the same rent ever since the Permanent Settlement. All that I can say is that the evidence is unconvincing and I cannot rely upon it. I hold that the tenant has failed to establish that he is a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent. It follows, therefore, that the defendant is an occupancy tenant and that the tenant is not entitled to the first declaration sought by him in the suit instituted by him, i. e., Suit No. 232 of 1917.

The next point is—What is the Nakdi rent to which the landlord is entitled for the years 1320 1323? The learned Subordinate Judge has given the landlord a decree for Rs. 94 6 0 in respect of 1320 but has refused to grant the landlord any relief in respect of the years 1320 1323 on the ground that the landlord by his oppression made it impossible for the tenant to cultivate any portion of the land in the possession of the tenant. Now, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is not quite consistent. On his own findings his decision is far too unfavourable to the tenant. If indeed there was oppression by the landlord which prevented the tenant from cultivating the land, then not only would there be a suspension of rent during those years but the tenant would clearly be entitled to damages from the landlord. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the landlord is not entitled to the rent for those years and yet he has refused to give the tenant damages in respect of the acts of oppression exercised by the landlord over the tenant. In my view, the evidence in this case, on which the learned Subordinate Judge has relied for coming to the conclusion that there was oppression by the landlord, is wholly unconvincing. In the first place it is noticeable that the tenant has declined to give evidence in the case. This is a material circumstance which should have been taken into consideration by the learned Subordinate Judge. He has, on the other hand, relied upon the evidence of the following witnesses: Witnesses Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 examined on behalf of the defendant. Now, so far as witnesses Nos. 4 and 9 are concerned, they say nothing at all on this point. Witness No. 2's evidence is inadmissible because it is hearsay. The other witnesses do say something as to the alleged oppression, but when that evidence is analysed it is impossible to accept it or to rely upon it. The most important witness is, of course No. 13 on whose evidence the learned Subordinate Judge has strongly relied. He is a Zamindar witness, and if his evidence established a case against the landlord it would undoubtedly be entitled to great weight. But when that evidence is read and analysed it comes to this that he heard about these acts from other persons. In other words, his evidence is purely hearsay and, therefore, is inadmissible. I have gone through the evidence very carefully and I find it quite impossible to rely on this class of evidence. It is noticeable that there have been three criminal proceedings between the parties in earlier years. The judgments of the Criminal Courts are to be found in Exhibits 17, 18 and 19. Now in all these cases the landlord's men were acquitted and it is remarkable that there has never been a complaint in the Criminal Court in respect of the oppression of the Zamindar during the years 1321, 1322, and 1323. We have nothing but the evidence of a most flimsy character of certain raiyats to go upon and we find it impossible to hold on this kind of evidence that there was oppression on the part of the landlord. I hold that the landlord is entitled to Nakdi rent for the years 1321 1323 at Rs. 94 6-0 per year with cesses at 6 pies per rupee with damages at 25 per cent.

The next question between the parties is,—what is the system of assessment in respect of the Baoli lands? The landlord contends that it is Danabandi and the tenant says that it is Batai. The Record of Rights is in favour of the landlord. There was a previous suit between the parties, Suit No. 490 of 1922. In that suit the learned Subordinate Judge dealt very elaborately with the point and came to the conclusion that the Danabandi system prevailed. That case went up on appeal to the District Judge of Gaya, but the learned District Judge did not determine this point having regard to the fact that the publication of the Record of Rights was near at hand. Therefore, we have not only the Record of Rights to go upon but a very valuable judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in a previous suit between the parties. The other point established in this case is this that it is admitted that the system of Danabandi prevails in regard to every other tenant in the village. The tenant in this case says that Batai prevails only in regard to him. A case like this is open to suspicion and has got to be investigated with very great care. The only evidence in favour of the tenant consists of certain papers signed by the Amin in certain proceedings under section 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. These relate to the years 1897, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1906 and 1912. So far as the papers of the years 1897, 1899, and 1906 are concerned, they are wholly inconclusive, because we have not got the proceedings of the Revenue Courts in respect of those years. We are, therefore, unable to say whether in respect of those proceedings the provisions of section 70 were complied with. As regards the years 1900, 1901 and 1912, undoubtedly there are order-sheets, but I cannot regard the division made during three years as rebutting the correctness of the entry in the Record of Rights. It was argued on behalf of the tenant that the Record of Rights was based upon the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the previous suit between the parties which was not upheld by the District Judge. This is quite incorrect. The certified copy of the attestation rent-note of the Settlement Officer dated the 7th March 1916 Exhibit 15, shows that he made close and careful enquiry into the whole matter and that upon such enquiry he came to the conclusion that the Danabandi system prevailed. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point cannot be upheld. I hold that the system of Danabandi prevails and that accordingly the tenant is not entitled to the third declaration sought by him in Suit No. 232 of 1917.

The next point is—What is the landlord's share? The landlord's case is that he is entitled to 9-annas. The tenant's case is that the landlord is only entitled to 7-annas. The Record of Rights shows that the landlord is entitled to 8 annas after making a deduction of 3 seers in the maund for labourers' wages. Now, the identical question was raised in a previous suit between the parties, and was decided in favour of the landlord. The decision of Mr. Foster operates as res judicata between the parties and I must accordingly hold that the landlord is entitled to 8-annas after a deduction of 3 seers in the maund for labourers' wages. It follows that the tenant is not entitled to the second declaration sought by him.

The last question so far as this appeal is concerned is—Is the landlord entitled to recover produce rent for the years 1320-1323? The learned Subordinate Judge declined to give any compensation to the landlord, because he came to the conclusion that the landlord prevented the tenant from cultivating the land. I have held that this conclusion cannot be supported. The landlord is accordingly entitled to recover compensation from the tenant for the years 1320-1323. We have no materials before us sufficient to enable us to determine the amount of compensation recoverable by the landlord from the tenant. We must accordingly remand this case to the learned Subordinate Judge for the determination of this issue.

The result is that we must allow First Appeal No. 154 of 1918 and dismiss Suit No. 232 of 1917 with costs in both the Courts. So far as First Appeal No. 73 of 1918 is concerned, we must vary the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and declare that the defendant is an occupancy tenant and not a tenant at a fixed rate of rent and that in respect of Bhaoli lands the system of assessment is that of Danabandi and not that of Batai and that the landlord's share in the produce is half after a deduction of 3 seers in the maund for labourers' wages. The plaintiff is also entitled to a decree for Nakdi rent at Rs. 94-6-0 with cesses at 6 pies per rupee and damages at 25 per cent. in respect of the years 1321-1323. We remand Suit No. 632 of 1916 to the Court of the first instance for assessing the compensation payable by the tenant-defendant to the landlord for Bhaoli rent in respect of those years. As each party has succeeded in part, we make no order as to costs.

I now come to First Appeal No. 155 of 1918 which arises out of Suit No. 25 of 1917 which was a suit instituted by the tenant for the following reliefs :—

(a) On a declaration of his title possession of plots Nos. 726, 1118, 137, 970, 973, 977, 985, and southern portion of plot No. 1045 to the extent of 2 kattas 2 dhurs may be given to the plaintiff No. 1.

(b) A decree for Rs. 2,100 on account of damages be passed in favour of the plaintiffs or any of the plaintiffs as the Court thinks proper against defendant No. 1.

(c) Costs of the suit be awarded to the plaintiffs against the defendants.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed this suit wholly disbelieving the plaintiffs' case that these plots belonged to them and that they were dispossessed of these plots.

I will first consider the question as to the plots. Now it is quite unnecessary, in my opinion, to determine the question of title because there is absolutely no evidence in the record as to dispossession. The suit was brought on the 22nd January 1917, the Record of Rights shows that the landlord is in possession of these plots. It must accordingly be presumed that the defendants are out of possession ever since the publication of the Record of Rights. It is for them, therefore, to prove that they were dispossessed by the landlord. According to their case the landlord dispossessed them sometime in March 1916. As to that there is absolutely no evidence in the record. In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is correct and ought to be affirmed.

On the question of damages, I have already dealt with this point in the other appeal. The tenants claim damages from the landlord on the ground that the landlord prevented the tenants from cultivating the lands. I have come to the conclusion that the evidence is not sufficient to enable us to hold that there was any act of oppression on the part of the landlord. In my view the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and ought to be affirmed. I must accordingly dismiss First Appeal No. 155 of 1918 with costs in both the Courts.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree. I have nothing further to add.

ABDUL LATIF MOLLA—DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 238—Principal and agent—Fraud or misappropriation by agent—Liability of principal—Fraud need not be for principal's benefit.

A principal is liable for the fraud of his agent acting within the scope of his authority, whether the fraud is committed for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent. This is in accordance with the law as enacted in section 238 of the Indian Contract Act. There is nothing in that section to show that, in order to render the principal liable, the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal. [p. 441, col. 1.]

Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 who were manjhis or boatmen, as agents of defendant No. 1, the owner of the boat, entered into a contract with the plaintiff to carry his goods from one place to another. The goods having been misappropriated on the way by defendants Nos 2 to 4 the present suit was brought for the recovery of the price thereof :

Held, that the defendant No. 1 (and not defendants Nos. 2 to 4 only) was liable for the loss occasioned to the plaintiff's goods by reason of the goods having been misappropriated by his agents, the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, as there was no question that the goods were entrusted to them and were being carried by them in the course of their business when the misappropriation took place. [p. 442, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 20th of February 1920, modifying a decree of the Munsif, First Court at Jessore, dated the 31st of January 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of compensation to the price of certain goods consigned in the boat of the defendants. The goods did not reach the place of destination. They were lost in the way. The First Court decreed the suit. On appeal it has been decreed in part. The defendants contracted to carry the plaintiffs' goods in their boat on 2nd Magh 1323. The defendant No. 1 is the owner of the boat, Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 are the boatmen of the boat. The defendants entered into the contract with the plaintiffs' agent for carrying 201 nayris of gur and 236 tins of chitta gur from Jessore District to District Barisal. The goods were loaded in the boat but were misappropriated on the way. That is my case as made in the plaint. The defence of defendant No. 1 was that he did not enter into any contract to carry my goods and that he is not, therefore, liable for the acts of the manjhis (boatmen) and, therefore, I could not recover any damages from him. The learned Judge held that the acts done by the manjhis (boatmen) were beyond the authority of the agents and that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are alone responsible for the loss of goods. I submit the learned Judge was wrong in holding so. He has misread the provisions of section 238 of the Indian Contract Act. Refers to section 238 of the Indian Contract Act; Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1) and Lloyd v. Grace Smith & Co. (2). I submit in view of these decisions and also of the clear provisions of section 238 of the Indian Contract Act. Defendant No. 1 is liable for damages for the criminal acts of his servants.

Babu Kshetra Mohan Ghose, for the Respondent.—I submit the learned Judge is right in absolving defendant No. 1 of any liability. Section 238 of the Indian Contract Act clearly states that the act of the servant complained of must be done for the benefit of the master. Such was also the view laid down in Barwick v English Joint Stock Bank (1), Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3). This case has been decided with reference to the Indian Contract Act. The act must be done for the benefit of the master in course of his employment. The fraud or misrepresentation must be done with the principal's authority.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of price of certain goods delivered to the defendants for being carried from Basundia in the District of Jessore to Jhalakati in the Barisal District and which were misappropriated on the way by defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

The defendant No. 1 is the owner of the boat and the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the boatmen or manjhis.

The suit was decreed against all the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 by the Court of first instance, but on appeal by the defendant No. 1, it was held that the defendant No. 1 was not liable for the price of the goods and only a decree for Rs. 16 being the boat hire advanced was passed against him.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and the question for consideration is whether the defendant No. 1 is liable for the loss of the goods.

The Court of Appeal below found that the defendant did not enter into any contract with the plaintiff for carrying the plaintiff's goods. What he meant, however, was that there was no contract with the defendant No. 1 personally as it would appear from the other findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge. He finds that "the defendant No. 1 admits that his boat is let out on hire, that the boatman settles the terms of hire, that the hire is paid to him and the defendant No. 1 pays the wages of the boatman from the hire. There cannot be any doubt that the defendant No. 1 derives profits by letting out his boat on heire"..... In paragraph 5 of the written statement it is alleged by the defendant that he never goes in the boat to settle hire, that the persons who remain in the boat settle hire, that when the hire, is paid to the defendant, he gives a portion to the boatmen." Then again he says:—"it is admitted that defendant No. 1 derives benefit by letting out his boat on hire. He lets out his boat through his boatmen. Defendant No. 1 is the principal and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are his agents." There is no doubt, therefore, that the Court of Appeal below found that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 as agents of defendant No. 1 entered into a contract with the plaintiff to carry his goods.

The learned Subordinate Judge says:—"In this case it may be presumed that defendant's agents are responsible for safely carrying plaintiff's goods to Jhalakati. If they are guilty of negligence or for any act within the scope of the agent's apparent authority, the principal defendant No. 1 would have been made liable "....." the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 committed a criminal offence with respect to the goods during the carrying of goods on the way. The goods must have been misappropriated on the way. Under no circumstances, it can be held that any criminal act with respect to the goods was within the scope of the authority of the agents, defendants Nos. 2 to 4." Further on he observes :—"There cannot be any doubt that the acts done by the agents in the present case are beyond the authority of the agents. There is no evidence to show that defendant No. 1 induced the plaintiff to believe that his manjhis had authority to misappropriate the goods on the way. Defendant No. 1 cannot be made liable for the loss accrued to the plaintiff for the price of goods entrusted to defendants Nos. 2 to 4."

We are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has not taken a correct view of the matter.

Section 238 of the Contract Act lays down that misappropriations made, or frauds committed, by agents acting in the course of their business for their principals, have the same effect on agreements made by such agents as if such misrepresentations or frauds had been made or committed by the principals, but misrepresentations made or fraud committed by agents, in matters which do not fall within their authority do not affect their principals.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to be of opinion that the fraud committed by the agents must be for their principal; in other words, for the benefit of their principal: and that is the argument which is advanced on behalf of the respondent before us. But in the first place, the section does not say that the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal. A distinction is drawn in the section between frauds "committed by agents acting in the course of their business for their principals" and frauds "committed by agents in matters which do not fall within their authority", the question, therefore, in each case being whether fraud was committed by the agents while acting in the course of their business for their principals.

It is also contended that the section does not apply because the loss of the goods was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

In the case of Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1) Willes, J. observed as follow:—"With respect to the question whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business, and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction can be drawn between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. The general rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved. That principal is acted upon every day.....It is true, he has not authorised the particular act but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in."

The learned Pleader for the respondent relied upon the words " and for the master's benefit " in the passage from the judgment of Willes, J., quoted above, as showing that the principal is not liable unless the fraud is committed by the agent for the master's benefit as well as in the course of business for the principal. In this contention, he is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3). In that case the learned Judges held that "the true rule of law with regard to the liability of the master for the misconduct of the servant is that the master is liable for the fraud of his servant comitted in the course of his service and for the master's benefit and that a master is not liable for the misconduct of the servant committed for the servant's own private benefit, and that it is not necessary that the benefit should accrue to the master." The learned Judges in enunciating that proposition relied upon the cases of Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1), Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (4) and certain other decisions.

Barwick's case (1), however, has been misunderstood, as pointed out by the House of Lords in Lloyd v. Grace Smith & Co. (2). In that case, a widow who owned two cottages and a sum of money secured on a mortgage, being dissatisfied with the income derived therefrom, consulted a firm of Solicitors and saw their managing clerk who conducted the conveyancing business of the firm without supervision. Acting as the representative of the firm he induced her to give him instructions to sell the cottages and to call in the mortgage money and for that purpose to give him her deeds and by means of certain documents in the course of his business defrauded the widow and dishonestly disposed of the property of the widow for his own benefit. It was held by the House of Lords that a principal is liable for the fraud of his agent acting within the scope of his authority, whether the fraud is committed for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent. Referring to Barwick's case (1) Lord Macnaghten (at page 732) observed as follows: "It was, I think, in reference to the facts of the particular case under review, where the fraud, if committed, must have been committed for the benefit of the principal, that Willes, J., expressed himself in the language which has been misunderstood. What Willes, J. said was this: 'The general rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved'. To that statement of the law, no objection of any sort can be taken. But it is a very different proposition to say that the master is not answerable for the wrong of the servant or agent, committed in the course of the service, if it be not committed for the master's benefit. Willes, J., does not, I think, say anything of the kind. In a sentence immediately preceding the sentence I have quoted, he observes that the question whether the principal is answerable for the act of an agent was settled as early as Lord Holt's time—a general observation not confined to the case where the principal is a gainer by the fraud. The question as to the meaning and effect of the ruling of Willes, J may, I think, be best ascertained by reference to a few cases in which some of the learned Judges who took part in the decision in Barwick's case (1) delivered opinion."

Lord Macnaghten then discussed the cases on the point and explained Barwick's case (1) as also the case of Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (4) in which the proposition of law enunciated by Willes, J., in Barwick's case (1) was quoted with approval. His Lordship pointed out at page 738: "It is a hardship to be liable for the fraud of your partner. But that is the law under the Partnership Act. It is less a hardship for a principal to be held liable for the fraud of his agent or confidential servant. You can hardly ask your partner for a guarantee of his honesty, but there are such things as fidelity policies. You can insure the honesty of the person you employ in a confidential situation or you can make your confidential agent obtain a fidelity policy." His Lordship further observed: "Willes, J., cannot have meant that the principal is absolved wherever his agent intended to appropriate his proceeds. Nearly every rogue intends to do that."

The case of Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3) was decided upon a principle erroneously supposed to have been laid down in Barwick's case (1). Having regard to the statement of the law by the House of Lords in the case of Lloyd v. Grace Smith & Co (2) we think that the defendant No. 1 is liable for the loss occasioned to the plaintiff's goods by reason of the goods having been misappropriated by his agents, the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, as there is no question that the goods were entrusted to them and were being carried by them in the course of their business when the misappropriation took place. The principle of law enunciated by the House of Lords in the case of Lloyd v. Grace Smith & Co. (2) is in accordance with the law as enacted in section 238 of the Indian Contract Act. As stated above there is nothing in that section to show that in order to render the principal liable the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 1, 2—Mortgage-decree—Adjustment out of Court—Adjustment notified by judgment-debtor—Court, duty of.

O. XXI, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, applies to a final decree in a mortgage suit and such a decree, like any other decree, is capable of adjustment out of Court. When, therefore, a judgment-debtor informs the Court that the decree against him has been adjusted, the Court is bound, under O. XXI, r. 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, to issue notice to the decree-holder to show cause why the adjustment should not be regarded as certified.

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, dated 8th December 1921, in connection with Civil Suit No. 44 of 1919, dated 10th December 1919.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gopilal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only reason the Additional District Judge has given for refusing to take notice on the application is that a final decree had already been made. As appears from the wording of O. XXI, r. 2 (1), the rule applies even to a final decree in a mortgage suit and such a decree, like any other, is capable of adjustment. The judgment-debtor has given information to the Court that the decree has been adjusted, and under r. 2 (2), the Court is bound to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause why the adjustment should not be regarded as certified. It is objected for the decree-holder that what the judgment-debtor alleges is not an adjustment of the decree but is merely an agreement to adjust the decree which, it is argued, is not an adjustment within the meaning of the rule. This is a mixed question of fact and law and we cannot discuss the law until we know the facts. The details given in the application are scanty and there are no further pleadings. The primary duty of the Court was to issue notice to the decree-holder, take pleadings, frame issues, decide the facts and proceed according to law. We set aside the order to file the application and direct the Additional District Judge to restore it to file and to proceed according to law. Costs in this Court, in which Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15, will follow the result.

Although under the law there is a presumption that the maker of a pro-note has received the consideration for it, yet if the statement of the plaintiff's agent as to consideration is altogether inconsistent with the plaintiff's allegation in his plaint, the onus will shift to the plaintiff, and he must prove that consideration passed.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 11th October 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th May 1920.

Lala Daulat Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sues for money due on a promissory-note for Rs. 1,200 executed by the defendant.

The latter pleaded that he had not received consideration. The plaintiff said in his plaint that he had paid the consideration for the promissory-note to the defendant in cash, but his agent, Parmeshri Das, when examined by the Court in the pleadings, said that the promissory-note had not been executed in lieu of a hundi, PORKODI ACHI, In re.

The Subordinate Judge framed an issue whether the promissory-note was with consideration, placing the onus on the plaintiff, and after taking the evidence he found that no consideration had been passed and dismissed the suit.

On appeal the District Judge has held that the onus should have been placed on the defendant to prove want of consideration, and he set aside the order of the Trial Court and remanded the case for trial of the issue. The defendant has filed a second appeal in this Court.

There is, no doubt, a presumption under the law that the maker of a promissory-note has received the consideration for it, and if the only material before the Subordinate Judge when he framed the issue had been the plaint and the defendant's pleas it would certainly have been right to place the onus on the defendant. But the Subordinate Judge had also the statement of the plaintiff's agent before him, and the fact that that statement with regard to the consideration for the promissory-note was entirely inconsistent with the plaintiff's allegation in his plaint was, I consider, sufficient to shift the onus at once to the plaintiff, and the Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in calling upon the latter to prove that consideration passed. Zohra Jan v. Rajan Bibi (1) is a case in point.

I, accordingly, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court for disposal of the appeal before it on the merits. Court fee on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Where, in a suit for possession, the Court decrees possession on condition of the plaintiff paying a specified amount to the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals, the memorandum of appeal is chargeable with Court-fees calculated ad valorem on the amount from which he seeks to escape liability. [p. 448, col 1.]

The value of an appeal is not in all cases the value of the suit as originally filed, but the value of the relief granted by the decree which a party wishes to get rid of. [p 447, col 2.]

Memorandum of objections sought to be preferred by 1st respondent in Second Appeal No. 22 of 1921 to the High Court against the decree of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Tanjore in Appeal Suit No. 13 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Venkataramana Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Where the decree directs a specified amount as payable by the plaintiff to defendant before the former could recover possession, the decree is not executable by the defendant for whose benefit the payment is ordered. It is a declaratory decree as it declares the plaintiff's liability to pay.

The condition imposed does not change the character of a suit for possession and for mesne profits into one for redemption. The suit remains a suit for possession notwithstanding the condition in the decree. The value of the appeal cannot be higher than that of the suit.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, Government Pleader, for Taxing Officer,

Mr. K. S. Venataramani Ayyar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The first respondent as daughter and reversioner filed a suit for a declaration that the sale-deed executed by the widow of the last male holder alienating the lands specified in the plaint was not binding on her, for delivery of possession by the defendants who claim under the vendee, for mesne profits and for costs. The plaint contained an alternative prayer that should the Court find any amount payable to the defendants, then possession be decreed with mesne profits on payment of the sum so found due by the plaintiff to the defendants. Various pleas were raised by the defendants who contended that the alienation by the widow was binding on the plaintiff. The District Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit as he was of opinion that the sale was binding on her. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that there was necessity only for a sum of Rs. 3,831-4-0 out of the consideration of Rs. 8,000, set out in the sale deed and decreed possession on payment of the sum of Rs. 3,881-4-0. Against this decree the defendants filed a second appeal and the plaintiff filed a memorandum of objections objecting to the decree of the Subordinate Judge so far as it directs her to pay Rs. 3,881-4-0 as a condition precedent to the recovery of possession. A stamp duty of Rs. 10 was paid on the memorandum of objections and the Registrar claims an ad valorem duty on the sum of Rs. 3,881-4-0, the liability to pay which is questioned in the memorandum of objections.

The suit as filed being one for possession and mesne profits fell within clause (v) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act which relates to suits for possession of immoveable property and clause (1) which relates to suits for money and the plaintiff paid a stamp duty of five times the kist payable on the lands and also on the amount claimed for mesne profits. The suit was valued at Rs. 2,300 and the second appeal is also valued at that figure.

There is no express provision in the Court Fees Act which covers a case like the present. The contentions of the respondent are, (1) that the decree of the lower Appellate Court merely declares plaintiff's liability to pay a certain sum of money as a condition precedent to recovery of possession and that such decree is not executable by the defendants for whose benefit the payment is to be made; (2) that the suit being one for possession of immoveable property and mesne profits, its nature is not changed into one for redemption merely by the fact that an unsustainable condition as to payment has been imposed by the Court; (3) that the alternative prayer in the plaint as to payment of such sums as the Court may find to be due is not estimable in money and falls under Art. 17, clause (vi) of Schedule II; (4) that in any event the stamp duty payable on the memorandum of objections cannot be more than the duty payable on the plaint, as it would be an anomaly if the party who fails entirely should have to pay less than a party who succeeds in part. The contention of the Registrar is that the stamp duty payable in cases where a person is asked to pay a certain sum as a condition precedent to getting possession and disputes his liability, is on the amount which he disputes.

I do not think that the direction as to payment of a sum of money as a condition precedent to the recovery of possession makes the decree a declaratory decree simply because the defendant cannot execute the decree. The test is whether the plaintiff cannot execute it. As regards the contention that the alternative prayer is not estimable in money, all that can be said is that the plaintiff reversioner cannot say when he filed the plaint what the defendants can prove to be binding on the plaintiff. Where the Court finds the amount that has to be paid by the plaintiff the amount is ascertained, and where the plaintiff wants to appeal against the decrees the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute for the purposes of Art. 1 of Schedule I is the amount which the plaintiff calls in question in the memorandum of appeal or objections. The case is analogous to one of a suit for an account.

The objection that the suit for possession which falls under clause (v) of section 7 cannot in appeal change its nature because a condition is annexed for payment of a sum of money which is disputed by the plaintiff presents more difficulty especially as there is no provision in the Court Fees Act governing such cases and there is a conflict of authority.

In Reference Under Court Fees Act, Section 5 (1), the question was what was the duty payable in a suit for ejectment where a tenant claimed compensation for improvements which was disallowed and the tenant appealed against the decree. It was held that the tenant was bound to pay stamp-duty only on the value of the lands and not on the value of the improvements claimed and disallowed. Subramania Aiyar and Boddam, JJ., were of opinion that the claim for improvements to the lands was not the subject-matter of the suit but was merely incidental to the decree for possession. The learned Judges also refer to the difficulty and inconvenience of ascertaining the fee payable in each case if a different view were adopted. With respect, it seems to me that in cases where the law annexes the liability to pay for improvements as a condition precedent to ejectment, the claim for improvements allowed by the lower Court and disputed in appeal falls under Schedule I, Art. 1. Whatever difficulties may exist in valuing it in the plaint there is no difficulty once the Court fixes the amount, and the party appeals against the liability to pay the amount and files a memorandum of objections. So far as appeals against decrees for compensation under the Malabar Tenancy Improvements Act are concerned, though the same considerations as urged in Reference under Court Fees Act, Section 5 (1) may be urged, stamp duty is paid on the amount in dispute. This decision does not seem to have been followed. In Sekharan Nair v. Kongot Kucharan Nair (2) Munro and Abdul Rahim, JJ., were of opinion that though in a suit for redemption the stamp duty was by section 7, clause (ix) to be calculated according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage and the subject matter of the suit was the existence of the right to redeem, any question as to the amount payable as the condition of redemption being regarded merely as incidental to that right, yet where the right to the redeem is not called in question in appeal and the only question is as to the amount payable, the right to redeem cannot be said to be the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal-memorandum but a definite amount payable, and that the case fell within Art. 1, Schedule I, the Court fee being computed on the amount in dispute. In Reference under Court Fees Act, 1870 (3), it was held, following Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (4), that section 7 (e) clause (ix) of the Court Fees Act applied only to suits and not to appeals and that in the case of appeals, Art. 1, Schedule I applied, the Court fee payable being on the value of the subject-matter in dispute.

In Hafiz Ahmad v. Sobha Ram (5) it was held that in suits for pre-emption where the vendees-defendants appealed on the ground that they were entitled to receive a larger sum than that awarded by the Court and that plaintiffs had estopped themselves from asserting the right by refusing to purchase, Court-fee was payable under section 7, clause (vi) on the value of the property as computed in clause (v); but that when the question in appeal relates solely to the amount to be paid by the pre-emptor, his right to pre-empt not being challenged, the proper Court-fee was the amount calculated ad valorem on the difference between the amounts alleged as the sale price on the one side and the other.

In Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (4) it was held that when an appeal in a suit for redemption related solely to the amount payable the Court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal was to be calculated according to the sum which the appellant claimed to have deducted from the decree, and not, as in the case of a suit for redemption, according to the principal sum secured on the mortgage. Stanley, C. J., after expressing his dissent from the view taken in Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Sita Ram (6), observed: "It appears to me, upon a perusal of section 7 of the Court Fees Act and Schedule I to that Act, that in a case such as the one before me the Court fee is to be calculated on the value of the subject-matter in dispute only. Section 7 sub section (ix) provides that in suits against a mortgagee for the recovery of the mortgaged property the Court fee is to be valued according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. The section is confined to a suit apparently, and not to an appeal. In Schedule I to the Act we find that in the case of a plaint or memorandum of appeal not otherwise provided for in the Act, except those mentioned in section 3, an ad valorem fee is payable at the rate mentioned in that schedule. In this schedule a memorandum of appeal is.....not mentioned. Therefore, I take it that if in the case of an appeal the value of the subject-matter of the appeal can be determined, as it has been in this case, the appellant is only bound to pay a Court-fee on the amount ascertained to be the value of the subject matter of the appeal." With these remarks I respectfully agree. This decision was followed in Mahadeo Prasad v. Gorakh Prasad (7) and Baji Lal v. Gobardhan Singh (8).

In Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishn Gir (9), it was held that when a plaintiff prayed for an unconditional decree for possession as against a defendant who set up a mortgage executed by plaintiff's predecessor and a decree was passed for possession on payment of a certain sum and the plaintiff appeals against that portion of the decree directing payment, he must pay ad valorem stamp duty on the amount in question. The learned Judges (Chamier, J. C., and Evans, A. J. C.) dissented from the decision in Jawahir Singh v. Rajendra Bahadur Singh (10) and followed the decision in Baji Lal v. Gobardhan Singh (8). A similar view was taken in Mata Badal Singh v Jai Singh (11). Ragha Sah v. Wasid Ali (12) no doubt supports the petitioner's contention but no reference is made to any authorities. The only reason given is that if that decree dismissed the plaintiff's suit for possession the fee payable would have been only five times the land revenue and that as it was more favourable it cannot be larger. The facts of the case are also peculiar. The plaintiff prayed for possession and the Court passed a decree for possession but allowed the defendant to redeem and the decree for possession was only if the defendants failed to redeem. Rup Chand v. Fateh Chand (13) which was referred to, does not throw much light on the question. The plaintiff sued for possession as absolute owner and a decree was passed in his favour On appeal the Subordinate Judge gave a decree for possession but limited the duration to the lifetime of the plaintiff's vendor. Against this decree the plaintiff appealed It was held that as tamp duty of Rs. 10 was sufficient. Tudball, J., observed: "As matters stand now, the plaintiff-appellant seems to me to be in the position of a person in possession of property who seeks to clear his title and to obtain a declaration that he has the full right of ownership to the property." Treating the subject-matter of the appeal as one to get rid of the limitation imposed by the Subordinate Judge it is difficult to see how it can be valued.

In Lukhun Chunder Ash v. Khoda Buksh Mondal 14) where a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff but the Court directed payment in three instalments and the plaintiff appealed against that portion of the decree, it was held that he was not bound to pay Court-fees on the sum decreed but on the difference between the amount claimed in the Court below and the sum of the present values of three instalments payable on the dates mentioned in the decree. Banerjee, J., observed: "Now, having regard to the provisions of Art. 1, Schedule I, of the Court Fees Act, read with section 16 of that Act, it is clear that an appellant is bound to pay a Court-fee on a memorandum of appeal from a decree which gives him only partial relief, upon the difference between the values of the relief he claims to be entitled to and that granted by the decree appealed against."

In Kishun Dutt Misir v. Kasi Pandey (15) it was held by Coutts, J., following Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishn Gir (9), that when a decree awards possession on condition of the plaintiff paying the encumbrances on the property and the plaintiff appeals against that part of the decree, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal must be ad valorem on the value of the encumbrances.

The current of authority is clearly in favour of the view that the value of an appeal is not in all cases the value of the suit as originally filed but the value of the relief granted by the decree which a party wishes to get rid of. In some cases the stamp duty may be more than that paid on the plaint and in some cases it may be less, and in considering the effect of the provisions of section 7 of the Court Fees Act and of Schedule I, I do not think that this is a consideration which is of much weight.

I am of opinion that the memorandum of appeal should be stamped on the amount which the respondent was directed to pay, and which she seeks to escape liability from. He will have three weeks from this date to pay the deficient stamp duty.

CIVIL RULE No. 42 OF 1922.

ASWINI KUMAR DUTT AND OTHERS —PETITIONERS

versus

SUKHODA SUNDARI DEBYA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Appeal, dismissal of, in default—Compromise filed subsequently—Court, duty of.

Where after an appeal has been dismissed in default, both appellant and respondent being absent, the parties present a petition of compromise and ask that the case be decided in terms thereof, the Court is bound to give effect to the compromise.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Bakarganj.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Probodh Chandra Kar, for the Petitioners.

—The facts shortly are these. I was the appellant in the Court below. The appeal was fixed for 27th July 1921. When both parties being absent the appeal was dismissed for default, I then applied for restoration on 25th August 1921, and on 29th August 1921 both parties filed a petition of compromise in accordance with which the case was to be decided. On 24th September 1921 the Judge rejected my application for re hearing. I submit the learned Judge was absolutely wrong in rejecting my application and in not giving effect to the compromise arrived at between the parties.

No one appeared to show cause.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule must be made absolute. The petitioner was the appellant in the Court below. The appeal was taken up by the Court on the 27th July 1921 for hearing when neither the petitioner nor his Pleader was found, nor was the respondent present. The Court, therefore, dismissed the appeal for default. On the 25th August the petitioner filed a petition for re-hearing of the appeal on the ground that he was unable to be present on the 27th July as he was ill and could not come to Court to instruct his Pleader. It appears, however, from the judgment of the learned Judge that the reason for non-appearance of the petitioner was that the 27th July was observed in that locality as a hartal. That may or may not be, but on the 29th August both parties, the appellant and the respondent, filed an application before the learned Judge settling the dispute between them and asking that the case might be decided in terms of the petition of compromise filed. The petitioner's application for restoration was taken up on the 17th September when one witness was examined for the plaintiff. On the 24th September the Court passed the order complained of rejecting the plaintiff's application.

We think in the circumstances of this case that the Court was wrong in not restoring the case, giving effect to the petition of compromise filed and in dismissing the application on the simple ground that the petitioner had not sufficient reason for not appearing on the 27th July. The order of the 24th September 1921 passed by the Court below will, therefore, be set aside and the appeal restored. The learned Judge will proceed to re-hear the appeal and give effect to any compromise that may be legally entered into by the parties.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 37—Creation of patni by auction-purchaser—Annulment of under-tenures—Presumption.

The mere creation of the patni by an auction-purchaser at a revenue-sale would not, by itself, be an indication to the under-tenure-holders that the option to annul the under-tenures had in fact been exercised. [p. 450, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 18th of July 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, First Court at that place, dated the 20th of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Chandra S. Sen), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. Plaintiff took a sadar patni taluka lease of the disputed land from the purchaser of a revenue paying estate at a revenue sale held under Act XI of 1859 and instituted a suit against the defendants for recovery of possession setting aside all incumbrances under section 37 of Act XI of 1859. The defence inter alia was that as the plaintiff's lease did not cover the land of the entire under-tenure in possession of the defendants, the plaintiff was not entitled to avoid the under-tenure. The Trial Court gave a decree to the plaintiff but the suit was dismissed on appeal. My point is that Act XI of 1859 does not prescribe any particular procedure to avoid incumbrances. Hence the creation of a patni by the auction-purchaser of the entire estate, avoids the under-tenure and the patnidar may sue for the land covered by his lease inasmuch as the under-tenure was avoided by the purchaser of the entire estate.

Babu Narendra K. Das, for the Respondents.—Creation of a patni does not avoid under-tenures nor shows any intention of doing so. Patni leases are given for collection of rent. The lease is described as sadar patni lease. That assumes the existence of under-tenures from whom rent is to be collected. An under tenure cannot be avoided in part especially by a person who has got no right over the entire land covered by the under tenure. Refers to Narayan Chandra v. Kasiswar Roy (1), Sooharam Barma v. Doorga Charan Das (2). All purchasers must join to protect the under-tenure-holders from multiplicity of suits. Refers to Jatra Mohun Sen v. Aukhil Chandra (3).

Dr. Basak replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Chittagong modifying a decision of the Munsif. The plaintiff, as appears from the plaint, sued for a declaration that he had a sadar patni taluqa interest in the disputed land and he asked for khas possession of the land free from all incumbrances by virtue of the provisions of Act XI of 1859 under which the land was sold and he also asked for a declaration that the defendants had no protected interest in the disputed tauk land. Defendants Nos. 19, 23 and 24 are all taluqdars and defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 6 are raiyats under the taluqdars. We are told that the defendants Nos. 5, 12 and 22 are under-raiyats but there is no finding as to this. It is stated that these defendants Nos. 5, 12 and 22 are dead and that their heirs have not been brought on the record. Accordingly, it may be that if the plaintiff succeeds in this appeal the heirs of these persons may be entitled to remain on the land as under-raiyats if in fact they are such. A question arose as to whether defendant No. 6 had in fact been served, but it appears that a report has been made that service was effected on this defendant. The Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit but the lower Appellate Court said that, as the suit was one for a portion only of the taluq, it was not maintainable but the plaintiff's title to the land was declared. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to the suit being for a portion only of the taluq is as follows: "It appears from Exhibits B and C that this taluq does not consist of only Maghi Survey Plot No. 5342 but there are many other Maghi Survey Plots in it." Later, he says: "upon the evidence I find that, besides the disputed tank and the bank, these taluqa pottas include several other dags of the taraf. A suit for annulment of a portion of a taluq is not maintainable." It was urged before us on behalf of the appellant that the suit was maintainable, and, secondly, that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 6 had occupancy rights in the land, and lastly, it was contended that the fact that a portion of the land, that is a part of the bank of the tank, was used as a graveyard could not protect the whole of the land under the provisions contained in the Fourth Exception to section 37 of Act XI of 1859. In the view that we take of the section, all the other questions which have been argued at some length before us do not arise and it is not necessary that we should express any opinion with regard to these points. But we think that the learned Judge in the Court below was right upon the facts before him in coming to the conclusion which he did, namely, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff only held a portion of the under-tenure it was not open to him in this suit to obtain khas possession. Now, section 37 of Act XI of 1859 provides that the purchaser of an entire estate sold under the Act for recovery of arrears due on account of the same shall acquire the estate free from all encumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the time of Settlement, and that he shall be entitled to avoid and annul all under-tenures and forthwith to eject all under-tenants with certain exceptions which are named. It is stated that what defendant (sic) No. 3 purchased at the auction sale was an entire estate and that he must be taken to have avoided the under-tenures when he created the patni in favour of the plaintiff and also patnis in respect of the other portions of the under tenure in favour of other persons, and this being so, it is said that as no suit is required under section 37 for the purpose of annulling an under-tenure, this suit is maintainable because it is merely a suit by a patnidar for khas possession of that portion of the under-tenure which has been leased to him under the patni, and it is accordingly stated that the decision in Jatra Mohun Sen v. Aukhil Chandra (3) has no application, for it is suggested that that was a suit to avoid and annul a tenure and that it was rightly held that in a suit of that nature all the purchasers must join to protect the under-tenure holders from multiplicity of suits. Now there is no doubt that there is considerable force in the argument addressed to us but, unfortunately, neither the plaintiff himself in the plaint nor either of the Courts below, have approached the case from this point of view with the result that there is no evidence that defendant No. 3, the auction-purchaser, had in fact annulled all encumbrances of the under tenure. If there had been evidence before us that this had been done, we think the case in 24 Calcutta [Jatra Mohun Sen v. Aukhil Chandra (3)] would very likely have been distinguishable and the plaintiff's contention might have prevailed. In the absence, however, of evidence that the auction purchaser had annulled all incumbrances on the under-tenure it is not possible for us to say that this is anything but a suit in similar form to that in 24 Calcutta [Jatra Mohun Sen v. Aukhil Chandra (3)], that is, a suit to annul encumbrances.

(1) 1 C. L. J. 579.
(2) 5 C. L. J. 264.

So far as it is urged that the creation of the patni was an overt act which would amount to an avoidance by the auction-purchaser of an under-tenure, we think that this by itself would not be sufficient, for the mere creation of the patni, would not by itself be an indication to the under-tenure holders that the option to annul the under-tenure had in fact been exercised.

For these reasons, we think that the appeal must fail, and it is not possible for us, in the mode in which the case came before us, to remand the case for a finding as to whether the auction-purchaser had in fact annulled the under-tenure prior to the creation of the patni.

The appeal, accordingly, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

B. N. Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Costs—Taxation—Appeal preferred in case where none allowed—Appeal, dismissal of—Counsel's fees, taxation of—Refresher, if allowable—Rules and Orders of the Original Side, Calcutta High Court, Chap. XXXVI, r. 57.

When an appeal is preferred in a case where no appeal lies, the fees of only one Counsel should, having regard to the provisions of Chapter XXVI, r. 57, be allowed on taxation on the dismissal of the appeal. No refreshers, too, are allowable in such a case.

Appeal from the decision of the Taxing Officer.

Mr. P. N. Chatterjee, for the Appellant.
Mr. P. Roy Chaudhuri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to review a taxation by the Registrar. The facts are as follows:—A Rule was obtained under the Revisional Jurisdiction of this Court, viz., under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. That Rule was discharged and it appears to me having regard to the provisions of Chapter XXXIV of the Rules and Orders of this Court that, under the provision of rule 7, only the fee to one Counsel should have been allowed on taxation. Against the discharge of the rule, an appeal was preferred. No appeal in fact lay and the appeal was ultimately dismissed, but, having regard to the provisions of Chapter XXXV, rule 57 (a), it seems to me that if an appeal had lain only the fees of one Counsel would have been allowable on taxation unless the Court otherwise ordered and it seems to me to follow, under the circumstances, viz, of no appeal lying, that similarly the fees of only one Counsel should be allowed.

Consequently, I think that fees of two Counsel in the Appeal Court have been wrongly allowed. Similarly, I think, that no refresher should have been allowed. From the table which appears at page 430 of the Rules and Orders no refreshers are apparently allowed under appeals to which rule 57 applies and for reasons, accordingly, already stated it seems to me that I must apply the provisions of rule 57 and, this being so, no refreshers are allowable in taxation in respect of costs of appeal.

This application, for reasons already stated, succeeds. The applicant is entitled to his costs. Certified for Counsel.

Mr. Roy Choud uri.—Costs awarded to-day to be set off against the costs that I am entitled to obtain from them.

THE COURT.—Yes.

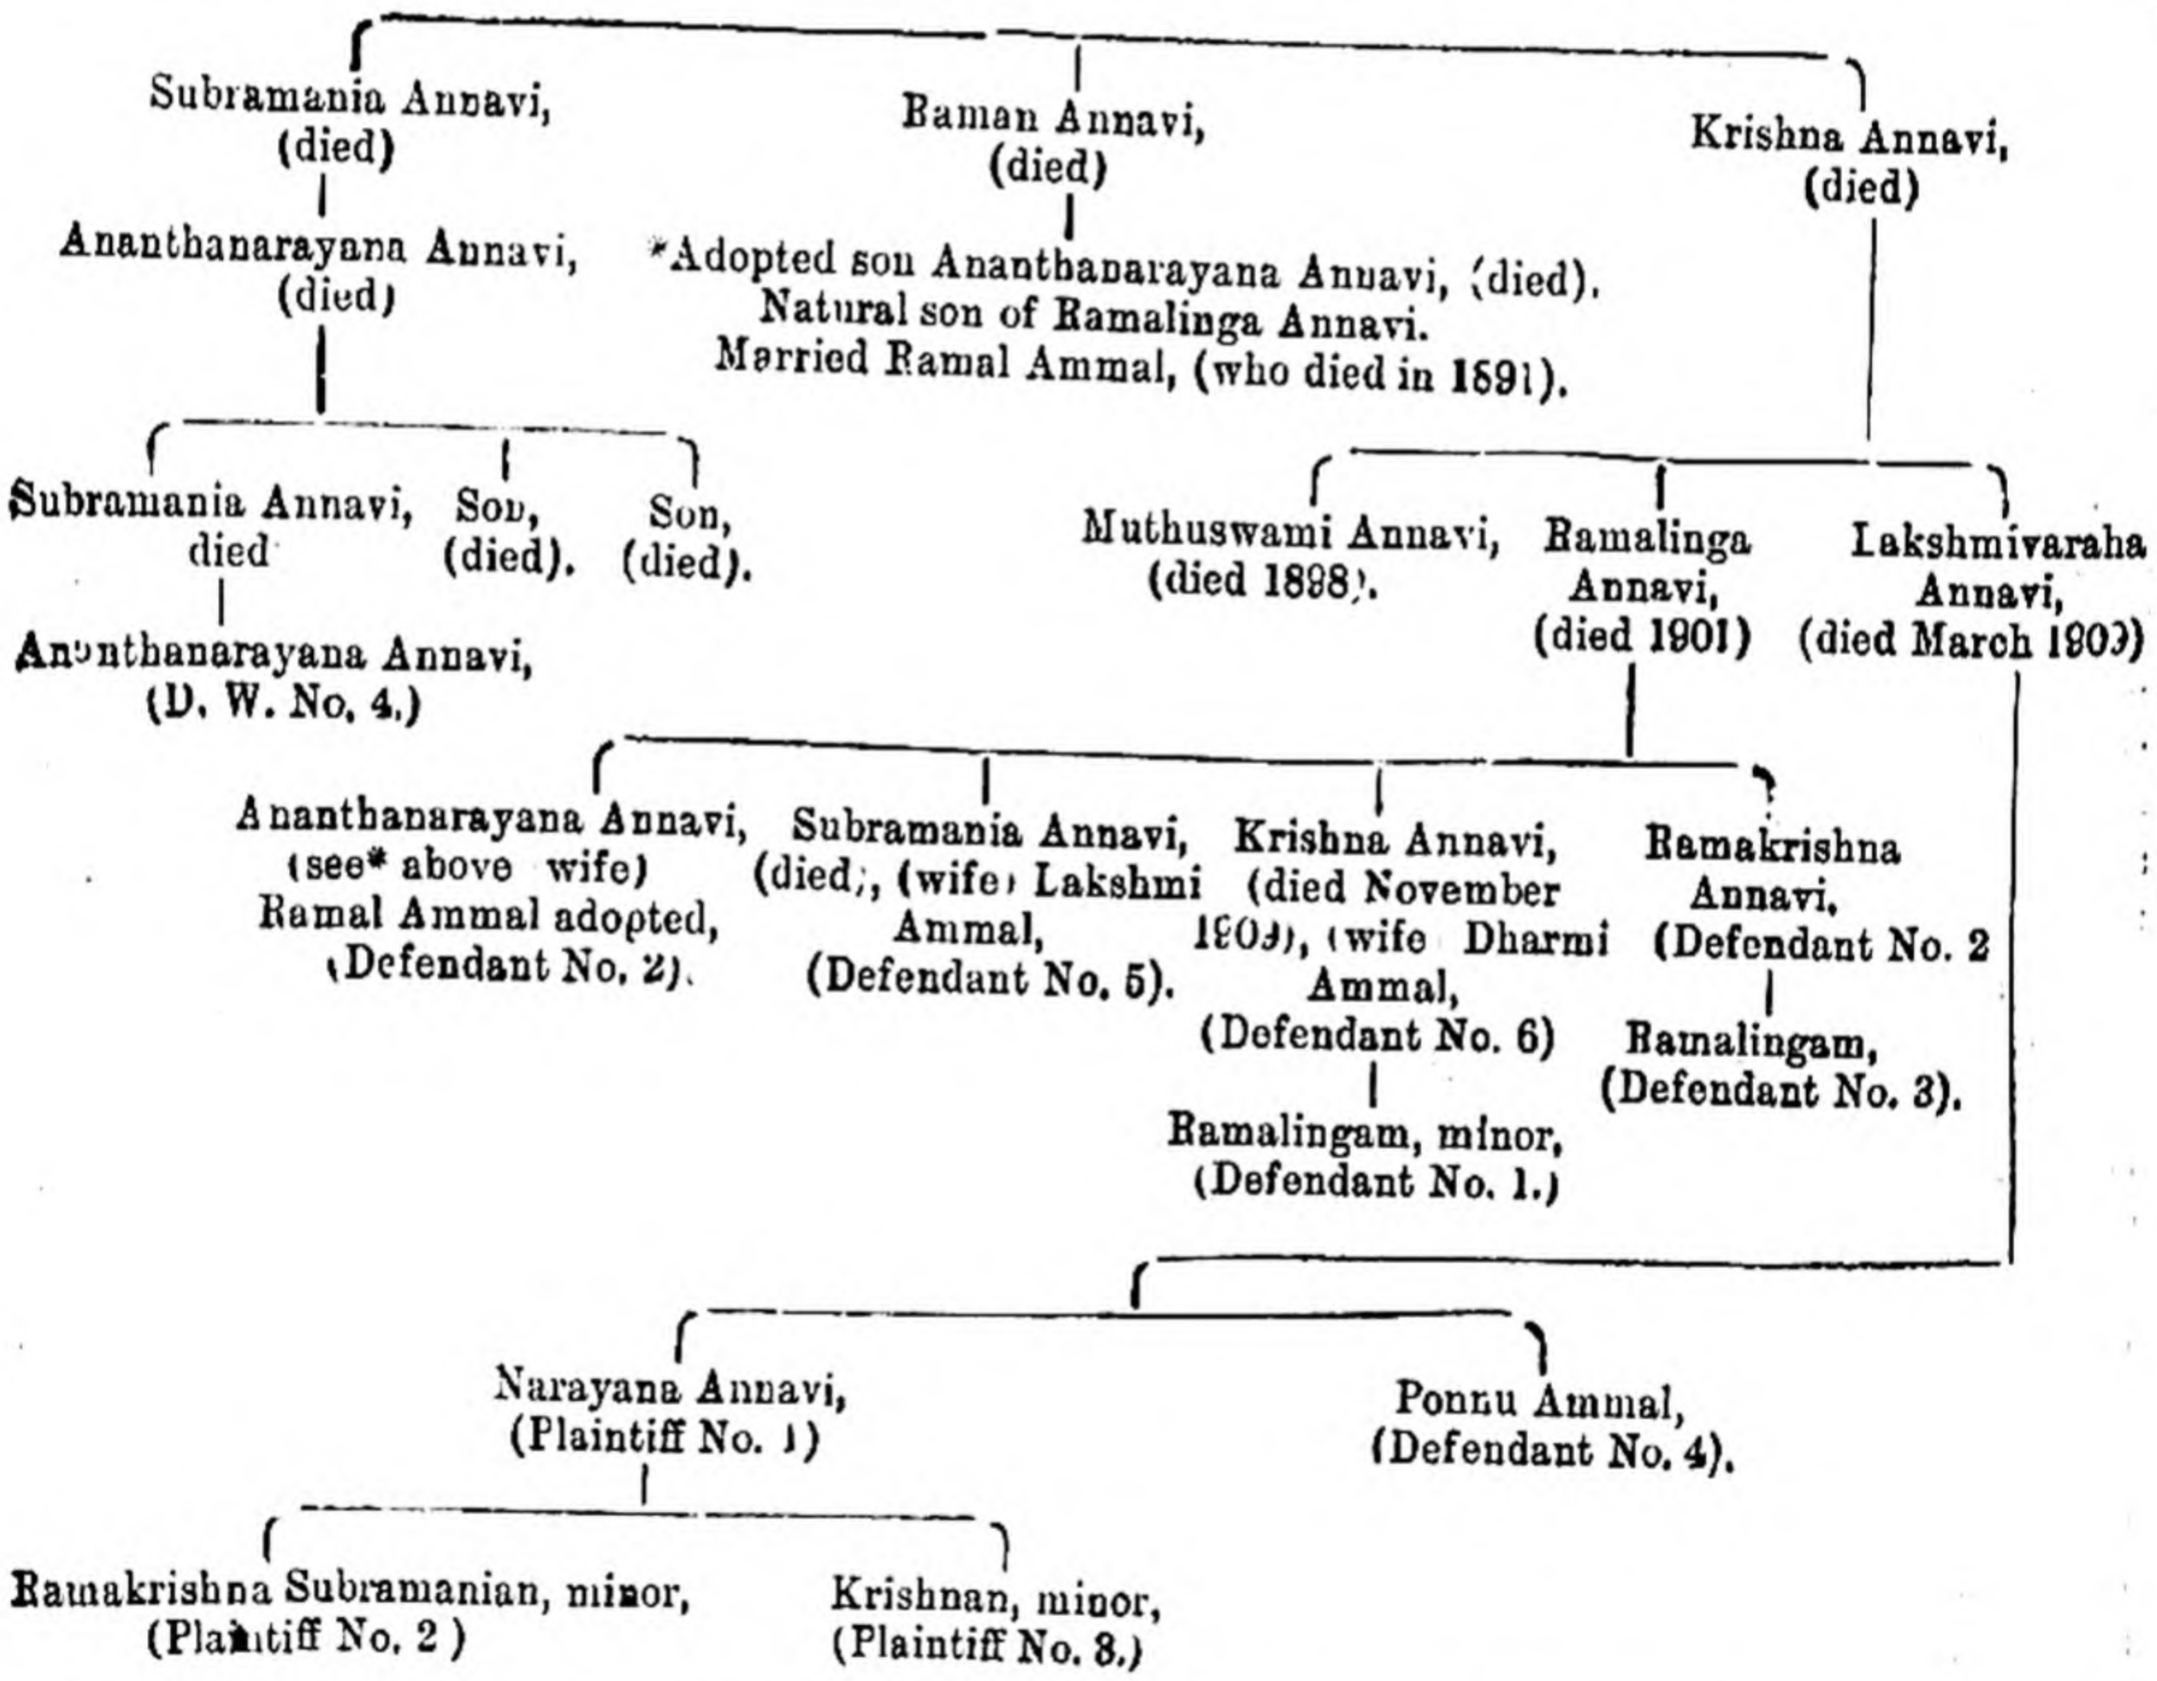
JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—These two consolidated appeals from a decree of the High Court of Madras arise out of a suit which was brought by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly on the 31st January 1910, for a decree for partition in respect of certain moveable and immoveable properties together with outstandings of a money-lending business on the allegation that they and the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 formed members of a joint undivided Mitakshara family. The following pedigree will explain the relative positions of the parties and their respective contentions.



For the convenience of reference Krishna Annavi at the head of the table may be called Krishna No. 1 and his grandson, the son of Ramalinga, as Krishna No. 2. Krishna Annavi No. 1 had two brothers, Raman and Subramania, who had separated from him in his lifetime; and on his death his three sons Muthuswami, Ramlinga and Lakshmivaraha, with their sons, continued to hold and dea with their properties as members of a joint family. Ramalinga had five sons, whose names are given in the pedigree. One of them Anantha was adopted by Raman Annavi. On his death, somewhere in the sixties, his widow Ramal Ammal purported to adopt Ramkrishna, her deceased husband's brother, as a son to him. This adoption was held by the Courts to be invalid under the Hindu Law, as one brother cannot adopt another as his son. Ramal, however, remained in possession of Anantha's property until her death in 1891, when it was divided among his reversionary heirs of whom the three sons of Krishna Annavi No. 1 were the principal sharers. Subramania, the fourth son of Ramalinga, appears to have died without issue, leaving Lakshmi Ammal, his widow, who is defendant No. 5. Ramakrishna's adoption having been set aside he remained a member of his branch of the family and is now constituted as defendant No 2 in the present action for partition. His son, Ramalinga No. 2, is joined with him as No. 3. Defendant No. 1 is the son of Krishna No. 2, the second son of the first Ramalinga who died in 1909. The defendant No. 1 was an infant at the time of suit and appears by his mother, defendant No. 6. Muthuswami died in 1898, and Lakshmivaraha in 1909. The plaintiff No. 1 is the son of Lakshmivaraha and the other two plaintiffs are Lakshmivaraha's grandsons. Besides the immoveable property the family held from the time of Krishna No. 1 and what they acquired after Ramal Ammal's death, they appear to have carried on a profitable money-lending business. Ramalinga had assigned to Ramakrishna (defendant No. 2) certain properties, apparently owing to the failure of his adoption. Lakshmivaraha had also in his lifetime made certain gifts to his daughter, Ponnu Ammal, defendant No. 4, the first plaintiff's sister. The plaintiffs' case is that these assignments and gifts are ineffective and inoperative, and they seek to have the properties assigned to defendant No. 2 as above and the monies given to defendant No. 4 by Lakshmivaraha, included in the partition. And they allege that they are entitled to a half share; and the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No. 2 (with his son) to the other half. The plaintiffs also claim that in the partition a sum of Rs. 2,000 should be allotted to them out of the joint assets for the marriages of the second and third plaintiffs. The defendant No. 6 is the mother of the minor defendant No. 1 and the widow of Krishna No. 2. She is made a party to the action, on the allegation that she has appropriated to her own use a large amount of joint family funds.

In 1895, which was the crucial period in the case, there were large outstandings due to the family in respect of the money-lending business which appears to have been mainly in the hands of Krishna, the father of defendant No. 1, as he was a man of intelligence and knew something of law. The first defendant alleges in his written statement that in that year there was a complete division among the three brothers, the sons of Krishna No. 1, of the family properties both moveable and immoveable, including the outstandings. He accordingly maintained that the present suit for partition is unfounded. He also denied the right of the defendant No. 2 to any share in the family properties. His case is set forth clearly in paragraph 14 of his written statement as follows:—

"About 16 or 17 years ago, during the lifetime of Muthuswami Annavi, Lakshmivaraha Annavi and Ramalinga Annavi, mentioned in paragraph 4 of the plaint, they became divided. At that time, considering the facts that since the 2nd defendant's adoption had been adjudged to be invalid, some provision should be made for him and that the said Muthuswami Annavi was unmarried and childless, and considering the welfare of the family, Rs. 5,000 was given to Muthuswami Annavi in lieu of his share and a sum of Rs. 20,000 was given to the 2nd defendant out of the remaining outstandings only. And it was settled that the father of the 1st plaintiff and the grandfather of the 1st defendant should equally divide between themselves the rest of the outstandings as well as the immoveable properties and they gave effect to it even during their lifetime."

Defendant No. 2, in his written statement, alleges that in 1895 the money-lending business carried on by the joint family was wound up so far as it was a joint business, and the outstandings which belonged to the joint family were divided among the different members; but that the immoveable property was not divided, nor was there a disruption of the joint family. He claims that the properties which stood in his name prior to 1895 and what he himself has acquired since belong to him exclusively. Defendant No. 4 asserted that the gifts to her were valid and could not be questioned by the plaintiffs.

Defendant No. 5, widow of Subramania, claimed that provision should be made for her maintenance in the partition proceedings.

Upon these contentions twenty-six issues were raised for trial in the first Court. For the purpose of the present judgment, however, they resolve themselves into four main questions: (1) Whether, as the plaintiffs allege, the family continued joint until its severance on institution of the suit, or as the High Court seem to hold on the decree of the Subordinate Judge directing partition; (2) whether, as the first defendant alleges, there was a complete partition between all the members of the joint family in 1895; (3) whether the second defendant was a member of the joint family and entitled to take a share on partition; and (4) whether the properties acquired after 1895, were held jointly, as the plaintiffs allege, or whether they were acquired and held by the members according to specific shares in proportion to the contributions made by each towards their acquisition. To these main questions should be added the following subsidiary points for determination, viz., (1) Whether the defendant No. 2 was entitled, as he alleges, to the properties which were held in his name before 1895 and those he personally acquired after that date; (2) whether the gifts by Lakshmivaraha to Ponnu Ammal are valid; and (3) whether the plaintiff Narayana was entitled to have certain sums allotted to him on partition for the marriage of his sons.

The Subordinate Judge, on the consideration of the oral and documentary evidence, decided against the plaintiffs in respect of their allegation that the family continued absolutely joint in all respects until the present claim. As regards the first defendant's contention he held that there was no complete partition in 1895, and that the arrangement in that year related only to the winding up of the family money-lending business and to the division of the outstandings. He held that there was no disruption of the joint status, and that they continued undivided in respect of all the immoveable property, though the houses which each of the members occupied were allotted to the parties occupying the same. He held further that the defendant No. 2 was entitled upon partition to his share in the joint property, and that the properties that had been held in his name prior to 1895, together with those he had acquired since belonged to him. He held also that the properties which had been acquired after 1895 in individual names belonged to the particular person in whose name it was purchased; but that the properties which were acquired by the parties jointly were divisible in three parts in proportion to the purchase money paid by each, or, where that was not indicated, in proportion to the shares in the rents and issues enjoyed by each With regard to the gifts to Ponnu Ammal by Lakshmivarah, he held them to be valid; and in respect of the claim of the plaintiff No. 1 to have a sum of Rs. 1,000 set apart for each of his sons' marriage he held it to be untenable.

Respecting the properties in schedules 11 and 13 attached to the plaint, which the plaintiffs had claimed as exclusively their own in their possession, the trial Judge, towards the end of his judgment, said as follows:—

"As to the properties in plaint Schedules XI and XIII, there is no evidence on plaintiff's side to show that they belong to the family. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 do not claim any right in them. If the plaintiffs are in possession of these properties exclusively they may enjoy them. They will be excluded from the decree."

These properties were accordingly not included in the decree for partition made in the first Court.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court from this decision, and the defendant No. 1 preferred a cross-appeal and one of the contentions he raised had reference to the properties in schedules 11 and 13. It was alleged on his behalf that the Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that the first defendant did not claim any right to them; and it was further urged that if by any omission on the part of his guardian no claim in fact had been preferred, he should not be prejudiced thereby. This contention was supported by an affidavit Their Lordships will deal with this point later, after they have considered the conclusions at which the learned Judges of the High Court arrived on the main facts of the case. They have held that the claim of the plaintiffs that the family remained joint in every respect after 1895 was well founded; and that in 1895 only three specific items of the outstandings were divided among the parties jointly entitled to the same. They held further, differing from the first Court, that although the properties acquired after 1895 in individual names belonged exclusively to the persons in whose name they stood, those that had been acquired in joint names were divisible in three shares as acquisitions by members of a joint family. In other words, the learned Judges held that in these after-acquired properties, as in the ancestral immoveable properties left undivided in 1895, the plaintiffs were entitled to a half share, the first defendant to a one-fourth, and the second defendant with his son (defendant No. 3), to the remaining one-fourth. They affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in respect of the claim of defendant No. 2 and upheld the validity of the gifts to Ponnu Ammal. Regarding the claim of the plaintiffs to have separate provision made for the marriages of the second and third plaintiffs, they disallowed it in respect of the plaintiff No. 3, but allowed it in respect of No. 2 as he was married after the institution of the suit but before the decree of the Subordinate Judge, they being of opinion that the severance of the joint status did not take place until the decree for partition by the first Court.

With regard to the properties in schedules 11 and 13 they held, apparently on the affidavit filed by defendant No. 1, as follows:—

"The plaintiffs claim a share of the properties in schedules XI and XIII. The defendants did not claim in the lower Court any interest in them. On the ground that the plaintiffs did not prove them to be properties belonging to the family, the suit was dismissed. We think the properties should be divided between the parties. The decree will be modified accordingly."

They accordingly modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge and further directed that:—

"According to our findings, the houses and Manaikats, which belonged to the family in 1895-1896 will be divided as family properties. All parties bear their own costs."

The High Court made their decree on the 29th April 1915. On the 28th March 1917 there was an application on behalf of the plaintiffs for review of the judgment. And on the fresh arguments advanced on the review, the learned Judges amplified and enlarged their findings in favour of the plaintiffs and made a decree in accordance with these findings. From this decree these two appeals have been preferred to His Majesty in Council, one on behalf of the first defendant, the other on behalf of the plaintiffs, and both appeals, as already stated, have been consolidated.

The concurrent finding of the Courts in India that the family continued joint after the division of the outstandings in 1895 and remained in joint possession and enjoyment of the ancestral immoveable properties is not impugned now; but the decision of the Hight Court in respect of the transaction of 1895 is strongly challenged on behalf of the first defendant, the son of Krishna No 2. It is contended on his behalf that the conclusion of the High Court that in 1895, only three specific items of the outstandings were divided, is against the weight of evidence and inconsistent with the general scheme of the transaction. And it is urged that the reasoning on which the division is supported in respect of the three items, applies with equal force to all the other items. It is also urged that the view the Judges of the High Court took in respect of the shares of the parties in the acquisitions made after 1895 is not in accordance with the evidence and does not proceed on right inferences from the facts.

On the plaintiffs' side it has been contended that as it is found that the family continued to be joint, the division of the respective interest of the parties in certain outstandings in 1895 could not affect the business as a whole: or discharge the properties acquired with the monies so divided from the obligations that attached to them as acquisitions of the joint family. The plaintiffs have also re-urged their objections to the gifts to Ponnu Ammal and pressed their claim to a provision for the marriages of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3.

It seems to their Lordships that in the debate before the Board the difference between a complete "partition" in a joint undivided Hindu family and a partial division of interests in respect of some specific property or part of the joint properties has been overlooked. This distinction has been clearly pointed out in the judgment of Lord Westbury in the well-known case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (1) and, although the passage has often been cited, it is desirable to reproduce it here.

"But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided."

It will thus be seen that, under the Hindu Law, it is open to the members of a joint family to make a division and a severance of interest in respect of a part of the joint estate whilst retaining their status as a joint family and holding the rest as the properties of a joint undivided family.

Both the Courts in India held as a question of fact that whatever took place in 1:95, did not create a disruption of the family status. The Subordinate Judge found upon the evidence in the case that the worship had remained joint. The parties undoubtedly lived in separate dwellings, but that circumstance is explained by the fact that the family had increased in number and the original building could not accommodate all. The Subordinate Judge also points out that there was no cessor of commensality inasmuch as all the members of the family drew their provisions from one store-room or granary as stated in the evidence.

The sole question for determination thus resolves itself into an enquiry as to the character of the division which took place in 1895-1896. Was it a mere division of three items of outstandings, or did it relate to the whole money-lending business as a joint family business? The defendant No. 1, in support of his allegation that there was a complete winding up of the family money-lending business and a complete division of the outstandings has rested his case on Exhibit IX on the record, which is a list of outstandings due to the family at that time. That list covers 27 items and consists of 4 parts; Part 1 deals with the actual outstandings, the other three deal with the allotment of the shares to the three persons who were entitled to the monies at the time and among whom, after allotment of a large sum to defendant No. 2, the outstandings were divided. It begins with the statement: "List of outstandings due to the sons of Krishna Annavi," and goes on to say, "particulars of the total amount belonging and due to Muthuswami, Ramalinga and Lakshmivaraha, sons of Krishna Annavi;" List No. 2 shows the sums set apart for a certain worship; List No. 3 gives the particulars of the monies allotted to Muthuswami, the eldest brother; List No. 4 contains the particulars regarding the sum of Rs. 32,039 allotted to the share of Ramalinga; List No. 5 relates to the allotment of Rs. 32,038 to the share of Lakshmivaraha; and List No. 6 shows the particulars relating to the Rs. 21,359 allotted to defendant No. 2. With regard to the method of division the Subordinate Judge states as follows:—

"The 1st defendant's case is that, as Muthuswami Annavi was unmarried, he took Rs. 5,073 out of this amount and that in lieu of the 2nd defendant's share in the family immoveable properties, he was given Rs. 21,359 14-10. A sum of Rs. 1,000 was reserved for payment as stridhanam (to whom it is not stated) and a sum of Rs. 534 was set apart for charity. A sum of Rs. 500 was reserved for payment of family debts. The balance, Rs. 64,000 and odd, was divided almost equally between Lakshmivaraha Annavi and Ramalinga Annavi. The total amount of outstandings set apart to Ramalinga Annavi consisting of 37 items as stated in sheet No 6 of Exhibit IX came to Rs. 32,039 5-9. The total of outstandings set apart to Lakshmivaraha Annavi consisting of 26 items as stated in the 7th sheet of Exhibit IX came to Rs. 32,038 10-11. The particulars of the outstandings set apart to the 2nd defendant, Ramakrishna Annavi, are given in sheet No. 8 of Exhibit IX. The particulars of the three items, amounting to Rs. 5,073, set apart to Muthuswami Annavi are given in the 5th sheet of Exhibit IX. Exhibit IX. (a) purports to be the rough draft from which Exhibit IX was copied."

Out of the amounts which were allotted to Ramalinga and Lakhmivaraha, the Subordinate Judge took the six principal items in order to consider the nature of the division and the circumstances connected with the subsequent application of the monies received in the transaction of 1895 by the individual members. His examination of the facts is so close and his method of treatment so clear and detailed that their Lordships feel themselves relieved of the necessity of discussing at length the mode in which the parties dealt with the different items; but a few remarks seem necessary to indicate the considerations which have weighed with their Lordships in the determination of these appeals. The largest amount shown in the list is a sum of Rs. 22,150, which was owing from a Mutt in the Tanjore District. The division of this sum was made in the following way: Rs. 8,700 were allotted to Ramalinga, Rs. 8,300 to Lakshmivaraha and Rs. 5,150 to the second defendant. After stating these facts the Subordinate Judge proceeds to show how this money came into the hands of the persons to whom the several sums were allotted and how these sums were applied. With regard to this amount of Rs. 22,000 the learned Judges of the High Court agree with the Subordinate Judge that the division was effective and the various sums allotted to the three parties were applied by them in the manner pointed out by him. The next item which the Subordinate Judge took up for examination was the sum of Rs. 19,725, with which he deals in the same exhaustive manner and shows how that sum was divided and how it was applied by the persons among whom the division was made. He shows that out of that sum Rs. 7,400 were set apart to Ramalinga, Rs. 7,400 to Lakshmivaraha and that Rs. 4,925 were given to defendant No. 2. After an examination of the documents connected with this division he came to the conclusion that Lakshmivaraha received his share and applied the same to his uses, and that, therefore, he is not entitled to any share in the sums allotted to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. With regard to this item the High Court take a different view. They hold, upon a letter which Krishna Annavi No. 2, the first defendant's father, wrote to the manager of the mortgagor on the 26th March 1909, saying that: "We consent to receive for the total debt due by the zemindar a certain rate of interest," that there was no such division as the first Court had found. With regard to Exhibit C., on which practically the decision of the High Court in respect of this particular item rests, it seems sufficient to say, as the Subordinate Judge properly observes, that a mere statement of Krishna Annavi No. 2 cannot outweigh the other facts.

With regard to the item of Rs. 6,550 the Subordinate Judge has applied the same method of examination and the High Court have affirmed his view. Regarding another item consisting of Rs. 1,795, due from a Mutt on a mortgage, the Subordinate Judge held that it had been divided among the parties in accordance with the allotments shown in the list. The learned Judges of the High Court have set aside his finding upon what appears to their Lordships a certain misapprehension of the facts. These facts are fully set out in the judgment of the first Court and do not require repetition.

Regarding item (No. 2) in the first list, which amounted to Rs 7,594, due to the Annavi family from a zamindar, it appears that Rs. 2,847 were set apart to Ramalinga and the same amount to Lakshmivaraha and the balance of Rs. 1,898 was given to the second defendant. Respecting this item the Subordinate Judge deals with it equally exhaustively and holds—

"In this item, Rs. 2,847-15-9 was set apart to Ramalinga Annavi and the same amount to Lakshmivaraha Annavi. The balance, Rs. 1,898 10-6, was set apart to the 2nd defendant Exhibit XI is a pro note for Rs. 3,185 2-1 executed to 1st defendant's father, Krishna Annavi by Sivan Sethuroyar on 13th August 1897. This amount is described as his father's share in the amount due under a pro-note executed to Ramalinga Annavi and on account of a chit conducted by Sivan Sethuroyar. This pro-note was attested by Lakshmivaraha.

Annavi and Rama Krishna Annavi. Exhibit XI (a) is a pro-note for Rs. 3,846-13 8 executed by Siwan Sethu royar on 5th August 1900, for the amount due under Exhibit XI. Sivan Sethuroyar's son, Sundara subramania Sethuroyar executed to Krishna Annavi, the 1st defendant's father, the pro note, Exhibit XI (b), on 28th July 1903, for Rs. 4,671-7-0, being the principal and interest due under Exhibit XI (a). Defendants' 7th witness, Mana Rama Aiyar, has attested Exhibits XI and XI (b). Defendants' 5th witness, Jagannadhaiyar, who was Kariyasthan under Siwan Sethuroyar, swears that he wrote Exhibit XI and that 1st plaintiff's father and 2nd defendant attested it. This witness also wrote the pro-note Exhibit XII, which was executed to 2nd defendant by Sivan Sethuroyar on the same date as Exhibit XI, namely, 13th August 1897, for Rs. 2,123-6-8. The amount is described in that document as his share. This pro-note was renewed in 2nd defendant's name on 5th August 1900, by Exhibit XII (a) for Rs. 2,514-8-11 and a pro-note similar to Exhibit XI (b) was executed to 2nd defendant for Rs. 3,114-4-0 on 28th July 1902. The pro note executed to 1st plaintiff's father on the dates of Exhibit XI and XII has not been produced. But it is mentioned in the pro-note, Exhibit XIII, for Rs. 3,844-13-8, which was executed to 1st plaintiff's father on 5th August 1900 at the same time as Exhibits XI (a) and XII (a). Exhibit XIII (a) was executed to 1st plaintiff's father in renewal of Exhibit XIII by Sivan Sethuroyar's son for Rs. 4,671-7-0 on the same date as Exhibits XI (b) and XII (b). These documents are proved by defendants' 5th witness, Jagannadha Aiyar. Defendant's 6th witness, Ganapathi Aiyar, wrote Exhibits XI (a), XII (a) and XIII.

'On the 1st of December 1903, Sivan Sethuroyar's son, Sundarasubramania Sethuroyar executed the sale-deed, Exhibit XIV, for Rs. 15,350 in respect of certain lands in the village of Vellanguli, that is, the properties described in Schedule VIII, and a land in Uppuviyanputtur in the Oorkadu Zemin, that is, item No. 1 in Schedule XI (b). The sale-deed was executed jointly to 1st plaintiff's father, 1st defendant's father and 2nd defendant. The recital in the sale-deed is that, out of the sale price, Rs. 7,000 was paid in cash and that the balance, Rs. 8,350, was credited towards a portion of the amount due to the vendees."

In respect of this item the High Court took a different view. They state their reasons thus:—

"There is nothing in the document to show that this amount was not the common joint property of all the three persons. The balance of Rs. 8,350-0-0 was credited towards a portion of the amount due to the vendees under various promissory notes and a razinamah decree. There is nothing in the document to show the debts that were due to each individual co-parcener. There is no doubt, therefore, that the property purchased under Exhibit XIV was treated as common property. The purchase in the names of all the co-parceners jointly is inconsistent with the case set up by the defendants so far as this property is concerned. The Subordinate Judge says that the three persons purchased the property with the intention of dividing it along with the other lands of the family which were left undivided. If this is so, there is nothing to suggest that this property was not intended to be treated as the other immoveable properties in which they were equally interested. There is nothing to support the inference of the Subordinate Judge that this property should be divided in the proportion in which the debts were divided We, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a half share in the property purchased under Exhibit XIV."

In their Lordships' opinion the view expressed by the Subordinate Judge appears to be fully warranted by the evidence.

The theory that in 1895 there was only a partial division of the outstandings which only related to three items, whilst the rest were left joint, is not consistent with the evidence, nor indeed logical. The defendant No. 2, in his written statement, gives the reason why the joint money-lending business was wound up. He says that in that year or about that time Lakshmivaraha desired to make some gifts of money to his daughter; the other members objected to those monies being paid out of the joint funds; it was then decided that the business should be wound up, and the shares of the different parties ascertained and divided; that Lakshmivaraha thus obtained his share, and out of that share made the gifts which are now impugned by the plaintiffs. This statement is supported by defendant No 2 in his evidence The reason for the division is clear and straightforward, and explains the subsequent conduct of the parties to the transaction. The deliberate preparation of the lists with their precise details and systematic apportionment of shares, the setting apart of a sum for worship, and the allotment of a sum to Muthuswami disproportionate to the share to which he was legally entitled, for reasons which do not seem at all illegitimate, betoken a design to wind up altogether the family money lending business and divide the outstandings. That those outstandings were, in fact, divided and were taken by Ramalinga, Lakshmivaraha and the second defendant in certain specific shares, which roughly came to three-eighths to the first two and two-eighths to Rama Krishna, is proved beyond doubt. When subsequently the three combined in fresh purchases or mortgages they contributed towards such acquisitions in proportion to the shares they acquired on the division of the outstandings.

In connection with these purchases, the Subordinate Judge pertinently observes :—

"In all these documents there is reference to Thargal Bhagam (your share). If there was no division, this recital would not have been made. The object of taking the signatures of the other two co-parceners in the documents executed to each of them was to prevent them from afterwards contending that the documents were taken without their knowledge."

And the oral evidence shows that the rents and issues of the properties so acquired were taken by the parties in those shares. The High Court does not seem to have attached much importance to this circumstance. But the enjoyment of the subsequent acquisitions is strong evidence of the fact the Subordinate Judge has found that they bought them in those shares and enjoyed them in those shares.

It has been strongly contended, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that Narayana was of age in 1895 and was not a party to the partition, and is, therefore, not bound by it. But it is conclusively proved that Narayana acquiesced in and adopted the acts of his father not only in his lifetime, but also since his death. He cannot now turn round and repudiate the division made in 1895. On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the view taken by the High Court of what took place in that year cannot be sustained.

There remain now the two questions, one relating to the validity of the two gifts made by Lakshmivaraha to the fourth defendant, Ponnu Ammal. The first is an assignment of Rs. 5,000 out of the money which fell to the share of Lakshmivaraha due from the Thiruvadudurai Mutt. This was done at the instance of Lakshmivaraha. The other is an assignment of a usufructuary mortgage held by him. In the aggregate the two sums amount to Rs. 8,000. The father has undoubtedly the power under the Hindu Law of making, within reasonable limits, gifts of moveable property to a daughter. In one case the Board upheld the gift of a small share of immoveable property on the ground that it was not shown to be unreasonable.* In the present case, the gifts relate to sums of money. The only question is whether they were reasonable. Both the Courts in India have answered the question in the affirmative and their Lordships have no materials or ground to hold otherwise.

Regarding the prayer for the allotment upon partition of Rs. 2,000 for the marriages of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, the High Court disallowed the claim in respect of the prospective marriage, but allowed it for the expenses of the marriage that took place before decree in the first Court, on the ground that the joint family status was not dissevered until the decree for partition, and that the joint family liability continued until then. This view is opposed to the law laid down in the case of Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2) where it was held expressly, that under the Law of the Mitakshara, to which the parties in the present case are subject, an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of the interest which, until then, he had held in jointness. This intention was clearly intimated to the co-parceners when the plaintiff Narayana served on them the notice, Exhibit II, on the 30th of July 1909. That notice effected a separation so far as his branch of the family was concerned, and no obligation rested on the joint family in respect of his sons' marriages. The decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the claim was, therefore, correct.

As regards the properties in Schedules XI and XIII, there are not sufficient materials before their Lordships to determine whether they belonged to the joint family or formed the exclusive property of the plaintiffs. It will be for the first Court to decide the question upon proper materials when giving effect to the decree for partition. But the parties would be well advised to settle it amicably.

It is admitted that the land allotted to the widow of Subramania Annavi (defendant No. 5), on her decease, became divisible among the heirs of her husband, in other words, the male members of the family, parties to this action. To this extent the declaration made by the Subordinate Judge will be varied.

The High Court directed in its discretion that each party should bear his own costs. With that direction their Lordships do not propose to interfere. But having regard to the nature of the contentions, they consider that the plaintiffs must pay the costs of defendants Nos. 1, 6 and 4. The defendants Nos. 1 and 6, who alone impugned the right of defendant No. 2 to a share in the joint family properties, must play his costs. The plaintiffs' cross-appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to set aside the decree of the High Court and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge, subject to the above variation, with the above directions as to costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37—Secured creditor, whether "creditor."

The word "creditor" in section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act includes a secured creditor.

Appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, dated the 31st August 1920, in Insolvency Case No. 10 of 1919, dated 29th October 1919.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. C. Gosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order in the proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act which is attacked in this appeal was passed on the 31st of August 1920. The proceedings began on the 22nd of February 1919 when Act III of 1907 was in force, but that was repealed on the 26th of February 1920, six months before the order was passed, by Act V of 1920. The two Acts are, however, practically identical in respect of the provisions with which we are concerned, so that the question of the new or the old Act applying does not really arise. The learned Additional District Judge has referred to the sections of the Act of 1907 throughout. I do not consider it necessary to set out at any length the reason for saying that the order of the learned Judge is wrong and setting it aside. It is, indeed, not easy to find anything in the order that is right. It is mainly based on the assumption that a secured creditor is not a creditor within the meaning of section 37 of the Act. For this extraordinary proposition no reasons have been or could be given. Many could, but need not, be stated against it. The transfer of the village share, which with characteristic inaccuracy is usually called a ten-anna share in the proceedings, being in fact a two-thirds or ten-anna eight-pie share, is fraudulent and void under section 37 of Act III of 1907 or section 57 of Act V of 1920 and must be annulled.

(2) It is also void and must be annulled under section 36 of Act III of 1907 or section 53 of Act V of 1920. The learned Judge appears to have held that the sale to Ramprasad, for which the consideration is stated in the sale-deed to be Rs. 5,000, was for good consideration, because it is proved that a sum of Rs. 4,700 was actually paid by him to one Gajadhar Prasad in satisfaction of his mortgage dated the 19th of December 1914 to the same property. But whatever the exact value of the share may be, it is certainly a great deal more than Rs. 5,000, and the sale did in fact extinguish also Ramprasad's own mortgage for Rs. 3,105 which was executed exactly five months earlier, though mention of this extinguishment is very carefully omitted from the sale-deed. The burden of proving that that part of the consideration was given as well as the Rs. 4,700 paid to Gajadhar Parasad, lay upon the respondents, and every part of the evidence to be found on the record tends directly in the opposite direction. I may mention that in his order of the 29th of October 1919 the same learned Judge on practically the same materials and in the same proceedings came to the conclusion that both the mortgage and the sale to Ram Prasad were mere shams and fraudulent.

(3) The order of the lower Court is set aside. The sale on the 10th of December 1918 of a share in the village of Jhanj by the insolvent to Ramprasad is declared fraudulent and void as against the Receiver and is annulled. The appellants' costs in the appeal and in the proceedings out of which it arose will be paid by the respondent, Ramprasad.

The Pleader's fee in this appeal will be Rs. 50.

Appeal allowed.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 4—Promissory-note—Instrument containing unconditional undertaking to pay certain sum with interest annually, whether pro-note.

An instrument in writing which contains an unconditional undertaking to pay a certain sum of money with interest annually is not a promissory-note within the meaning of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 7th October 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

OBILISETTI VENKATA KRISHTNIAH v. ATAYAM SUBBIAH.

JUDGMENT.—The first point for determination in this case is, whether the document on which the suit is based is or is not a promissory-note.

The Court below has held that it is, and that, as it is improperly stamped, it is inadmissible in evidence under section 35 of the Stamp Act for any purpose whatever. Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant has contended that the document is not a promissory note, and, further, that if it is, it is admissible to prove that the monies due under the original transaction were payable at Karnal.

The document itself purports to be a promissory-note. After reciting the circumstances which led to its execution it goes on as follows: "I promise that I shall pay Rs. 11,891-15 3, within three years from the date of this rugga with interest at the rate of annas 8 per cent. per mensem. The interest shall be paid annually. The said amount shall be paid to Lala Joti Pershad.....or his order at Karnal...."

Now, a promissory note, as defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act, "is an instrument in writing....containing an unconditional, undertaking signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum only to, or to the order of, a certain person,....."

The document in question is certainly an instrument in writing containing an unconditional undertaking to pay Rs. 11,891-15 3 with interest at annas 8 per cent. per mensem to Lala Joti Pershad or his order, and were this all I would have no hesitation in agreeing with the Court below, that it is a promissory-note. There is however, an undertaking to pay the interest annually, and I think there is force in Mr. Shamair Chand's contention that such a term is inconsistent with the document being a promissory-note.

It seems to me that, with this undertaking embodied in the document, the payee could sue for any interest that had become due and remained unpaid.

Such a clause is repugnant to the essential character of a commercial document negotiable by mere endorsement.

In this view I am fortified by a decision of Beaman, J., reported as Pratab-chand Gulabchand v. Purshotamdas Mulji (1). Whatever this document may be, I do not think it is a promissory-note, falling under the absolute prohibition of section 35 of the Stamp Act and I hold accordingly. As to the second point, i. e, whether the document, assuming it to be a promissory-note, is admissible for any other purpose I am of opinion that section 35 renders a promissory note improperly stamped inadmissible for any purpose whatever, vide Mulji Lala v. Lingu Makaji (2), Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (3) and Thaji Beebi v. Tirumalaiappa Pillai (4). As I hold the document is not a promissory-note, I accept this appeal and return the case to the Court below for disposal in accordance with law. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the judgment to be delivered by my learned brother and have nothing to add.

RAMESAM, J:—The plaintiff sues as the assignee of one Nunna Venkataratnam. His case is that the defendant's family had, during the lifetime of their father, Jagannadham, two khatas with the said Venkataratnam, (1) in which Venkataratnam acted as a Commission Agent for the family and (2)—the suit transaction—in which Venkataratnam and the defendant's family were partners in paddy trade. In Venkataratnam's accounts, the 1st khata stood in the name of their father and manager, and the second, in the name of the 2nd defendant. The 1st defendant contested the suit on the ground that the 2nd khata did not relate to a family transaction; but the Subordinate Judge decreed in plaintiff's favour. The 1st defendant appeals.

The only point argued for the appellant is, that the 1st defendant cannot be made liable in this suit, as there was no privity of contract between him and Venkataratnam even though the debt was a family debt and the 1st defendant may be liable to his brothers in a suit for contribution.

The following facts may be taken as admitted or proved in the case. The defendants and their father were living together as a joint family until the father's death which happened about the end of 1915 or very nearly in 1916. Shortly after the father's death, there was a partition between the brothers. The suit transaction commenced in 1908. The accounts were settled on 22nd October 1915, and it was found that a sum of Rs. 36,496 and odd was due to Venkataratnam. This settlement appears in the account books of Venkataratnam and in the accounts of the defendant's family. In the former, it was signed by the 4th defendant (Exhibit A). The other transaction in the name of the father which is admitted to have been carried on for the family was settled on 15th October 1915 and it was found that Venkataratnam owed Rs. 3,721 and odd to the defendant's family. This amount was transferred to the suit account to the credit of the defendants on 17th January 1916, after the father's death. The defendants' family ledger, contained both the khatas, Exhibit B relating to the suit khata and Exhibit C relating to the admitted family khata. There are day-books corresponding to the ledger. The 1st defendant, while admitting that there are accounts kept by the family, says he never cared to look into them. He attended to the cultivation of the family lands, while the 2nd defendant, who was regarded by the father as a person of greater capacity than his brothers, looked after the family trade. The family had two shares in a rice mill—the shares standing in the 2nd defendant's name. The 2nd defendant settled the accounts relating to the dealings of the family with one Pulavarti Venkanna. He was also borrowing from the Madras Bank for the family purposes, though all the members executed a security bond in favour of the Bank. Not only did the 1st defendant not repudiate the transfer of the amount in his father's khata to the suit khata but he adopted, in Exhibit D, the result of the transfer as continued up to the date of the petition. In this petition he admitted the suit debt as a family debt. The reference in it, in the sentence "Until two years ago, Nunna Venkataratnam and we carried on paddy business jointly. There was loss to the extent of rupees ten thousand for our share" is obviously to the suit transaction and not to the khata in Jaganadham's name in which Venkataratnam was not a partner but only a Commission Agent and which did not result in a loss for the defendants. The irresistible inference is that the suit transaction was, from the beginning, one entered into on behalf of the family, being known to its manager, and carried on for its benefit, the understanding, from the beginning, being that the family will share in the profit or loss. It is not a case where a member carried on business separately with his own funds and for his own benefit and afterwards the family took upon itself the debts he had incurred, and hence no question as to whether Exhibit D amounts to a valid ratification in law arises (Vide Keighley Maxsted & Co. v. Durant (1).

It seems to me that where a debt was incurred on behalf of the family—though only a single member, not being a manager, deals with the creditor, the creditor being ignorant of the fact that the single member was acting on behalf of the family—a suit is maintainable against all the members. In such a case, the single member is the agent of the manager (and some or all of the adult junior members). This is the basis of Subramania Iyer, J.'s judgment in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (2). The dissenting judgments of Davies J, (at pages 601 and 607) were based on his view that the suit was based on the note only. At page 601 he conceded that "had it been a bond that was sued on or had the suit been brought on the debt, of which the promissory note afforded evidence, other members of the 1st defendant's family might have been held liable as well as himself on the ground that the 1st defendant represented them." This sentence of Davies, J. gives the reply to the argument of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakil for the appellant, who earnestly urged upon us the view that the decision proceeded on the ground that the 1st defendant in that case was the manager. He relied on the judgment of Shephard, J. (at page 605) and also referred to the following cases:—Nagendra Chandra Dey v. Amar Chandra Kundu (3), Baisnab Chandra De v. Ramdhon Dhor (4), Pulukkavandy Ambalam v. Periyakaruppa Kone (5), Angat Singh v. Srinath Das (6), Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (7), Nachiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthy Servai (8), Chinniah Chetty v. Tikkan Ramaswami Chetty (9) and Ayyasami Pillai v. Gurusami Naicken (10) affirmed on Letters Patent Appeal in Nataraja Naicken v. Ayyasami Pillai (11). It is true that in some of these cases Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (2) was referred to as a decision relating to the dealing by a manager. But, I am of opinion that Shephard, J. was merely meeting the objection of Davies, J. that the suit was based on the note and not on the debt and did not intend to lay any particular emphasis on the word 'manager' used by him. When a single member acts in his own name but really as the agent of the manager, the case is one of an undisclosed principal and the manager is bound. So far it is an application of the Law of Agency. In so far as the manager's acts bind the whole family it is the application of the Hindu Law relating to the manager and involves no extension of the ordinary rules of Hindu Law. Thus, it is a case of a combined application of the Hindu Law and the Law of Agency and involves no unjustifiable extension of either. In such a case, the contracting member, and (with reference to the first clause of section 231 of the Contract Act), the manager may be personally liable but not the other members. This is the view taken in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (2) where certain-

JUDGMENT.—The oral evidence for the plaintiff is such a mass of impossibilities and patent falsehoods that there was no course open to the learned Pleader who conducted his appeal but to admit that the story told by the defendants' witnesses must be accepted as the truth. The facts, stated shortly, are these. Chindhu Mahar of Adam was married at the age of fifteen to Musammat Pauli who was then about seven years old. She remained in the house of Chindhu's parents for a fortnight or so after the wedding and then returned to her own home at Deoli which is about four miles from Adam. Later on, after she had attained puberty, her father Jairam was asked to complete the marriage by sending her to her husband's house for its consummation, but he refused then and always thereafter. Except at the wedding, which is really no more than an irrevocable betrothal, Pauli never formally entered her husband's house or even visited it casually.

2. In the course of time Chindhu married at least three other women in succession, but all of them were childless. Eventually, Jairam found that his daughter was pregnant. He then went with her to Adam, convened a Panchayat and demanded that Chindhu should either take her to live with him as his wife or divorce her formally. He naturally chose the latter course and Pauli was taken then back to Deoli, where she gave birth, not long afterwards, to a son Maroti, who is the plaintiff in this case. It was also within a few months of the divorce that she married one Kandu who had been living in her father's house for some years. Chindhu died in November or December 1918, and in this suit, which was filed in the following March on behalf of Maroti by a next friend against the mother and the widow of Chindhu who were in possession of his property, it is claimed that he is Chindu's son and entitled to succeed to his estate.

3. The plaintiff's case in the lower Court was that his mother lived with her husband, Chindhu, for some years and that he was born during that cohabitation and long before there was any separation between his parents. It was also most strenuously denied that their separation was anything but an amicable separation by mutual consent and that Pauli was pregnant at the time; indeed it is admitted by everybody that the plaintiff Maroti is Pauli's only child. It is, therefore, very doubtful whether the plaintiff ought to be allowed in appeal to call in aid section 112 of the Evidence Act and apply it to the facts proved against him in the face of strenuous denials. This has, however, been allowed, and the plaintiff's case now is that he is proved and admitted to have been conceived during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and Chindhu, and to have been born well within two hundred and eighty days after its dissolution, and that the defendants have failed to show that his mother and her husband had no access to each other at the time when he was begotten, as they were living in villages only four miles apart up to the time of the divorce.

4. It cannot be denied that, according to Hindu custom, a husband is not allowed to have access to his wife for the purpose of sexual intercourse until she has been formally sent to his house for the consummation of the marriage after she has attained puberty. The rule is strict, and the fact that Jairam never allowed his daughter to go formally to her husband's house at all is complete proof that Chindhu and Pauli never had access to each other for the purpose of sexual intercourse. The very strong presumption raised by virtue of section 112 of the Evidence Act has been successfully rebutted by the defendants in the manner allowed by that section.

5. There is, however, another matter which must defeat the plaintiff's claim to be considered the son of Chindhu merely on the strength of the facts set out above. It is, that he has failed to prove that his mother did not marry Kaudu before he was born. It was for him to establish all the facts mentioned by section 112 of the Evidence Act before he could ask that they should be treated as conclusive proof of his parternity. Most of them he has established, or rather they were established by the defendants in his despite. But the fact of his "mother remaining unmarried" till after his birth has not only not been proved by the plaintiff's evidence but is strongly counter indicated by it, and is disproved by the evidence on the other side. Bodu Mahar (P. W. No. 1), the next friend of the plaintiff and brother of Pauli, says the marriage with Kaudu was two months after the divorce from Chindhu. Damu Mahar (P. W. No. 2) makes the period "two or four months," and Mania Mahar (P. W. No. 4) says "one or two months." It is true that Shioram (P. W. No. 3) and Jotiram (P. W. No. 7) state that this period was two years, but that is impossible and is admitted to be untrue. Now, it can safely be assumed that Pauli was not more than seven months gone in pregnancy at the time of the divorce at the Panchayat, for otherwise the witnesses would probably have mentioned the fact, and some of them do not even mention her pregnancy; indeed, all the plaintiff's witnesses deny it absolutely. But in no case can it be said that the plaintiff has proved that he was born during the period of not more than four months at the end of which his mother married Kaudu.

6. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff-appellant referred to the deposition of a witness for the defendants, Ramji Mahar (D. W. No. 5), to the effect that the plaintiff was born one month after the divorce. Even that is not proof that the marriage with Kaudu did not take place less than a month after the divorce and it would be for the plaintiff to prove that it did not, after it had once been proved that it did take place about that period after the divorce. The objection of the learned Pleader for the respondents to the acceptance of this statement by Ramji as evidence on the ground that it is "hearsay" does not seem sustainable. The meaning of the words as I read them is that about a month after the divorce Ramji was informed that Pauli had given birth to a son; it is not that he was informed later on that she had given birth to a son a month after the divorce. The point is, however, of no importance.

7. But not only has the plaintiff failed to prove that he was born before his mother's marriage to Kaudu, but the defendants have succeeded in proving that he was not. It would perhaps be more correct to say that the plaintiff himself proved this, as the statement appears in the cross-examination of a witness for the defendants, who had said nothing about it in his examination in chief. The witness is Rama Mahar (D. W. No. 12), a resident of Debli, where Jairam lives and the plaintiff was born and the pat marriage between Pauli and Kaudu was celebrated. If he has any bias either way it would be towards the daughter of Jairam, his fellow villager and partner in business to whose nephew his daughter is married. He states also that he does not visit Adam where Chindhu lived. These are good reasons for accepting him as a reliable witness at least in anything he says against the plaintiff's interest, and his deposition has every appearance of being truthful. He is recorded as having made the following statement at the end of his cross-examination. "I was not in any Panchayat at all. But I know of the 'pregnancy' when Musammat Pauli was married with Kaudu by pat which was celebrated 11 or 12 years ago Maroti was not in being then. He was born a month or two after the pat. Pat was celeberated in Mouza Deoli. I do not go to Mouza Adam," I hold that it has been proved affirmatively that the plaintiff, Maroti, was born after the marriage of his mother to Kaudu, and also that Chindhu and Pauli had no access to each other for the purpose of sexual intercourse at any time whatever. The suit must accordingly fail, and its dismissal by the lower Court was correct.

8. Bodu Mahar, the next friend of the plaintiff-appellant, has also included in the plaintiff's appeal one on his own account and adverse to the plaintiff against the order of the lower Court that he and not the minor plaintiff is personally liable to the defendants for their costs and to the Collector for the amount of Court fees payable on the plaint, the suit having been filed in forma pauperis. It is not suggested that the order is not appropriate to the circumstances of the case. Indeed the record is not lacking in indications that the litigation has been conducted in the interests of the next friend only. The contention is that the omission from r. 1 of O. XXXII, of the words in the corresponding section of the old Civil Procedure Code which authorised the Court to order the next friend to pay the costs has taken away that authority, and r. 11 of O. XXXIII distinctly lays down that at least the amount of the Court fees payable on the plaint shall in a suit of this nature be recoverable from the plaintiff himself. A complete answer to this contention is to be found in section 35 of the Code, and rr. 8 and 9 of the same O. XXXII also clearly indicate that the Court still has power to order a minor's next friend to pay the costs.

9. In this connection it is necessary to point out that though the value of the claim in the lower Court was absurdly and recklessly inflated, doubtless because it was pauper suit, it was still stated, owing to a mistake in addition, at a hundred rupees less than it was. The total of the values of the items of the property claimed as stated in the plaint is Rs. 34,070 and this has been wrongly shown and accepted as Rs. 33,970. The Court-fee shown in the Schedule of costs in the decree of the lower Court is Rs. 1,015. It should be Rs. 1,035, and the decree will be modified accordingly. For the rest it will stand, and Bodu Mahar, the minor appellant's next friend, will also pay all the costs incurred by the respondents in this appeal and will be further liable for the Court-fees payable on the memorandum of grounds of appeal. The claim here was for the immoveable property alone, which was valued at Rs. 6,100 only.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 31—Judgment of Appellate Court affirming that of Trial Court—Short form of judgment, if contrary to law.

MOHAMMAD HOSSAIN CHAUDHARY v. RABIA KHATUN.

Whether or not a judgment of an Appellate Court is in accordance with the provisions of O XLI, r. 31 of the Civil Procedure Code depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. There is, firstly, that difference which exists between cases of affirmance of judgments and cases of reversal of judgments of the First Court. Then there is to be considered the nature of the judgment affirmed, its fullness and accuracy and so forth

Where the First Court has fully discussed in its judgment all the matters which were placed before it, the Appellate Court's judgment affirming that of the First Court is not contrary to law, because it is given in a short form and is unaccompanied by reasons.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Backerganj, dated the 26th September 1919, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Juge, First Court of that District, dated the 30th September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Appellant:—The defendants are appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of annuities due on a wakfnama and under subsequent devolution. The First Court decreed the suit which was affirmed on appeal. The Appeal Court has disposed of the appeal in two or three lines, agreeing with the judgment of the First Court. My apprehension is that the judgment having been delivered four months after hearing, he forgot the facts altogether. The judgment was delivered by his successor though it was written by him. I submit the Judge ought to have given his own reasoning on the documents in view of the complicated nature of the facts of the case. Refers to O. XLI, r. 31, Civil Procedure Code; Woodroffe's Civil Procedure Code (2nd Edition) page 131. Under the circumstances the case ought to go back.

Babu Ram Charan Mazumdar (with him Babu Nagendranath Ghosh), for the Respondents was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the arguments, we are told, lasted for some three days in the First Court. It was dismissed as against defendant No. 2 and a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff against defendant No. 1 for the sum mentioned in the Subordinate Judge's judgment. Then it went on appeal to the District Judge and in his Court the arguments, we are told, lasted for four days. The District Judge did not deliver his judgment forthwith but we are told that he reserved his judgment and had it under consideration for some time. In the result he came to the conclusion that the decree of the First Court should stand. Therefore, we have before us a case of a judgment of concurrence as regards the fact.

It has been argued before us here (and this is the only point of law in this appeal) that the judgment of the Court below is not in accordance with the provisions of O. XLI, r. 31 of the Civil Procedure Code inasmuch as the Court did not assign any reason for its decision. That the learned Judge appreciated the main facts in this case is shown by the fact that the main points have been decided, namely, those necessary in order to arrive at a decision. They appear from the judgment itself. He has considered the main facts and as regards these he says concerning the kabin kistibandi: "I entirely agree with the finding of the lower Court that it was the result of conclusion (collusion?)". The judgment then proceeds to the other main points in the case touching the genuineness and validity of Nazir Hossain's Will and of the connected Nadavipatra and Muktipatra. As regards this the learned Judge says: "This has been very fully and carefully discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge and I need only say that I entirely agree with his findings." I think it would be putting a reasonable interpretation on what the Judge has said if we suppose that he not only affirms the findings of the First Court but adopts at least in the main the grounds on which those findings have been arrived at by the First Court. Whether or not a judgment is according to law must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. There is firstly that difference which exists between cases of affirmance of judgments and cases of reversal of judgments of the First Court. Then there is to be considered nature of the judgment affirmed, its fullness and accuracy and so forth. In the present case the First Court, as appears from its judgments, has fully discussed all the matters which were placed before it and, therefore, we are unable to say that the lower Appellate Court's judgment is contrary to law, because, it gave its judgments in the short form in which it is now before us. There is no other ground in this appeal.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXVI—Commissions for valuation of things—Procedure.

When the report of a Commissioner appointed to make a valuation of anything under O. XXVI of the Civil Procedure Code is objected to, the Court should hear the objections in open Court and decide, with the aid of such evidence as it may take, whether the valuation should be varied and, if so, in what direction. [p. 470, col. 1.]

The filing of objections to a report is no ground for appointing another Commissioner and in all cases where a second Commissioner is appointed to do the same work, the reasons for adopting such a course must be recorded in writing to enable the Appellate Court to see whether the judicial discretion has been properly exercised [p. 470, col. 2]

There may be cases in which the Commissioner may have so misconceived his duties as to render his report and valuation useless for a decision. In such cases a new Commissioner may be appointed. But this would mean that the old report and valuation were superseded. The Court has no power, after the issue of a second Commission, to still treat the report and valuation obtained under the first as available data on which if it was so minded, it might base its decision [p. 470, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 300 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ottapalam, in Original Suit No. 399 of 1914.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 26th and 28th October 1920, before Court (Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.).

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant had a mortgage in 1889 of certain properties belonging to the Cochin Government in British territory. Proposals for its renewal were made in the beginning of 1911. As the District Munsif points out in paragraph 14, "the purapad was collected, the demise was renewed, renewal fee was paid and accepted, Kanom-deed was written and executed on stamp paper supplied by the tenant, and the kychit was prepared on a similar stamp paper." But there was no registered instrument. There can be little doubt that the first defendant objected to the new terms. Though apparently the Circar did not consider, the door was closed for re-consideration. But eventually, the Circar gave a Melcharth to the plaintiff in 1913. He sues to redeem the old Kanom of 1889.

The District Munsif held that the contract was complete and the only course open to the Circar was to have sued for specific performance to compel the first defendant to accept the mortgage with the new terms. The Subordinate Judge held that the contrast was repudiated by the first defendant and that it gave her no right to resist possession.

Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar contended before us that, as the plaintiff took with notice of the agreement of the first defendant, he was in a fiduciary position towards her and that, therefore, his suit should fail.

Reliance was placed on section 91 of the Trusts Act. This argument proceeded on the assumption that there was an enforceable contract. Even on this assumption, it seems to us that, as in the written statement she repudiated the contract, it is not open to the first defendant to plead that the plaintiff was a quasi-trustee for her. This disposes of the main question argued.

There are some subsidiary questions. The Subordinate Judge, while rightly holding that the only right of the plaintiff is to claim payment for the assessment actually payable on the land and paid by him, has, by inadvertence, failed to bring the decree into conformity with his judgment on this point. His decree must, therefore, be modified by omitting therefrom the following words and figures occurring in the first paragraph of the decree, viz., "future purapad from 1090 at 358 paras. 5 edangalies.....and Rs. 1-9-2 a year" and substituting therefor the following words and figures viz., "future purapad from 1090 at 71 paras. and 6 edangalies of paddy and Rs. 1-9-2 a year till recovery of possession and future revenue from 1904 at Rs. 87-4-2 a year till recovery of possession with interest at six per cent.

per annum on the purapad and the revenue from the due dates."

On the question of costs we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in decreeing two sets. The Circar is not a necessary party to this litigation and it was the plaintiff that originally impleaded it. He must, therefore, pay its costs, and not the first defendant. However, as there is no memo. of objections by the Circar, we must modify the lower Appellate Court's decree by deleting the portion relating to the costs of the 32nd defendant.

On the question of interest, we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge.

Now comes the question relating to the appointment of three successive Commissioners by the First Court. As the procedure followed by the lower Court appeared to us to find no support in law, and as we were informed that the practice followed in this case is typical of what happens in valuing improvements in almost every Malabar suit, we think it desirable to express our emphatic disapproval of the course followed. What happened was apparently this: at first a Commissioner was appointed to make the valuation. His conclusions were objected to by both the parties. Thereupon the first defendant asked for the appointment of a second Commissioner. The plaintiff consented to this course. Once again, objections were raised to the report. A third Commissioner was appointed with the consent of the parties. He sent in his report and valuation. Again objections were raised. The Munsif then said that he preferred the valuation of the first Commissioner as he was a respectable Vakil, and the Subordinate Judge has agreed with him.

This procedure seems to us to be wholly wrong. Ordinarily when the report of a Commissioner is objected to, the Court should hear the objections in open Court and decide with the aid of such evidence as it may take whether the valuation should be varied and, if so, in what direction. This is the obvious duty of the Court. There may be cases in which the Commissioner had so totally misconceived his duties as to render his report and valuation useless as a basis for a decision. In such cases, no doubt, a new Commissioner may be appointed. This would mean that the old report and valuation were superseded. But to regard the reports and valuations of the three Commissioners as available data from which the option of the District Munsif to choose any one of them is to be exercised is opposed to every principle governing Courts in such matters. It means that the Court abdicates its function of deciding the matter on hearing the objection and reserves to itself the privilege of selecting one of the reports as its decision.

It certainly encourages a haphazard and careless selection of Commissioners. It subjects parties to unnecessary and avoidable expense, and encumbers the records with useless papers. In our opinion this practice should be put an end to at once. We want it to be distinctly understood that the filing of objections to a report is no ground for appointing another Commissioner, and that in all cases where a second Commissioner is appointed to do the same work, the reason for adopting such a course must be recorded in writing to enable the Appellate Court to see whether the judicial discretion has been properly exercised.

In the present case in law there is only one possible meaning that can be attached to the procedure followed. It must be assumed that the Court regarded the work done by the first Commissioner to be so bad as to entail the rejection of his report, and that with the consent of the parties it appointed a second Commissioner. Similarly, it must be taken that the Court rejected the second valuation also and asked for a third valuation from another Commissioner to which the parties consented. In this view, the District Munsif was not justified in regarding the first valuation as still alive and in basing his judgment upon it. What he ought to have done is to hear objections to the third valuation and report in open Court and to decide whether any and if so what modification should be made in that report taking evidence if necessary. We must now direct the Subordinate Judge to do this. He will pass a fresh award regarding the value of improvements claimed by the first defendant in the light of the above observations and sumbit fresh findings thereon to this Court in six weeks. Seven days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam submitted the following valued improvements in accordance with the account of the first Commissioner while three commissions had been issued in all. His conclusions were substantially accepted by my predecessor-in-office, Mr. Kannan. In second appeal, it has been held that only the result of the third and last commission should be taken into account and the appeal has been remanded in order that a fresh finding may be submitted on the question of the value of improvements claimed by the first defendant on the suit properties in the light of the observations contained in their Lordships' judgment and taking evidence if necessary.

2. The matter has been tried and heard in accordance with the order of remand. For the defendant no fresh evidence has been produced. The plaintiff has re-called his 10th witness and examined him. He has also examined one of two of the Vakils to whom the third commission was issued by the District Munsif.

3. For the plaintiff the Commissioner's account is objected to in respect of four items:—(1) the Pathayapura or building; (2) fruit trees; (3) trees classed as firewood; (4) a tank.

4 Before dealing in detail with the points raised, a few general observations may be submitted. Although the plaintiff has made a show of objection to the Commissioner's account the state of the record stands where it was before the remand The first Commissioner who was originally examined as the plaintiff's 10th witness has again been examined. But his evidence does not carry the matter any further. Mr. Sesha Aiyar, one of the two Vakils appointed under the third commission warrant, has now been examined. But the result proved so disappointing to the plaintiff that he did not wish to examine the other Vakil, Mr. A M. Narayana Menon, who was the joint Commissioner with Mr. Sesha Aiyar. I may state that the evidence now produced does not materially shake the general correctness of the account submitted by these Commissioners.

5. The first point argued was with reference to the building in the Kalam. The plaintiff's Vakil contended that it is a very old structure the timber of which in parts had become decayed and that the deduction of 10 per cent. from its value made by the Commissioners is far too low and that there should be a reduction of 25 per cent. at least. The value of the timber as found by the Commissioner was also subjected to strictures. Exhibits AA and E show that the building must have been in existence for more than 50 years. The defendant's first witness admits that it was built in 1043 M. E. which corresponds to 1867. It is also not denied that in portions the timber has suffered by age. It is usual in cases of old buildings like this to allow a reduction of 20 to 25 per cent. on the estimated value. I think the 10 per cent. allowed is far too low in view of the circumstances appearing in the evidence and I would allow a reduction of 20 per cent.

6. As regards fruit trees, trees fit for fuel, and the tank in question, I see no reason to think that the Commissioner's account is not right. Some arguments were advanced with regard to the price of fuel. But I think Mr. Sesha Aiyer's evidence shows satisfactorily that his estimate is a fair one.

7. The matter which, next after the Pathayapura, received most attention at the bar, was the value fixed for tamarind trees in the property. The contention was that fruit bearing tamarind trees should not be included in the category of fuel trees. I cannot agree. The evidence of the plaintiff's 10th witness shows that the practice in all these cases of improvements is not to treat them as fruit trees but only as trees fit for fuel. The District Munsif refers to the practice and my experience has been to the same effect. In my opinion, their value should be only like the other trees classed as fuel.

8. My finding is that the third Commissioner's account respecting the value of improvements is correct except that a 20 per cent reduction should be made on the value of the Pathayapura building.

This appeal came on for final hearing before their Lordships Sir William Ayling, Acting Chief Justice, and Krishnaswami Rao, J.

JUDGMENT.—As regards the classification of tamarind trees as fruit trees Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar is not in a position to say that a reversal of the lower Court's decision will favourably affect his client in the case and we do not, therefore, feel called upon to decide it.

We accept the finding of the lower Court. A decree will be drawn up in accordance therewith. The additional amount now allowed to defendant will bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date on which plaintiff got possession. Six months from this date allowed for payment. No costs in this Court.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1673 OF 1919.

March 1, 1922.

Present :—Mr. Justice Greaves and Mr. Justice Ghose.

GOPINATH JALUA—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

BHAJAHARI DAS ADHIKARI AND OTHERS PLAINTIFFS—KAILASH CHANDRA MAITY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Decision in rent suit on question of title—Suit for possession by receipt of rent - Limitation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, applicability of.

The plaintiff brought a suit for a decree for possession of land upon a declaration that he was entitled to receive rent at a certain rate from defendant No. 2 upon a finding and a declaration that the plaintiff was a tenant under defendant No. 1 in respect of the land under claim. The defendant No. 2 was on the land holding under defendant No. 1 but the plaintiff claimed that he took a settlement of the land from defendant No. 1 and that as a result of such settlement the defendant No. 2 was bound to pay the rent to him which he had previously paid to the first defendant. Previous to the present suit the plaintiff had unsuccessfully brought a rent-suit against the second defendant in which the latter had put forward the defence that he held the land not under the plaintiff but under the first defendant who was no party to that suit:

Held, (1) that as the present suit was not a suit as between landlord and tenant, the special rule of limitation contained in Art. 3, Sch III of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application and the general law of limitation was applicable to the suit; [p. 474, col. 1.]

(2) that the decision in the previous rent-suit on the question of the plaintiff's title did not operate as res judicata even though the question of title had to be investigated in that suit by reason of the fact that defendant No. 2 was previously on the land. [p. 474, col. 1.]

Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich, 26 C. 428; 3 C. W. N. 266; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 876 F. B.), followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Midanpore, dated the 19th May 1919, affirming the decree of the Munsif, Second Court at Tamluk, dated the 30th August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, (with him Babu Makunda Behari Mullick), for the Appellants.

—Plaintiff had brought rent suit against defendant No 2. My defence was that I held land under defendant No. 1 and not plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 is the superior landlord admittedly. The suit was dismissed on 17th April 1913. Appeal against that decision was also dismissed in December 1914. Plaintiff then instituted the present suit in 1916. He prayed for decree for possession upon a declaration of his title to rent at Rs. 20 15 per annum. The disputed land with other lands belonged to Dhananjoy who mortgaged 5 bighas to plaintiff No. 1 and subsequently all the lands to Harakissen. A third mortgage was executed in favour of Nitai in respect of some lands. Then there was a fourth mortgage in favour of Bhagabati of some lands including the disputed lands. Plaintiff No. 1 in execution of his mortgage decree purchased the 5 bighas of land and a personal decree for the balance, in execution of which he purchased 24 bighas including the lands in dispute. The second mortgagee brought his suit and sold all the lands which were purchased by defendant No. 1. Plaintiff's purchase was in 1900. The suit by the second mortgagee was in 1902. Plaintiff was no party to it. There was a dispute between plaintiff and defendant No. 1 which was settled according to plaintiff in this way that he would be recognised by defendant No. 1 on payment of arrears of rent. The plaintiff's case is that the land in dispute was not settled with plaintiff. In the rent suit defence plea was upheld by both Courts. In the present suit plaintiff does not seek to eject me. Subsequently, however, he wanted to amend the plaint by praying for ejectment. That was disallowed by the First Court which decreed the suit. There was an appeal and a cross-objection by plaintiff regarding his amendment. The cross-objection was disallowed and the appeal by me was dismissed. The questions to be decided are (1) whether Art. 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to the case and (2) if so, whether two years would run from the date of the appellate judgment. Art. 3, Schedule III, prescribes two years from the date of dispossession. I submit the present suit being one for possession and against the landlord Art. 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply. As regards the second question, see Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (1) and Ramasawmy Mudali v. Valayuda Mudali (2). There it has been held that an appeal from the decree is a voluntary risk on the part of the plaintiff and that limitation would run from the date of the judgment of the First Court. The present suit is more than two years from that date. My submission is that the Courts ought to have held that the present suit was barred by res judicata. In the previous suit the question decided was that plaintiff did not hold these lands from defendant. The Court below holds that defendant No. 1, not being a party to that suit that question does not operate as res judicata. Refers to Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (3). The reliefs sought in the two suits are the same.

Mr. S. C. Maity, Counsel (with him Babu Apurba Charan Mookerjee), for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the second defendant against a decision of the Third Subordinate Judge of Midnapore confirming a decision of the Munsif. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for a decree for possession of the land upon a declaration being made that he is entitled to get an annual rental of Rs 20 15 from defendant No. 2 upon a finding and a declaration that the plaintiff No. 1 is tenant under the defendant No. 1 in respect of the land under claim and the second prayer involved a decree against the first defendant who is not an appellant before us.

The First Court decreed the suit in part declaring the plaintiff's title to the ka land in suit, declaring him to be a tenant under defendant No. 1, and declaring defendant No. 2 to be a tenant on the land at a yearly rent of Rs. 20-15 under plaintiff No. 1, and the decree provided that plaintiff No. 1 was to get possession of the plaint land through the defendant No. 2 and that he should be entitled to realise rent at the rate mentioned above. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal. There is evidently a mistake in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge when he says, "the cross-objection is decreed without costs;" for the cross-objection was clearly rejected by him as appears from page 27 of the paper-book. It appears that some years ago, the plaintiff sued defendant No. 2 for rent in a rent suit and defendant No. 2 in that suit put forward the defence that he held the land not under the plaintiff but under defendant No. 1. It appears that defendant No. 2 was on the land holding under defendant No. 1, but the plaintiff claims that he took a settlement from defendant No. 1 of the land, and consequently from such settlement the defendant No. 2 was bound to pay the rent to him which he had previously paid to the first defendant. It appears that certainly one, if not two, decrees for rent had been obtained by the plaintiff against the second defendant before the rent suit now under consideration was brought. At page 26 of the paper-book we find it stated, that after the close of the litigation with one Dhananjoy, the plaintiff sued defendant No. 2 for rent of this particular land and obtained a decree at the admitted rate of rent in 1906. However, in spite of this the rent suit was decided against the plaintiff the Trial Court dismissing the suit on the 17th April 1913, an appeal was preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the Trial Court which was dismissed on the 4th December 1914. This suit was commenced on the 8th July 1916 and two points are urged before us on behalf of the appellant. First of all, he says that the claim is barred by limitation and that the special period of limitation provided by Schedule III, Art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies, that is to say, the two years' rule of limitation, and he urges that the time began to run, not from the decision of the appeal on the 4th December 1914, but from the decision of the First Court on the 17th April 1913 and, consequently, he contends that inasmuch as the present suit was commenced on the 8th July 1916, it is barred by limitation on the assumption that the special period of limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act applies. Secondly, it is said that between the second defendant and the plaintiff the rent suit operates as res judicata, so far as the claim against the second defendant is concerned. What is said is this, that having regard to the fact that the 2nd defendant was not settled on the land by the plaintiff but had previously been on the land, it was necessary for the Court to go into the question of the title of the plaintiff which the plaintiff claimed to derive from the defendant No 1 and, consequently, it is said that although the judgment in the rent suit may not operate as res judicata as far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned as he was not a party to the rent suit, yet as regards defendant No. 2, as the question of title was gone into, the matter is res judicata as between him, the second defendant and the plaintiff. So far as the first point is concerned, we do not think that, this (in spite of the argument addressed to us) can be deemed to be a suit to which the provisions of Schedule III, Art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act apply, that is to say, it is not a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff within the meaning of Art. 3; shortly stated it is not a suit as between landlord and tenant so as to bring it within the provisions of that Article. The result is that the point raised with regard to limitation does not arise. The appellant is, we think, perfectly correct in saying that if Art. 3, Schedule III, applies, time will begin to run from the decision of the First Court. But of course, this is merely a matter of academic interest if, as we hold, Art. 3, Schedule III has no application and the general law of limitation applies.

So far as the question of res judicata is concerned it seems to us that this argument is concluded by the decision in the case of Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (3) and we think that this decision directly covers the present case, and in so saying we are not unmindful of the reasons whereby the learned Vakil sought to distinguish this decision from the present case, namely, that as the defendant No. 2 was previously on the land the question of title had to be investigated.

In the result both points fail and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

It is pointed out by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be modified to this extent so that it may appear that the cross-objection was in fact rejected, we so modify the decree.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 7—Minor —Guardianship of property—Relatives desiring appointment of somebody else—Mother, claims of, if can be ignored.

The bare desire of the relatives of a minor that some person other than the mother should be appointed a guardian of his property is not a sufficient reason for depriving the mother of her recognised claim to be the guardian of her minor child's property, if she is otherwise fit to be appointed as such by her character and capacity. [p. 475, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 13th May 1921, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 90 of 1920.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge has found that the allegations made against the appellant that she was mismanaging and wasting the property, that she was unchaste, and that she had ill-treated one of the minors have not been sufficiently established. He has also held that the applicant was not a fit person to be appointed the guardian. He has, however, appointed the Official Receiver a guardian of the property of the minors. He states his grounds for making this appointment as follows:

"The other relatives of the minors who appeared state that a guardian should be appointed by the Court, and I think that a guardian of the property should be so appointed."

All that these relatives had urged before the Court was that the property was being wasted. The District Judge found that the charge of mismanagement and waste was not established. In view of this finding all that we are left with and all that the District Judge has acted upon is the bare desire of the relatives that some person other than the mother should be appointed. This is not a sufficient reason for depriving the widowed mother of her recognised claim to be the guardian of her minor children's property. This appeal is not opposed by the guardian appointed by the District Judge. The mother is herself willing to be appointed guardian and as it is not found that she has unfitted by her character and capacity or by her previous relations with the minors' property to be the guardian of that property; or that her appointment will not be justified in the interests of the minors, I hereby appoint her guardian of the property of the minors, and remand the case to the District Judge's Court for such action as may be deemed necessary under section 34, Guardians and Wards Act. I make no order as to costs.

Appeal—Preliminary decree, appeal against—Final decree, passing of—Court, jurisdiction of, to decide appeal, if affected.

There is a difference between cases where the final decree is passed before an appeal against the preliminary decree is preferred and when it is passed after the appeal is preferred. In the latter case the Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to decide the appeal which is already before it.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 20th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Netrakona, dated the 29th January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellants.—The other side too appealed to the lower Appellate Court against the preliminary decree after the final decree was passed, so their appeal too should fail and the final decree will stand. The preliminary objections taken by my friend are highly technical.

On the merits, refers to Baikuntha Nath [Kulada Prosad] v. Ramanand Patnaik (1). The Appellate Court is incompetent to entertain an appeal against a preliminary decree after the passing of the final decree. The final decree stands. The other side ought to have appealed against the final decree also.

Babu Annada Charan Karkoon, for the Respondents,—Refers to Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (2). I specially rely on the case reported as Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (2).

The appeal against the preliminary decree was filed before the judgment granting the final decree was delivered.

Babu Birendra Kumar De briefly replied.

Babu Brij Mohan Majomdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal several preliminary objections have been taken, but we do not think it necessary to consider them as we hold that the appeal fails on the merits.

On the merits the only point taken was that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal against a preliminary decree in a partition suit after the final decree had been passed in that suit. Reliance is placed on the case of Baikuntha Nath [Kulada Prosad] v. Ramanand Patnaik (1). But the facts of the present case are similar to those of the case of Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (2). In the report in Bai- kuntha Nath [Kulada Prosad] v. Ramanand Patnaik (2) there seems to be an error in the reference to the case of Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (3). Obviously the case meant to be distinguished was that mentioned above Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (2). As pointed out in that case there is a difference between cases where the final decree is passed before the appeal is preferred and where it is passed after the appeal is preferred. In the present case the appeal against the preliminary decree was filed on the 21st March 1917 and the judgment granting the final decree was delivered on the 2nd June 1917. Following the case of Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (2) we hold that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was competent.

This being the only point taken on behalf of the appellants this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 16th June 1921, in Civil Suit No. 35 of 1916.

Messrs. B. R. Pandharker and V. V. Chitale for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Gupta and A. V. Khare, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Appellant, Hazarilal, obtained a preliminary foreclosure decree upon two mortgages against certain mortgagors and the respondent, Hazarimal, an attaching creditor of the mortgagors. One item of the property included in the decree was a 2/3rd interest in Mouza Sarra with all rights excepting cultivating rights in sir. This decree is dated the 15th January 1917. During the pendency of the suit Hazarimal purchased the mortgaged property in auction on the 30th November 1916. On the 12th June 1917 Hazarimal took a surrender of the occupancy rights of the mortgagors in the sir land of Mouza Sarra and on the 4th July 1917 leased the land which, it is contended, had become khudkasht to his wife, Falabai. An appeal was filed in this Court from the mortgage-decree. In the appellate decree which is dated the 7th September 1917 the description of Mouza Sarra was altered so that it stood as follows:

"Entire malguzari of Mouza Sarra, Pragana and Tahsil Amarwara, District Chhindwara, No. 805, Thak bast No. 698, area 689·89 acres, Jama Rs. 316-7-0 including cesses with the jungle, mungo, mango-groves, mahua, tendu, jalkar, bankar, phal ar, phul kar, wells, tanks baolis, cultivated and uncultivated lands, etc., appertaining to the village and with all rights, tenancy and proprietary, and khudkasht Nos. 61-2, 69 3, 83-1, 83-4, 98,99, 100, 37 4, 63 2, 63 7, 34-2, 63-5, 63-6, 51, 37 5, 49, 59-2, 61-5, 63 10 and 104-2, total area 19·27 acres, which exist at present and may exist hereafter, except the sir land."

On the 26th April 1918 a final decree was passed in which Mouza Sarra is described as in this Court's decree. On the 10th September 1919 this Court amended its decree by substituting the expression "except the cultivating rights in sir land" for "except the sir land" in the schedule of property attached to the decree. On the 30th October 1919 Hazarilal was put in possession of the mortgaged property including field No. 23 which was sir. Hazarimal objected to the possession of this field being given to the decree holder and his objection was allowed on appeal to this Court on the ground that under the final decree as it stood at the time of the execution the decree-holder was not entitled to claim possession of this field. This judgment is dated the 24th February 1921. On the 16th August 1920 Hazarilal had put in an application for amendment of the final decree by substitution of the expression "except the cultivating rights in sir land" in place of "except the sir land," so as to bring it into conformity with the preliminary decree of this Court. This application was allowed by the lower Court and the necessary amendment was made on the 14th May 1921. On the 8th March 1921 Hazarimal had applied to the lower Court for restoration of the field. This application was opposed by Hazarilal on the ground that having got the final decree amended in conformity with the preliminary decree he was entitled to retain possession as only cultivating rights in sir were excluded and not sir land. Hazarilal admitted before the lower Court that the field had become khudkasht of Hazarimal. The lower Court held that if the field was khudkasht it was not mentioned in the decree as it stood and if it was sir the decree-holder was not entitled to physical possession as the cultivating rights in sir were excluded from it. It directed restoration of the field to Hazarimal. After the amendment of the final decree Hazarilal applied to be formally put in possession of the field. His application was rejected on the 16th June 1921 in view of the order dated the 14th May 1921 restoring possession to Hazarimal. Hazarilal appeals from both these orders. First Appeal No. 64 of 1921 is from the order dated the 16th June 1921 refusing to put Hazarilal in possession of the field and first Appeal No 65 of 1921 is from the order dated the 14th May 1921 restoring possession to Hazarimal.

It is contended that the land having become khudkasht when Hazarimal got a surrender of the ex-proprietary tenant right on the 12th June 1917 Hazarilal was entitled under the decree to its possession along with the village even though it was not mentioned by number in the decree and that in any case it was covered by the general words "which may exist hereafter." As regards the latter part of the contention it must be said that the words "which may exist hereafter," if they are held to be applicable, as contended, to the khudkasht numbers mentioned immediately before, do not express any clear idea. It is difficult to understand to what an expression like "Field No. so and so which may exist hereafter" can refer. So long as the decree stands worded as it is, this expression cannot help the decree holder in his present claim. As regards the first part of the contention that all khudkasht land goes with the village, if the decree had not specified particular khudkasht fields, this field as khudkasht could have been claimed by Hazarilal. But since the decree specifies the khudkasht fields by their numbers it seems to me that it is not open to him to claim one that is not so specified. The decree does not refer in a general way to lands held in khudkasht right as it does to tenancy and proprietary rights. Again although the field is said to have become khudkasht before the preliminary decree of this Court was amended, no attempt was made to have it included in the list of khudkasht fields at that time. It seems to me that on the decree as it stands Hazarilal is not entitled to claim field No. 23. Both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 20 in each appeal.

Eviction by title paramount means eviction by a title superior to the titles both of lessor and lessee against which neither is enabled to make a defence. [p. 479, col. 2.]

BANKA BEHARI GHOSH v. MADAN MOHAN ROY.

To constitute eviction by title paramount it is not necessary that there should be a forcible expulsion of the tenant, nor is it necessary that the tenant should actually go out of possession, and if, upon a claim being made by a person with title paramount, the tenant consents by an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking. But an eviction, whether actual or constructive, must be by a party having a good title. [p 479, col]

Section 10-, clause c) of the Transfer of Property Act, provides for an implied covenant to the lessee to hold a lease without interruption and the clause is wide enough to include disturbance of possession by a person with a paramount title. But it does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry. [p. 480, cols. 1 & 2.]

The plaintiff let out a certain plot of land to the defendant who obtained possession and was in possession, when a third party S. brought a suit for possession against him alone for a portion of that same land and obtained a decree for possession by receipt of rent. In a suit by the plaintiff for rent the defence was that the defendant had been ejected from a portion of the land by a title paramount and that he was, therefore, entitled to a proportionate abatement of rent :

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The defence was that the defendant had been ejected from a portion of the land by a title paramount and that he was, therefore, entitled to a proportionate abatement of rent.

It appears that the Administrator-General of Bengal representing the estate of Kumar Indra Chundra Singha Bahadur brought a suit for possession in respect of the land the rent of which is in dispute in the present suit, and certain other lands, against certain persons representing the estate of one Haripada Shaha and who may be referred to in this judgment as the "Shahas". He claimed the land as appertaining to his estate Sujapur. The Sahas claimed the land as appertaining to their village Juranpur. The suit, however, was decreed and Madan Mohan Roy (the plaintiff in the present suit) purchased the decree and the decretal land from the decree-holder, and in execution of the decree obtained delivery of possession of the land through Court. While in khas possession of the decretal land he let out 279 bighas out of the same to the defendant in 1903. Subsequently, however, the Government settled a portion of the lands of which the rent is claimed in this suit together with certain other land as re formed land (bed of a river) with the Shahas on the 1st April 1903. On the strength of that settlement, the Shahas brought a suit for recovery of possession of some lands including a portion of the land for which the rent is in dispute, against the defendant, Banka Behari Ghose alone. Banka in that suit, among other defence, set up the title of the present plaintiff, Madan Mohan Roy, and also pleaded that the latter should be made a party to the suit. This was disallowed. The Court, however, held that the defendant was a bona fide tenant and should not be ejected. The Sahas were, accordingly, given a decree for possession by receipt of rent from the defendant in respect of 131 bighas in May 1912. There was an appeal and a second appeal and ultimately the decree of the Court of first instance was upheld.

The present suit was instituted by Madan Mohan, the plaintiff, for rent in respect of the 279 bighas of land which was let out by him to the defendant, Banka Behari, who pleaded that there should be an abatement of rent in respect of 131 bighas of land, with regard to which there was a decree obtained by the Shahas against him. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that the defendant was not entitled to claim abatement of rent, as the defendant was not dispossessed, and the plaintiff was not a party to the suit upon which the defendant relies in claiming abatement of rent. The defendant has appealed to this Court and two questions have been raised on his behalf. The first is that it is not necessary that the tenant should be physically dispossessed by a person having a title paramount, and secondly, that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should have been a party to the decree in the previous suit which resulted in eviction, in order to entitle the defendant to claim abatement of rent.

So far as the first contention is concerned, it is true that a forcible expulsion is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the tenant should actually go out of possession, and that if, upon a claim being made by a person with title paramount, he consents by an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 4th Edition, 169. But an eviction, whether actual or constructive, must be by a party having a good title. There is no doubt that the Shahas obtained a decree against the defendant. But that is not sufficient to show that they had a title superior to that of the plaintiff of the present suit. The learned Pleader for the appellant relies upon the case of Rani Dassi v. Asutosh Roy Chowdhury (1) and the case of Noorjan Sardar v. Bimola Sundari Guptya (2). In the first case no question of the lessor's title was in controversy. It was assumed for the purposes of the judgment that the lessor had no title. It was a suit by a lessee for abatement of rent against the lessor, and the only question which the Court had to consider was what was the quantity of land for which the tenant could claim abatement of rent. There was no suggestion in that case that the person who dispossessed the plaintiff in that suit was not a person having a title paramount. In the second case cited above, the decision was that where a tenant is induced to attorn to the superior landlord by an offer to accept a reduced rent the doctrine of quasi-eviction does not apply, and in the course of their judgment, the learned Judges referred to the general principle enunciated in Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 4th Edition at page 169. The question which we have to decide in the present case was not dealt with in either of the cases cited above.

In the case of Neale v. Mackenzie (3) Lord Denman, C. J., observed that eviction by title paramount means "eviction by a title superior to the titles both of lessor and lessee; against which neither is enabled to make a defence." Here although the Shahas have obtained a decree against the defendant, it cannot be said that they have got a title superior to that of the present plaintiff who was no party to that suit, and had no opportunity of showing that (he?) had got a title to the land.

It is found in the present case that after the plaintiff had obtained delivery of possession through Court, he was put into khas possession of the land in suit and he then let out 279 bighas to the defendant. The defendant obtained possession and was in possession, when the Shahas brought the suit against him alone and obtained a decree. We do not think, under the circumstances, that the plaintiff was bound by any implied covenant, which the learned Pleader for the appellant set up to restore the defendant to possession unless it is shown that the Shahas have a title superior to that of the plaintiff. We have been referred to certain passage from Redman on Landlord and Tenant, 7th Edition at page 263 where the learned author says: "Any proceeding in a Court of Law interfering with the title and possession of the land amounts to a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, e. g., an action of ejectment or for trespass." But the proposition is qualified by the words "by a person having a lawful title." See also Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edition, 812, where it is stated: "The express covenant for quiet enjoyment without any interruption or disturbance by the lessor, his heirs or assigns, even though followed by the words 'or by any other person or persons whomsoever,' does not extend to the unlawful acts of third persons having no title. The law will never adjudge that the lessor covenants against the wrongful acts of strangers, except where his covenant is express to that purpose, for the law itself does defend every man against wrong, and therefore, though one warrants land to another expressly (or covenants for quiet enjoyment generally) yet he does not defend against tortious entries."

The learned Pleader for the appellant referred to a passage in Redman that the landlord is allowed to come in, in order to show that he has a good title, and to maintain the possession of the lessee. It is not stated, however, that the landlord is bound to come in a suit brought against the lessee by a person who has not a superior title. There is also no authority for the contention raised on behalf of the appellant that where a third party has obtained a decree against the lessee the onus is shifted on the landlord to prove that such a third party has got no title.

In the case of Muktar Ahmad v. Rani Sundar Koer (4), it was pointed out that section 108, clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, provided for an implied covenant to the lessee to hold a lease without interruption and that the clause was wide enough to include disturbance of possession by a person with a paramount title. It was also observed that even before the Transfer of Property Act it was held that, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, a landlord is under an implied obligation to indemnify the tenant against ouster or disturbance in his possession by his own acts or by the acts of those who claim under or have paramount right to him but not against the wrongful acts of strangers. The same view has been taken of the section in Shepherd and Brown's notes to sub-section (c) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act at page 404, 7th Edition. There it was pointed out: "The covenant in the unqualified form followed in the section covers the case of the superior landlord, or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising power of re-entry or otherwise dispossessing the lessee. But it does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry" We do not think, therefore, that there was any covenant to protect the tenant from persons having no title superior to that of the plaintiff, or that the decree obtained against the tenant shifted on the plaintiff the burden of proving that the third party had no title. In the case of Rung Lall Singh v. Lalla Roodur Pershad (5) the learned Judges observed: "The defendant accepted a lease from and was let in possession by the lessors. He has not shown in this suit that his lessors had no title and that the person who ousted him had a title, and he has relied for that purpose upon the result of certain suits, one of which in no way affects this property at all and the other in no way affects the title of his lessors who were not parties to it. Therefore, the defence which he attempts to raise wholly fails." The observations apply to this case also. It is no doubt hard that the defendant who has set up the title of the plaintiff in the suit brought against him by the Shahas should have to pay rent to them as well as to the plaintiff in respect of the 131 bighas.

It is not for us, however, to express any opinion as to what steps should be taken by the defendant for being relieved from such a position. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff was no party to that suit, we must hold that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right.

The appeal is dismissed with half costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C.J.—This is a reference from the Presidency Small Cause Court, Bombay, under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. The question referred to us is: "Are teji mandi contracts to be held as being wagers on account of their apparent nature and characteristics alone without any other proof of the intentions of the contracting parties, or is evidence necessary to prove that such contracts were intended to be wagers?"

It appears from the terms of the reference that the learned Judge has felt some doubt on the point in view of the practice that is stated to be prevalent in the Presidency Small Cause Court of treating such contracts as wagers without any further proof that they are wagers. The learned Judge was of opinion that the practice was not justified and that in every case of such contracts as in every other case it must be proved whether the contracts were in the nature of wagers, that is, whether the common intention of the contracting parties at the time of the contract was to deal only in differences and under no circumstances to call for or give delivery.

In the first place, I desire to point out that this is hardly a question of law, or usage having the force of law, and I am not sure whether the reference could have been made. It was not only open to the Judge, but I think it was his duty, to decide, according to his view of the evidence in the particular case before him, giving such weight as he might have thought proper to the practice referred to as obtaining in that Court.

But as the question is referred, I would answer the question in the negative, holding that it is necessary in such contracts as in any other contract to prove the common intention of the parties as a question of fact. In my opinion, the mere fact that the contract is a teji contract or a mandi contract or a teji-mandi contract with double option makes no difference to this point. It may be that if a party desires to prove that a particular contract of that description was a wagering contract, he may be able to do so with slight proof; and, under the circumstances of any particular case, it may be that the Court may be able to decide, without much outside evidence, as to whether that contract was in the nature of a wager or not. But to my mind it is essentially a question of fact which must be answered on the evidence in each case; and the mere fact of its being teji-mandi contract is not by itself sufficient to take it out of the ordinary rule that the party, who pleads that the contract is void as it is in the nature of a wager, has to prove that fact.

The practice is probably due to certain observations in Jessiram Jagannath v. Tulsidas Damodhar (1), and in the earlier case of Ramchandra v. Gangabison (2). The observations in Jassiram's case (1) at page 272* clearly show to my mind that it is really unsafe to lay down any general proposition in this matter; and whatever the opinion formed by a particular Court on the evidence in that particular case may be, the only general proposition which, in my opinion, can be safely enunciated is that the fact of the contract being a wager must be proved by the evidence in the case on the essential point whether the common intention of the contracting parties was to deal only in differences. It is hardly necessary to refer to any authorities on this point. Having regard to the nature of these contracts, in my opinion, it is neither possible nor desirable to lay down any general rule that they must be presumed to be wagering contracts without any proof as to the common intention of the contracting parties. There is a recent judgment of Mr. Justice Kincaid in Manubhai v. Keshavji (3), where the same view is indicated. We do not desire to express any opinion on the evidence in this case, and by answering the question referred to us, we do not mean to say anything more than this that on the evidence in the case it is for the Court to decide whether in this particular case the contracts were wagering contracts or not.

Costs to be costs in the cause and to be taxed as on the Original Side.

CRUMP, J.—I agree to the answer proposed to the question propounded by the Court of Small Causes. The difficulty that I feel in this matter is that I do not precisely apprehend what is the point of law that is submitted to us. The question as framed is: "Are agreements of teji and mandi necessarily to be held as wagers on account of their nature and characteristics alone, or is evidence necessary to prove that the contracts were intended to be wagers?"

Now, if it is to be taken that we are asked whether as a matter of law such contracts are necessarily to be held as wagers, then the answer clearly must be in the negative. For it is not even suggested that there is any rule of evidence or any other rule of law which can be held to exclude evidence as to the true nature of such contracts. It may be that, as a matter of fact, it has been found in practice that a large number of these contracts are wagering contracts, but that is no ground on which any rule of law can be based. All that can be said is that there is no legal presumption that a teji or mandi contract is a wagering contract and that it must be dealt with as any other contract, and that the rules that have been laid down for determining whether a contract is a wagering contract or not are applicable to this case just as much as to other contracts. The test is well known. Where it is shown that a common intention of the parties was that in no case delivery was to be taken or given but that in all cases differences should be paid, then the parties are wagering. It is impossible to my mind to go beyond that and it in effect furnishes the answer to the question propounded.

N. K.

Answer accordingly.

Jurisdiction—Partition, suit for—Title, questions of, decision of—Conflicting claims as to shares, determination of—Equity and Law.

All persons who have an interest in the partition are proper parties to a partition suit and matters in controversy amongst persons so interested in the partition must be decided in the suit. [p. 486, col. 2.]

A suit for partition may and does often involve the investigation of disputed questions of title: an attempt to avoid them can only lead to needless multiplicity of litigation, and there is no reason why such questions should not be decided in the course of the suit for partition. [p. 485, cols. 1 & 2.]

ANNAPURNA DEBYA v. AMIYA NATH BANERJEE.

The Courts in India, having as they do, jurisdiction to administer both legal and equitable remedies, may, in a suit for partition, determine issues of title, investigate disputes between different parties claiming the same share, and then proceed with the partition so as to dispose of the whole controversy between them [p. 486, col. 2.]

Where there is conflicting claim to share in the land under the same right under which partition is sought the determination of the conflict is incidental to the partition and cannot be avoided before partition is directed Such a case does not fall within the category of claims utterly hostile where each demands not a share but the whole. [p. 487, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, 24-Pergannas, dated the 18th of December 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohes Chandra Banerjee (with him Babu Rama Prosad Mookerjee), for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 4 is the appellant. The appeal is directed against the preliminary decree in a partition suit. The facts of the case briefly are these. The properties belonged to one Girish Chandra who died in 1899 leaving a Will which directed that his properties would be taken in four equal shares by his widow, Golapmani, and three sons, Haripada, Tarapada and Hem Chandra. Haripada died in 1916 leaving his widow the present appellant, Annapurna. Tarapada and his son, Amiya, are defendants Nos. 2 and 1 respectively and Hem Chandra is defendant No. 3. The present suit for partition was brought by the testator's widow Golapmani on the allegation that Annapurna had adopted defendant No. 1, Amiya, and that Annapurna's share had vested in him. I was not originally made a party defendant but I was proposed to act as guardian ad litem of Amiya. On my objection, I was ordered to be joined as defendant on 28th January 1920 and Amiya's father was ordered to act as guardian on 8th March 920. I filed a written statement denying the allegation that I had adopted Amiya as my son. An issue was framed to that effect. The learned Subordinate Judge held on 1st September 1920 that the question of the validity of the adoption need not be determined in this suit and passed the preliminary decree on 18th December 1920 directing that Amiya and myself might represent Haripada's fourth share without prejudice to our respective claims. I submit the learned Judge has erred by not deciding the question of the validity of adoption. There can be no perfect decree unless the present title to the share is determind.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravartty (with him Babu Harendra Nath Mookerjee), for the Plaintiff—Respondent, Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakravartty, for Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Respondents and Babu Brij Mohan Mazumdar, for Defendant No. 3 Respondent), for the Respondents.—I submit the question, as has been rightly held by the Court below, need not be gone into in a partition suit It is quite a different matter and concerns only defendants Nos. 1 and 4 which could be decided in a future suit. All the parties to the suit are not interested in the question. The question is exclusively confined to Haripada's fourth share. It will, therefore, cause grave inconvenience to the other parties which will amount to harassment. I submit on principle the decree of the Sub Judge is right.

Babu Mohes Bhandra Banerjee replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the fourth defendant in a suit for partition of joint family properties. Girish Chandra Banerjee, the founder of the family, is alleged to have made a testamentary disposition on the 24th November 1899, shortly before his death. He left, as his survivors, his widow, Golapmani, and three sons, Haripada, Tarapada and Hem Chandra. He directed that his properties should be taken in four equal shares by his widow and his three sons, subject to the reservation that his widow would not be competent to sell or make a gift of her one-fourth share. The eldest son, Haripada, died on the 19th June 1916, leaving a widow, Annapurna, and three daughters. The second son, Tarapada, has a son Amiya. On the 2nd August 1919, Golapmani, the widow of the testator, instituted the present suit for partition of the estate left by her husband. She alleged that her daughter-in-law, Annapurna, had taken in adoption her grandson, Amiya, with the consequence that the share in the family estate which had devolved on Annapurna as the widow of Haripada had become vested in Amiya. Consequently, on this hypothesis, the persons interested in the joint estate, besides herself, were her sons Tarapada and Hem Chandra and her grandson Amiya; these three were accordingly joined as defendants. The relationship of the members of the family will be clear from the following pedigree:

GRISH CHANDRA BANERJEE (died 1899)
Widow Golapmani, Plaintiff.

Haripada (died 19th June 1916) W. Annapurna defendant No. 4.	Tarapada defendant No. 2.	Hem Chandra defendant No. 3.
Daughters.	Amiya defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff proposed that her daughter in-law, Annapurna, might be appointed guardian ad litem of the alleged adopted son, Amiya, and the usual notices were served accordingly. Annapurna then appeared and intimated to the Court on the 27th December 1919 that she herself was a co-owner in the joint estate as the widow of her husband, Haripada, who had become entitled to a fourth share under the testamentary disposition of his father. The Court thereupon directed on the 28th January 1920, that Annapurna be made a defendant. This was followed by an order on the 18th March 1920, that Tarapada, the father of Amiya, be appointed guardian ad litem of the infant. Written statements were filed in due course and issuses were framed. As Annapurna repudiated the alleged adoption of Amiya, an issue was framed, whether the first defendant, Amiya Nath Banerjee, was the validly adopted son of Haripada Banerjee. On the 1st September 1920, the Subordinate Judge held that the question of the validity of the adoption need not be determined in this suit, and that the partition might be effected, if the first and fourth defendants, namely, Amiya and his alleged adoptive mother Annapurna, both represented the share of Haripada either jointly or separately as they liked. On the 18th December, 1920, the Subordinate Judge made a preliminary decree whereby it was declared that the plaintiff had a fourth share, the second and third defendants a fourth share each, and the heir or representative of Haripada the remaining fourth share. He further directed that, for the present and for the purpose of this suit, the first and fourth defendants might represent this last mentioned share without prejudice to their respective claims. The fourth defendant, Annapurna, has appealed against this decree and has argued that the question of the alleged adoption, raised in the first issue, should be decided before the preliminary decree for partition is made. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail.

In a suit for partition, it is incumbent upon the Court, before the preliminary decree is made, to determine whether the properties included in the suit are the joint properties, as alleged, of the parties to the litigation, In the case before us, by virtue of the testamentary disposition of the admitted owner, the estate vested in his widow and his three sons, in equal shares. Upon the death of the eldest son, the share vested in him devolved on his widow. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the share which had so devolved on the widow of the eldest son of the testator, had been divested as the result of a valid adoption made by her and had passed on to a grandson of the testator. It was on this assertion that the plaintiff did not originally bring before the Court the widow of the eldest son, who would, prima facie and but for the alleged adoption by her, be a co-owner in the joint estate. She intervened at the earliest possible opportunity and was rightly joined as a defendant claiming a share in the joint estate. In these circumstances, it is plain that before the partition is effected, the question of the present title to the share successively vested in the eldest son and his widow should be investigated and determined. The argument on behalf of the respondents, who objected to this enquiry, proceeded on the erroneous assumption that a question cannot be raised and tried in a partition suit unless its solution interests each of the parties to the litigation. Neither authority nor principle has been invoked by the respondents in support of this narrow and restricted view of the scope of a partition suit put forward on their behalf. In suits for partition, questions may and do frequently arise which interest only some of the parties. To take one illustration. There may be no dispute as to the extent of the share claimed by the plaintiff, while there may be a serious controversy as to the respective shares of the defendants inter se. One of the defendants may allege, for instance, that he had acquired a particular share as the preferential heir to a deceased member of the family; this may raise an obscure question of fact or a difficult question of law. Or, again, a defendant may allege that he has acquired title to a share either of the entire estate or of one or more of the properties comprised therein, under a deed executed by another member; this may conceivably involve an enquiry into questions of fact and law not easy to solve. To take another illustration. It frequently happens that, in joint families properties stand in the names of female members. In a suit for partition of the family estate, the plaintiff may include such properties and join the ladies as defendants so that they may be bound by the result of the litigation; if they contend that the properties belong to them personally, the matter must be investigated and decided. To take a third illustration. Some of the properties in such a suit may be claimed as self-acquisitions by one or other of the members and all the members may not be agreed as to their true character; this may render necessary the determination of questions of title involving protracted enquiry. The substance of the matter is that a suit for partition may and does often involve the investigation of disputed questions of title and an attempt to avoid them can only lead to needless multiplicity of litigation. We do not feel pressed by the contention that if this view be adopted, grave inconvenience may be caused to some of the parties, as they will have to be present during the discussion of questions which specially affect others alone. But, as pointed out in Umabai Mangeshrao v. Vithal Vasudeo Shetti (1) and Ramendra Nath Ray v. Jogendra Nath Dass (2), the Court has ample authority to direct the successive trial of the issues separately affecting different defendants and even to record interlocutory judgments thereon to be made the basis of the final judgment at the conclusion of the trial of the whole case. The case now before us is, however, free from such difficulty, for, so far as we can gather from what has happened before us, the trial of the question of the alleged adoption is not likely to embarrass even parties other than the first and fourth defendants. The first, second and third defendants have plainly indicated their preference for the plaintiff rather than for the fourth defendant; and there can be little doubt that they are all keenly interested in the determination of the question, whether the fourth defendant has been effectively divested of the one-fourth share which originally belonged to her husband.

If the matter is examined as one of principle, we cannot discover any substantial reason, why disputed questions of title should not be decided in the course of a suit for partition of joint properties, when we have not two sets of Courts with distinct jurisdictions like those exercised by Courts of Law and Courts of Equity. No doubt, Courts of Equity, in assuming jurisdiction of the subject of partition, disclaimed the authority to determine doubtful questions in regard to the legal title. A refined distinction was sometimes made between a doubtful and a disputed title, and the question was raised whether the mere fact that the defendant disputed the title of the complainant was sufficient to oust the Court of Chancery of its jurisdiction. There are cases in the books where the broad proposition is asserted that whenever the title of the complainant is disputed or suspicious, equity will not proceed with the partition, until the dispute has been settled at law: Slade v. Barlow (3), Bolton v. Bolton (4), Potter v. Waller (5), Rochester (Corporation of) v. Lee (6), Moore v. Kempton (7), Burt v. Hellyar (8). This view has not, however, always commended itself to the Courts, which have sometimes drawn a distinction between a disputed and a suspicious title and have maintained that bare denial does not necessitate a reference to the legal tribunals, in other words, equity has jurisdition to determine whether the title is free from suspicion and to proceed whenever in its judgment the title is clear, Lucas v. King (9), Overton v. Woolfolk (10).

(10) (1838) 6 Dana. 374.

In the case last mentioned, it was emphasised that if a bare denial of the title authorises the dismissal of the Bill, the equitable jurisdiction is placed "at the mercy of every profligate or unconscientious defendant and renders the Court the mere ministerial agent to carry into effect the wishes of parties in cases where there were no matters of controversy between them" Apart from this, whenever a Court of Equity determines that there are serious disputes in regard to the legal title, it will not proceed until those doubts have been judicially determined and removed, and, for this purpose, will stay the suit for a reasonable time with liberty, to the plaintiff to bring such action, as he might be advised, to establish his title; Giffard v. Williams (11). The same principle has been adopted where the defendants set up conflicting titles between themselves, while the title of the complainant was clear; Phelps v. Green (12). But where the Courts which exercise jurisdiction over partition matters are entrusted with more ample powers than a Court of Equity, no necessity exists for referring questions of title for trial by some other tribunal. This was pointed out by the Supreme Court of the United States in Parker v. Kane (13). Campbell, J., observed that it was not necessary to take the opinion of a Court of Law or to stay proceedings in the partition suit until an action of law had been tried to determine the legal title where the powers of the Courts of Law and of Equity were exercised by the same persons; if between the parties to the action for partition, disputes exist as to their rights or interests in any respect, such disputes be litigated and determined in such action. This view has been elaborated in later decisions, one of which, Baca v. Anaya (14), reviews the history of the law on the subject; see also Street v. Benner (15), Weston v. Stoddard (16) and Griffith v. Griffith (17). Freeman on Co-tenancy, Chapter XXIV; Knapp on Partition, page 137. There is obviously much force in the observation of Pope, J. in Baca v. Anaya (14): "We are unable to see the hardship of a system which necessitates the settlement of all questions affecting a given piece of land in one suit, instead of remanding them to be settled by a series of suits. On the contrary, we deem it tending to that despatch and economy in the settlement of legal differences which is the desideratum of jurisprudence. It is a modern response to the ancient appeal, interest republicæ ut sit finis litium." The essence of the matter is that the Court, which is one of general jurisdiction administering both legal and equitable remedies, may determine issues of title, investigate disputes between different parties claiming the same share, and then proceed with the partition so as to dispose of the whole controversy between them. In truth, the limitations attending proceedings in partition are constantly weakening, and the tendency to do full and complete justice to the parties in one action, is becoming irresistible; see Judicature Act, 1873, section 24 (7), Gledhill v. Hunter (18), White v. Pingley (19), Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston (20). Some of the Courts of general jurisdiction in the United States have, indeed, gone so far as to hold that a person claiming to be interested in the entire premises by title paramount may intervene in a suit for partition. It is not necessary for our present purpose to maintain this position, for, apart from the question whether all persons having an interest in the land are proper parties, it is sufficient to hold that all persons who have an interest in the partition are proper parties, and matters in controversy amongst persons so interested in the partition must be decided in the suit. We need not discuss whether an adverse claimant, who has no community of interest with the parties to the suit, is in no view a co-tenant with them but stands out on his own independent right and denies all right in his adversaries, can be drawn into a partition suit for decision of the question of title paramount. But, in any view, the principle appears to us to be undoubtedly sound that where there is conflicting claim to share in the land under the same right under which partition is sought the determination of the conflict is incidental to the partition and cannot be avoided before partition is directed. Such a case does not fall within the category of claims utterly hostile where each demands not a share but the whole.

Our conclusion is that the preliminary decree made by the Subordinate Judge without decision of the controverted title to a fourth share cannot be supported. The appeal must consequently be allowed, the preliminary decree set aside, and the case remanded to the Subordinate Judge to be re tried in accordance with law, after determination of the question of the validity of the alleged adoption. The respondents must pay the appellant her costs in this Court. We assess the hearing fee at fifteen gold mohurs. The costs in the Court below will be costs in the cause.

Under section 13 of the Court Fees Act we direct that the Court-fees paid on the memorandum of appeal be returned to the appellant.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 188 OF 1920.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.

THE TALUKDARI SETTLEMENT OFFICER—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

AKUJI ABHRAM MUSE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Gujrat Talukdars Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888), s. 29B—Notification by Talukdari Settlement Officer—Claims, submission of—Claim already known, whether must also be submitted.

Upon the issue of a Notification under section 29B of the Gujrat Talukdars Act by a Talukdari Settlement Officer, as Managing Officer of a Talukdari estate, every person who has a claim against the estate must give a notice in writing of such claim. The fact that such officer is otherwise aware of a claim—in this case a mortgage—would not save the claimant from the consequences of the failure to give the notice required [p. 488, col. 2; p. 489, col. 1.]

Shankerbhai v Raisingji, 42 Ind. Cas. 908; 19 Bom. L. R. 855 and Purushottam v Rajbai, 4 Ind. Cas. 839; 11 Bom. L. R. 1358; 34 B. 142, referred to.

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge at Broach, in Suit No. 3 of 1917.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 10.

Mr. Dhirajlal Thakore, (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for Respondents Nos. 8 and 9.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was filed by the plaintiff as Talukdari Settlement Officer and manager of the estate of Naharsangji Mehramansingji, the Thakor Saheb of Dehevan, to get possession of certain survey numbers alleged to belong to the Talukdari estate. The suit property had been mortgaged in 1859 by the then talukdar to the predecessors in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 7. It seems that they partitioned amongst themselves the suit property, and dealt with the suit property as if they were owners, executing various mortgage-deeds between 1895 and 1906 which resulted in 16 acres and 24½ gunthas becoming mortgaged to defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 10, while 1 acre and 12½ gunthas of the suit property remaining in possession of the second defendant. The Judge found that defendants Nos. 8 to 10 had been in possession for more than twelve years after the lands had been mortgaged to them, although there seems to be an error with regard to the mortgage of 1903 which was less than twelve years before suit. As the defendants Nos. 1 to 7, mortgagees of the talukdars, represented that they were owners, defendants Nos. 8 to 10 were entitled to rely upon that representation for the purposes of Art. 134 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. The rights of defendants Nos. 8 to 10, to whom defendants Nos. 1 to 7 executed mortgages, would be established after twelve years as against the talukdar, and if he wished to redeem and recover possession of the properties, he would have to pay defendants Nos. 8 to 10 the amount due on the mortgages with regard to which they had been in possession for more than twelve years. The Judge found that the plaintiff's claim to get possession from defendants Nos. 8 to 10 was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, and dismissed the suit with regard to those defendants. The only result of that would be that the plaintiff will have to file another suit against those defendants to recover possession. But, in our opinion, the Judge's decision was wrong. There is no reason why the plaintiff should not join defendants Nos. 8 to 10 in a suit against defendants Nos. 1 to 7. As he was endeavouring to get possession of all the suit properties, and the only result of defendants Nos. 8 to 10 establishing their claims under Art. 134 would be that the plaintiff, in order to get possession of the lands mortgaged to them, would have to pay the amount due on the mortgages executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 7, there is no reason why all those questions should not have been decided in one suit.

Then the Judge has allowed the plaintiff to redeem the plaint lands remaining in possession of defendant No. 2 on payment of Rs. 95 within six months.

The plaintiff appeals against that part of the decree on the ground that he issued notice under section 29B of the Gujrat Talukdars Act, and no answer to the notice was received within six months allowed by that section. The Judge says:

"In so far as defendants Nos. 1 to 7 are concerned, it is clear that during the lifetime of the father of the plaintiff the estate was in the hands of the Talukdari Settlement Officer. He had sent for the original mortgage deed and taken a copy of the deed. He became aware of the claim. It was not necessary for defendants Nos. 1 to 7 to have put in a claim again. Considering these circumstances I am of opinion that the section is not applicable to the facts of the present case."

That decision disregards the decision of this Court in Shankerbhai v. Raisingji (1) in which the plaintiff resisted the right of the Talukdari Settlement Officer to serve him with a notice under sections 202 and 79A of the Bombay Land Revenue Code on the ground that he was a mortgagee, and had represented to the Talukdari Settlement Officer that he was a mortgagee before section 29B had been added to Bombay Act VI of 1888 but the Court held that the representation by the plaintiff that he was a mortgagee was not a notice complying with the provisions of section 29B, which was not in existence at that time, and that as he had not answered to the notice issued under section 29B of the later date, his claim could not be considered.

We may also refer to Purushottam v. Rajbai (2) where it was decided that although a decree had been passed against a talukdar, which was being executed before section 29B was enacted, still notice of the claim was necessary after the Notification under section 29B had been issued; and the only question was whether the two written applications for the execution of the decree made after the Notification were sufficient notices in writing of the plaintiff's claim. It must be inferred from that judgment that notices were required after the Notification in spite of the fact that a decree passed against the talukdar was being executed.

Therefore, it would appear that although the plaintiff had knowledge of the original mortgage-deed of 1859, those who were desirous of claiming under that deed were bound to give notice in writing of their claim after the Notification under section 29B was issued.

With regard to defendant No. 2, no such notice was given by him, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to possession of that part of the suit property which is in his possession without payment.

With regard to that portion of the suit property which is in possession of defendants Nos. 8 to 10, it has been argued that they had no knowledge that the property was talukdari property, and that, therefore, they could not have been expected to give notice of their claim when the Notification was issued under section 29B. But section 29B (2) especially provides for such a case "where the Managing Officer is satisfied that any claimant was unable to comply with the notice published under sub-section (1), he may allow his claim to be submitted at any time after the date of the expiry of the period fixed therein but any such claim shall, notwithstanding any law, contract, decree or award to the contrary, cease to carry interest from the date of the expiry of such period until submission," and even if the Managing Officer is not satisfied that the claimant was unable to comply with the notice, and decides that his claim has been duly discharged it would be still open for him to claim in a suit to ask for a decision of the Court that he was unable to comply with the notice, and if the Court is satisfied that the claimant had sufficient reason for not being aware that the property, against which he had a claim, was talukdari property, then we have no doubt that the Court would allow the claim. But in this case defendants Nos. 8 to 10 were served with notice so far back as 1912. They were bound then to give notice of their claim against the property to the plaintiff, and to ask him to give a decision under section 29B (2). It is far too late now to ask this Court in appeal to hold that they were unable to comply with the notice published under sub-section (1) in 1905.

(2) 4 Ind. Cas. 889; 11 Bom. L. R. 1358; 34 B. 142

The result must be that the appeal succeeds and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the suit property from the defendants in possession with costs throughout.

SARAPADDIN BEPARI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND OTHERS—Pro forma DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 111A—Publication of Record of Rights—Declaratory suit—Dismissal—Cause of action—Final publication of Record—Fresh cause of action—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120.

The plaintiffs brought a suit on the 1st June 917 for declaration that they had raiyati title in certain land and that they were not under-raiyats under the defendant as recorded in the Record of Rights which had been finally published in the Bengali year 1320. During the preparation of the Record of Rights a dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendant as to the status of the former had been decided on the 2nd July 1908. The defendant contended that limitation commenced to run from the decision of the dispute and, consequently, the suit was barred by the six years' rule of limitation contained in Art. 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act:

Held, that the suit was within time, for under section 111*A* of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiffs had a statutory cause of action which arose on the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights. [p. 490, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 26th of July 1919, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Fourth Court at Madaripur, dated the 26th of November 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atindra Nath Mukerjee for Mr. M. A. K. Fazl-ul-Haq, for the Appellant.—The question to be considered in this case is one of limitation. I beg to submit that limitation should run not from the final publication of the Record of Rights but from the date of the order. I rely on six years' limitation from the date of the order and so Art. 120 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, the suit is barred as more than six years have elapsed since the date of the decision of the dispute. I submit that the right to sue began on 2nd July 1908 and so the suit is barred being more than six years. Practically the whole matter was decided by the order of 2nd July 1908 determining that they are my under-raiyats.

Babu Amitaranjan Ghose, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The only point that has been argued in this appeal is the point of limitation. The plaintiffs brought this suit for declaration that they had raiyati title in certain land and that they were not under-raiyats under the defendant as recorded in the finally published Record of Rights. It appears that during the preparation of the Record of Rights there was a dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendant as to the status of the former and that it was decided on the 2nd July 1908. The Record of Rights was finally published some time in the Bengali year 1320. The suit was instituted on the 1st June 1917. The period of limitation admittedly is six years under Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. Consequently, if limitation commenced to run from the decision of the dispute the suit is barred, but if it commenced from the final publication of the Record of Rights the suit is within time. We think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is correct. As the plaintiffs are in possession of the property, either of these events would give them a cause of action, and also section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives them the right to institute a declaratory suit of the nature they have brought on the publication of the Record of Rights, or, in other words, they had a statutory cause of action which arose on the date of the final publication. The view we take is similar to the view taken by a Divisional Bench of the Patna High Court in the case of Latafat Hussain v. Kumar Kaliker Nand Singh.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SANTAYA RAMKRISHNA PAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 9, 56, (b)—S. 9, object of—Decree for restoration of possession—Suit by person in possession to restrain execution.

The object of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is to discourage people from taking the law into their own hands, however good their title may be. It provides a summary and speedy remedy through the medium of a Civil Court for the restoration of possession to a party dispossessed by another leaving them to fight out the question of their respective title by a regular suit if necessary. Where a person obtains a decree for restoration of possession of land under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, the person against whom it is passed and who is in possession of the land, can institute a suit to establish his title to the land and obtain an injunction to restrain the decree-holder from dispossessing him by enforcing his decree, notwithstanding the provisions of section 56, clause b, of the same Act. [p. 491, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 151 of 1920, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Kumta, in Civil Suit No. 284 of 1919.

Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent being in possession of certain lands instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal, to seek an injunction to restrain the appellant from dispossessing him by enforcing the decree passed in Suit No. 293 of 1917. He further asked to be restored to possession if during the pendency of this suit he is so dispossessed. The facts which have necessitated these proceedings are as follows:—

In or about March 1915 the respondent put the appellant in possession of the suit lands under a Chalgeni agreement. In 1917 the respondent obtained a decree in the Court of the Mamlatdar at Kumta in possessory Suit No. 3 of 1917 and took possession which he has retained ever since. The appellant then brought Suit No. 293 of 1917 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumta for restoration of possession, under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. He obtained a decree in his favour, but before he could execute it the respondent instituted the present suit to establish his title to the lands and to obtain an injunction as stated above.

The lower Courts agree in holding that the respondent has established his title to the said lands. The decree passed by the Trial Court, which has been affirmed by the District Court, is in these terms:

"Plaintiff is entitled to continue to be in possession of the suit land. Defendant is permanently restrained from obstructing the plaintiff's possession of the land on the strength of the decree in Civil Suit No 293 of 1917. The decree is inoperative and incapable of execution to that extent by virtue of this order."

It has been urged in this second appeal that this decree offends against the provisions of section 56, clause (b), of the Specific Relief Act. Now, the decree passed in Suit No. 293 of 1917 was clearly one contemplated by section 9 of that Act. The object of that section is to discourage people from taking the law into their own hands, however good their title may be. [Krishnarav Yashvant v. Vasudev Apaji Ghotikar (1)]. It provides "a summary and speedy remedy through the medium of the Civil Court for the restoration of possession to a party dispossessed by another, leaving them to fight out the question of their respective titles if they are so advised." Wali Ahmad Khan v. Ajudhia Kandu (2). An order or decree passed under that section is not open to appeal or to review at the instance of the defeated party; and the section expressly provides that nothing contained therein shall bar any person from suing to establish his title to such property and to recover possession thereof. It was, therefore, competent to the respondent to institute this suit to establish his title to the lands in dispute; and being in possession thereof, the only further relief which he could seek was an injunction to restrain the appellant from disturbing his possession. The terms of the decree passed by the lower Court are, in my opinion, unobjectionable.

In support of the appellant's contention, reliance was placed on the following observations in the judgment of Markby, J. in Dhuronidhur Sen v. Agra Bank Ltd. (3):

"But for one Judge to issue an injunction against a decree-holder to restrain him from executing the decree of another Judge exercising co-ordinate jurisdiction, upon the ground that the proceedings by which the decree was obtained were altogether illegal, is, as far as I am aware, a proceeding entirely without precedent, and one which it seems to me very dangerous to introduce. It has already been found difficult enough to bring litigation in this country to a termination, and if we were to grant this injunction, I am very much afraid that advantage would be taken of the precedent to prolong litigation very much further."

The decree there under consideration was not one passed under the said section 9. It is, therefore, not easy to see how the above pronouncement could apply to the facts of this case where the respondent is in effect seeking that remedy which is expressly allowed to him by that enactment. This case rather comes within the following observations in the same judgment (page 395): "In some cases a suit to reverse the order, treating it as a summary order, may be brought." The sole object and purpose of the present suit is to obtain a reversal of the order made in Suit No. 293 of 1917, treating it as of a summary nature.

For these reasons I affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), ss 2, 3—Bengal Land Reveune Sales Act (VII of 1868), s. 11—Holding, when becomes saleable for arrears—Premature sale invalid and ultra vires.

The effect of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859 and Act VII of 1868 and of the Board's Notification of 6th October 1871, issued under section 3 of the Act of 1859, in relation to the time at which certain holdings become saleable for arrears, is that

A kabuliyat, dated the 16th November 1862, contained a stipulation that the tenant would pay the rent year by year. Under the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868 the tenancy was sold for arrears of revenue of 1914-15 in May 1915:

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The plaintiff in the two suits out of which these appeals arise purchased holding No. 20-A in Mahal Panchannogram in the 24-Parganahs at a sale for arrears of revenue or rent held under Act VII of 1868, which incorporates the provisions of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859). The holding is a tenure within Act VII of 1868 and the defendant in each suit is an under-tenure-holder in occupation of lands comprised in the holding. Appeal No. 135 relates to Suit No. 20 of the Court below and Appeal No. 137 to Suit No. 19.

The holding was sold on the 17th May 1915 for an arrear of Rs. 6-10 5 and the price paid by the plaintiff was Rs. 8,900.

The suits were brought to vacate the under-tenures of the defendants under section 12 of the Act of 1868 as incumbrances imposed upon the tenure after its creation or after the time of Settlement. The defendants contend in the first place that the sale was invalid inasmuch as the Collector had no authority under the law to sell the tenure when he did, and, in the second place, that their under-tenures are within the first of the Third Exception to section 12 and, therefore, protected. Before us the plea that the sale was brought about by collusion between the purchaser and the defaulter was in effect abandoned. The plaintiff won in the Court below and the defendants have appealed.

The point of the first defence is whether the sale was premature and it turns on the application of the Privy Council's decision in Haji Buksh Ilahi v. Durlav Chandra Kar (1), to the facts of the present case. Their Lordships dealt with the effect of the two Acts and of the Board's Notification of 6th October 1871, issued under section 3 of the Act of 1859, in relation to the time at which these holdings in Panchannogram become saleable for arrears. The result is that no holding can be sold till after the 28th June next after the first day of the month following the month in which the revenue or rent should have been paid.

The rents of the holdings are payable annually and the result is arrived at in this way. Determine the day on which the rent is annually payable. If not paid on or before that date the rent is in arrear on the first day of the following month (Act XI of 1859, section 2). Under the Board's Notification of 1871, the tenure-holder may save his tenure by paying the arrear on or before the 28th June next following. It is not till after that date has passed without the arrear being paid that the holding becomes saleable at public auction to the highest bidder.

In the case cited, the tenure-holder's engagement or kabuliyat required him to pay his rent "within the 28th day of June every year." It was held that the rent so payable in any year was not in arrear till July 1 of that year and the holding could not be sold till after June 28 of the following year.

The first question to be determined, therefore, is on what day the rent in the present case was payable.

For the plaintiff it is said that the rent was payable annually according to the Bengali year and reliance is placed on the evidence of the Collectorate Record-keeper, called by the defendants, who says that "the rent of this 55 Gram mahal is generally collected according to the Bengali year." In the jama wasil baki of the holding (Exhibit A), the years are entered as 1911-12, 1912-13 and so on. The entries may refer either to the financial year ending on the 31st March, or to the Bengali year ending about the middle of April. It is immaterial which of these years is intended. The account shows that there was nothing due at the close of 1912-13 (or 1319 B. S.). The year 1913-14 (or 1320 B. S.) opened with a "current demand" of Rs. 6-10-5 and no arrear demand. The "current demand" for that year was paid on 23rd March 1914. Accordingly, 1914-15 (or 1321 B. S.) also opened with no entry in the arrear column and an entry of Rs. 6-10-5 in the column provided for the current demand. This demand was not paid on June 28th 1914 or later, and the holding was sold in consequence in May 1915. If, as is argued for the plaintiff, the amount became due and payable on the 1st April 1914, or the 1st Baisakh, 1321, the rent was in arrear on 1st May, 1914, and the Collector was at liberty to sell it after June 28th of the same year. If, on the other hand, the amount became due and payable in or after June of 1914, the holding could not be sold till after June 28th 1915.

As the Privy Council point out, the date on which the amount was payable depends primarily, not on general or administrative considerations, such as the course of business in the Collectorate or the mode in which the accounts are kept, but on the contract between the parties. In the present case that contract is embodied in a kabuliyat, dated 10th November 1862, which is in the following terms:—

"This deed of kabuliyat is executed by Sayad Abdul Ali (a former tenure-holder) to the following effect:—

"That I have got a permanent maurashi patta in respect of lands measuring 17 bighas 5 katas 4 chataks and 10 gundas..... acknowledging as yearly rent thereof Rs. 20-12 annas 4 pies. I shall pay the rent year by year. Accordingly, on receiving a patta, I execute this kabaliyat. Finis. 10th November 1862."

The original holding appears to have been split up. Holding No. 20-A comprises about a third of the original area and is responsible for an aliquot share of the rent.

It will be observed that the kabuliyat bears an English date and that it does not expressly mention the date on which the rent is due to be paid each year. There seems no reason why it should refer to the Bengali year or the financial year or the English calendar year, rather than to the year beginning on the date it bears, the 10th November, and ending on the 9th November of the following year, which may be called the year of the tenancy. The meaning of the words as they stand is presumably that the rent should be paid year by year on the 10th November of each year. If that be so, the account would show that the rent due on the 10th November 1913, was paid on the 23rd March 1914, and that the current demand for 1914-15 was not payable till the 10th November, 1914. The rent, therefore, was not in arrear till the 1st December 1914 and the Collector was without authority to sell before the 28th June 1915. Accordingly, the sale held in May 1915 was invalid and ultra vires and conferred no right on the plaintiff, as the purchaser at the sale, to vacate these under tenures.

If that view be right, the defendants succeed on their first contention and it becomes unnecessary for us to consider whether the defendant's under tenures are within any of the Exceptions to section 12 of the Act of 868, a question with which the Court below seems to have dealt somewhat cursorily.

It may be added that according to the sale notice issued on 14th April 1915, under section 7 of the Act of 1859 (Exhibit 15), the sale was held "for the realization of the Government Revenue—for the year 1320 B. S. which was payable on the 28th July 1914." On a strict construction of these words, the result would be the same as that already arrived at. The revenue, if payable on the 28th July, was in arrear on the 1st August 1914 and the holding could not be sold till after 28th June 1915. But it is probable that the notice means that the 28th July or the 28th June was the last day for the payment of revenue which was previously in arrear. That is to say, it was assumed that the revenue was due for the Bengali year 1320 and that it was payable on the 1st Baisakh 1321, an assumption, which in the view I take is inconsistent with the kabuliyat.

The appeals should be allowed with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated 20th April 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 9 of 1921.

Messrs. J. C. Ghosh and N. G. Bose, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It cannot be denied that the plaintiff, Bhairon Prasad, did produce his nakal bahi in the first Court when he was examined as a witness. He appears to have started using it for the purpose of refreshing his memory from the entries in it, but was not allowed to do so. Whether the book was ever actually tendered to the Court itself as evidence is immaterial. It was brought into Court for use as evidence and was not allowed to be used at all. That the copies of the receipts it contains can be received in proof of the original receipts is beyond doubt, because they are secondary evidence of documents which, if they exist, are in the possession of the opposite party and that party has refused to produce them by denying their existence.

(2) The copy of the receipt for the first alleged payment of Rs. 175-1 0 cannot, however, be so used, for the reason that the copy itself recites that the original was unstamped. A statement is added that a stamp will be affixed later, but it cannot be shown that this was ever done. An unstamped receipt cannot be proved at all, either by primary or by secondary evidence. But the plaintiffs have to prove the payment not the written receipt and evidence other than the document is not excluded by the existence of the document. For this purpose it appears to me that the copy of the alleged receipt in the nakal bahi can be used in two ways. Any person who wrote it or read it soon after it was written and also witnessed the payment can refer to it under section 159 or section 160 of the Evidence Act. Also it appears that every receipt given by the plaintiffs was copied into this book. It is then a regularly kept account book showing all payments received by the plaintiffs, the entries being made in the form of a copy of the receipt issued by them. In this light it is admissible in evidence under section 34 of the Evidence Act. The document would, of course, have to be proved in the ordinary way and thereafter its weight as evidence would have to be estimated, but the plaintiffs have so far not been allowed to prove it or use it at all.

(3) The objection that they are not stamped does not apparently apply to the remaining three receipts which were mentioned in the plaint, and the copies of them in the nakal bahi could be used in any or all of the three ways already discussed. But when the mortgagor in his pleadings denied having made any re-payment and urged that, therefore, the claim was barred by time, the plaintiffs' Pleader is recorded as having said: "Payments were made as stated in the plaint. Plaintiff claims limitation by reason of the first payment of Rs. 175-1-0 only and not by reason of any of the subsequent payments." This appears to me equivalent to a statement that the plaintiffs proposed not to trouble to prove the later payments, that is a plea that for the purposes of this case it might be taken that they were never made. That is an admission of a fact on which the plaintiffs cannot be allowed to go back. But as the evidence of each payment appears to be of almost exactly the same weight and any one of them if proved will remove the bar of limitation that cannot affect the case. Further, it is only as a removal of the bar of limitation that the plaintiffs said they would not prove the three later payments. They can still prove them as corroborating the evidence they offer in proof of the first payment.

(4) The lower Appellate Court ought, in my view of the matter of the nakal bahi, to have acted under rr. 27, 28 and 29 of O. XLI and allowed the production of the nakal bahi and evidence to prove it and any oral evidence which may come within the terms of section 159 or section 160 of the Evidence Act. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside, and the case is remanded to that Court with instructions to re admit the appeal and to decide it afresh with advertence to what has been said in this judgment. Costs in this Court will follow the final result.

Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant by landlord from portion of holding—Suspension of rent.

A, B and C succeeded to a tenancy. A who was entitled to a 12-annas share took possession of the same. The landlord, not knowing the exact shares to which the heirs were entitled, made a settlement of an 8-annas share with B and C. The effect of this settlement was that A was unable to realize rent from some of the under-tenants who took advantage of the situation. In a suit by the landlord to recover rent:

Held, that there was a dispossession of the principal defendant from a portion of the holding such as to cause a suspension of the rent of the same.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rungpur, dated the 10th of November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Gaibandha, dated the 30th of March 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Manindra Nath Roy) for the Appellant.—Plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. First Court decreed the suit against all the defendants. On appeal the suit has been dismissed on the ground that there has been dispossession of the principal defendant. On 23rd May 1912 plaintiff got a rent decree against this holding against the principal defendant, Hara Chandra, that decree was set aside on the ground that the entire tenure was not included in the plaint, by the Appellate Court. On appeal to this Court it was disposed on terms of a compromise on 10th July 1916. The learned District Judge has held in the present suit that that judgment operates as res judicata which has been set aside by this Court. As to the merits, Maniram and Jnan were two brothers. Jnan's sons were Padma and Baul who left Brindamoyee and Baishnab. Padma died leaving defendant No. 2, widow. The present defendant is the son of the other brother Maniram. He is entitled to 8 annas. I recognised defendant and Brindamoyee in respect of 8 annas. The defence is that Baul died owning 4 annas and that he would be entitled to same by virtue of succession. Hence my recognition of the other persons amounted to dispossession. I submit dispossession must be with respect to a third party who has been inducted after driving out the original tenant. Here the tenants were of the same family. By mistake the landlord thinks that one of them is the heir of the other. Refers to Kali Prasanna v. Mathura Nath Sen (1). There is no eviction in the present case. Refers to Rai Charan Sar Mazumdar v. Administrator-General of Bengal (2), Annada Prosad Mukhopadhya v. Mathura Nath Nag (3), Saroda Prasad Bhattacharjee v. Manmotho Noth Mitter (4). The dispossession is not alleged to have taken place after the compromise in the previous case. I submit they can at best claim abatement.

Babu D. N. Bagchi (with him Babu Mohinimohan Bhattacharjee), for the Respondents.—The appeal is concluded by findings of fact. The Court below has found that the evidence on the question of dispossession was scanty and the landlord did not produce any evidence to prove that possession was not disturbed. It has been found that the holding was split up. The entire rent would, therefore, be suspended. Refers to Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim (5), Godai Molla v. Aminuddi Howladar (6) Upton v. Townend (7). The effect of the recognition amounts to the splitting up of the tenancy and disturbance of my possession.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decree dismissing a suit for rent on the finding that the principal defendant had been dispossessed by the plaintiff landlord from a portion of the holding for which rent is claimed.

The facts of the case as found are as follows: The holding was originally held by two brothers, Muniram Singh and Jnan Chandra Singh. The principal defendant Hara Chandra Das is the son of Maniram; Jnan Chandra had two sons, Padma Singh and Boul Singh. Boul Singh died leaving a son Baishnab Charan and a daughter Brindamoyee Baishnab Charan died leaving Brindamoyee, defendant No. 3, surviving. Padma Singh left a widow, Kanchanmoni, who is defendant No. 2. After the death of Baishnab Charan the plaintiff made a settlement of half of the holding with Kanchanmoni and Brindamoyee. It is found by the lower Appellate Court that the principal defendant, Hara Chandra Das, is now entitled to 12 annas share of the property; but the plaintiff settled 8 annas share with the 2nd and 3rd defendants, and this settlement has led to withholding of the rent by some of the undertenants who had taken advantage of the situation. He has also found that this act of the landlord, besides interfering with the appellant's enjoyment of his property, has cast a cloud on his title.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the act of the landlord in affirming the possession of the 2nd and 3rd defendants, who he believed to have inherited the 8 annas of Jnan Chandra, did not amount to dispossession of the plaintiff from the 4 annas share which he inherited on the death of Baishnab Charan. But on the findings we must hold that there was actual dispossession. The lower Appellate Court has accepted the evidence of dispossession as given by the principal defendant himself: and from this evidence, which we have read in order to properly understand the judgment, it is clear that it is the defendant's case that he actually took possession of the share inherited from Baishnab Charan after Baishnab Charan's death and before the settlement made with these ladies by the plaintiff. It is also found that the plaintiff's act rendered this defendant unable to realise rent from his under tenants, for it is the defendant's evidence that the under-tenants whose rents he was unable to realize were in occupation of the land which had been in Baishnab Charan's share. On the facts found we hold that the learned District Judge was right in applying the principle that dispossession by the landlord from a portion of the holding causes suspension of rent of the holding and dismissing the suit.

We, accordingly, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee (with him Babu Nogendranath Bose), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for enforcement of a simple mortgage executed on 8th July 1910. The principal advanced was Rs. 150, with interest thereon at 3½ per mensem with quarterly rests. The suit was in 1916. The total claim was valued at Rs. 1,000 to make it triable by Munsif. I gave up a portion of the claim. The defence was that a portion of the claim was paid and that the stipulation for compound interest was penal. First decreed the suit on appeal the Judge has held that a portion of the claim was paid and that the rate of interest was harsh and unconscionable as the very fact of giving up of a portion of the claim showed. He allowed interest at 25 per cent. He relied on Chhallaphroo Chowdhury v. Banga Behary Sen (1). That was previous to the Privy Council decisions in Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (2), Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3).

Maulvi Nurul Huq, for the Respondents.—The Privy Council decisions are distinguishable. There the applicability of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act was under consideration. Here the question comes under section 74 of that Act. The bond was for 2 months. The provision for compound interest is clearly penal. Refers to Krishna Charan Barman v. Sanat Kumar Das (4). 'Penalty' has not been defined in the Act. Both Courts concurrently held that the rate is penal. I submit they are perfectly right.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Noakhally modifying a decision of the Munsif. The plaintiff's suit was brought on a simple mortgage bond, the principal was Rs. 150. The defendant agreed to pay interest on the money lent at the rate of Rs. 3 2 0 per cent. per mensem, that he would pay off the money together with interest within the month of Bhadra 1317, that he would pay interest for every 3 months within 3 months, otherwise the arrears of every 3 months' interest would be regarded as the principal and the defendant would pay interest thereon at the rate mentioned in the bond. The date of the bond is the 2nd Sravan 1317. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,000, deducting Rs. 362 13 which he relinquished out of the compound interest.

The first Court decreed the suit in part allowing simple interest on the principal at 3⅛th per cent. per month from the date of the bond up to the period allowed for redemption and thereafter at 6 per cent. until realization. The decree to be satisfied within three months, in default the property was to be sold.

BAPU v. BHOMJI.

The defendant contended before the Munsif that the sum of Rs. 144 had been paid by him on account of the debt. This claim the Munsif disallowed. The defendant appealed and the lower Appellate Court found that Rs. 144 had been paid by the defendant, and the Court modified the decree of the Munsif allowing interest at the rate of 25 per cent. There was no cross-appeal by the plaintiff against that part of the Munsif's judgment which disallowed compound interest. The defendant contends that the interest allowed is harsh and unconscionable and he states, relying on the provisions of section 74 of the Contract Act, that the provision for interest at the rate mentioned in the bond must be taken to be by way of penalty and accordingly we are asked to interfere with the rate of interest allowed by the Subordinate Judge. It seems to us that having regard to the two decisions of the Judicial Committee in the case of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (2), and in the case of Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3), that it is not open to us to make a new contract between the parties. Accordingly it is not open to us to interfere unless we are satisfied that the rate of interest charged in the bond was a penalty within the meaning of section 74. We have referred to the provisions of the bond and despite the argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondent it is not, I think oper, to us to hold that the provision for interest in the bond is in the nature of a penalty; consequently, I think, we must restore the decision of the Munsif subject to this that the respondent will be entitled to deduct the sums covered by Exhibits A to A 6 which the Subordinate Judge has found had been paid by borrower.

In the result the appeal succeeds and the appellant will be entitled to her costs in this Court only.

Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, s. 205—Pre-emption—Agreement to re-sell—Enforceability against pre-emptor.

A pre-emptor's right under section 205 of the Berar Land Revenue Code cannot be defeated by the vendee's agreement to re-sell the property to the vendor, nor can the condition to re-purchase be enforced against the pre-emptor. [p. 499, col. 2.]

Ganpatsa Mahadsa v. Joomabhai, 2 N. L. R. 150, referred to.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 31st March 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 391 of 1920.

Mr. O. B. Parakh, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Section 206 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, runs:—

"Whenever a co occupant in any survey number proposes to sell or to relinquish in favour of a specified person for valuable consideration, the whole or any portion of his interest in the survey-number.....he shall give notice to all other co occupants of the survey-number of the price at which he is willing to sell, or the amount due, as the case may be. Such notice shall be given through the Tahsildar, and shall be deemed to have been sufficiently served if it be posted at the Chauri or some other public place, and proclaimed by beat of drum, in the village in which the survey-number is situated."

The law provides for the right of pre emption being exercised by any co-occupant of the field in which a share is being sold and gives every co-occupant having a right of pre emption the right to bring a suit in a Civil Court to enforce such right on various grounds, one of which is that no notice was given as required by section 206. The plaintiff, in the present case, was the owner of field survey No. 39 pot hissa No. 2 and survey No. 66 of Mauza Kalambeshwar, Taluq Akola. He sold this land to the second defendant by a registered sale deed, dated the 1st February 1918, for Rs. 1,500 and put this defendant into possession. The first defendant, Bapuji, being a co-occupant in field survey No. 39 sued claiming his right to pre empt in Civil Suit No. 272 of 918 and obtained a decree on the 24th April 1919, it being ordered that, on his depositing in Court a sum of Rs. 800, on account of the pre-emptive price for payment to the second defendant, Khairushah, he would be put in possession. The money was deposited and possession taken of the pot hissa in the beginning of the agricultural year 1919-20. The plaintiff now sues, stating that the sale of the fields to Khairushah was subject to the condition that the latter was to re-convey the said fields to the plaintiff on plaintiff paying Rs. 1,500 within three years from the date of the sale, that such a condition existed was found in the former suit, though the sale was found to be a sale out and out. Defendant No. 2, according to that condition, re-conveyed the two fields to plaintiff by a registered sale deed, dated the 24th September 1919. Plaintiff claims to become the owner of the pot hissa in survey No. 39 by his sale, and sues stating that Bapuji is bound by the sale having pre empted the land in dispute with notice of the condition of re-purchase. He claims the pot hissa and Rs. 700, the value of the produce in the year 1919-20. The contesting defendant Bapuji denied that the field was originally sold to defendant No. 2 subject to the condition alleged and pleaded that the decision of the Court in Civil Suit No. 272 of 1918 on this point was res judicata and bound him. Other pleas were advanced. The first Court found inter alia that the sale deed of the 24th September 1919 by the 2nd defendant, Khairushah, in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the land claimed had been duly established but held that that document conferred no title on the plaintiff for the simple reason that, at the time of the sale, the second defendant had no title to the said land which had passed to the plaintiff in virtue of his pre-emption decree. Plaintiff was found to have no right to the land or the value of the crops and he could not even claim possession of the land on payment of what Bapuji paid to pre-empt. The suit was dismissed. On appeal, the Additional District Judge, Akola, holds that the plaintiff should be allowed to add a prayer for specific performance of the contrast proved in the pre-emption suit. An application to this effect had been made to the Trial Court but was rejected. The Appellate Court reversed the decision of the lower Court and sent the case back for re trial. Hence the present appeal.

It is argued for the appellant that the original sale was an out and out sale and no stipulation of re sale bound the pre-emptor, that the pre emptor's right to the land came into existence with the transfer of possession. Order XX, r. 14, sub r. 1 (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure states that in these cases of pre-emption the plaintiff's title for land shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of the payment directed. For the plaintiff it is stated that though he cannot enforce his right of specific performance of the contract of re sale against Khairushah on the ground that he now possesses no title to the land in suit, yet he can claim specific performance against the pre-emptor, Bapuji, because he bought with knowledge of the stipulation to re-sell. It is contended that Bapuji can be treated as an assignee. It has been held that a pre-emptor's right under section 205 of the Berar Land Revenue Code cannot be defeated by the vendee re-selling to the vendor after a pre-emption decree has been passed. Ganpatsa Mahadsa v. Joonabhai (1). The observations of the learned Judge who disposed of that case meets most of the arguments advanced for the plaintiff respondent here. It has to be remembered that after the sale to Khairushah the present plaintiff was a stranger to the land and the result of a re-sale by Khairushah if he had any title to convey would be to give Bapuji another cause of action to pre-empt. As stated by Batten, A. J. C., in the case above quoted, "but to hold that a co-occupant who has voluntarily parted with the whole of his share and who has thus voluntarily constituted himself a stranger, and has by introducing another stranger brought about the state of things which the Law of Pre-emption is designed to prevent, can defeat a pre emptor by obtaining a re-conveyance from his vendee, would be to hold that a person who has once been a co occupant is in as good a position as a person who is still a co-occupant" In my opinion, no suit for specific performance could possibly lie against the pre-emptor. It was the plaintiff's own disregard of the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code relating to pre emp ion that forced Bapuji into Court to claim the land as a co-occupant. The second defendant now has no title to the land. Bapuji has obtained title by paying the purchase price to the second defendant. I cannot see how that title is burdened by any condition made by the second defendant when he bought from the plaintiff. That sale itself was void against the co-occupant and any condition or stipulation in connection with it would be also void. It is difficult to see what consideration supported the agreement to re-sell. To recognise an agreement of this nature would be to defeat the prov sions of the enactment governing the Law of Pre emption in Berar. The condition of re-purchase cannot be enforced against Bapuji. His sale-deed from the second defendant gives plaintiff no cause of action, for that person had no title to the land at the date of sale. The result is that this appeal succeeds. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court directing a re-trial and restore the decree of the first Court dismissing the suit. Costs of this appeal will be paid by the plaintiff-respondent.

Section 99 of the Estates Partition Act has no application to a case where the tenure sought to be avoided was cr ated by a co-sharer in respect of land allotted to him under a private partition and which was held by him in severalty at the time of the creation of the tenure. [p. 502, col. 1.]

The main test of the applicability of section 99 is holding the land in severalty under a private arrangement. This arrangement need not be so complete or so formally made as to exclude partition on the application of some of the proprietors under section 7 of the Act [p 502, col. 2]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordi nate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 14th of May 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Madaripur, dated the 20th of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakerbutty (with him Babus Frojo Lal Chakerbutty, and Froboth Kumar Das, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession. The defendant alleged to have held a tenure under a revenue paying estate which is held by a number of proprietors. The estate consists of seventy-two villages. It was recorded as tymali in 1863 held by a common manager. He continued in possession down to 1882. In 1899 some of the co sharers applied for partition. It was completed about 1905. During the partition proceedings, the defendants set up their title to hold under a permanent tenure created by some of the proprietors and prayed that partition might be effected on that basis. The Collector rejected their prayer. The partition proceeded on the basis of ryotwari rents. The first Court decreed the suit. On appeal the Appellate Court dismissed the suit holding that section 99 of the Estates Partition Act would not apply. The tenure was created in 1865. I submit section 99 of the Estates Partition Act would apply. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge as to there having been some sort of arrangement is not warranted by evidence. There is evidence to show that common manager continued to possess till 1882. At the time of the creation of the lease the estate was unquestionably joint. Refers to sections 7, and 99 of the Estates Partition Act. Here there was no contest about the jointress of the estate when three of the proprietors only applied for partition. The defendant's objection was then overruled. I submit the defendant cannot now say that his rights still remain on the face of the partition. Refers to Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Bardhan (1), Nogendra Mohan Ray v. Pyari Mohan Saha (2). There is a difference between these two decisions. Refers to Ananda Kishore Chowdhury v. Dai i Thakurani (3), Anand Kisore Chowdhury v. Dai i Thakurain (4). The facts found by the Subordinate Judge are not sufficient to show that there was a partition within the meaning of section 7 of the Estates Partition Act. He refers to the evidence of the plaintiff. I submit that is no evidence of a previous partition. There is no finding that the lands were held in severalty in 1865. Refers to Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Beioy Chand Mahatap (5) decided by Chatterjee, Panton, JJ., in December 1921.

Babu Suresh Chandra Taluqdar (with him Babu Nibaran Chandra Samajpati), for the Respondents —This appeal is absolutely concluded by findings of fact. The case in Nogendra Mohan Ray v Pyari Mohan Saha (2) is clearly in point and has been decided in my favour. If your Lordships disagree with that case then you will have to refer this case to the Full Bench. The law is well settled and section 99 has no application. That decision has been uniformly followed. See Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (6), Aimanaddi Patari v. Nabin Chandra Gope (7), Abdul Latif v. Amanaddi (8). All these cases lay down that section 99 has no application where the lands are held in severalty. The evidence clearly bears out a separate possession.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakerbutty, in reply.—The private partition must be proved to have been effected before the creation of the tenure; upon that point there is no finding of the Judge.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Is not the fact of granting a lease sufficient to show that the lands were partitioned?]

That is evidence of separate possession. That would not take the case out of the Statute. Refers to Anand Kisore Chowdhury v. Daiii Thakurain (4). Mere separate possession would not be enough.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Under what section did the Collector overrule the defendant's objection? Does that amount to res judicata or some such thing?]

I do not go so far. Refers to sections 22, 23 of the Estates Partition Act. I do not think it has got the effect of a decree. It stands upon the footing of estoppel.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Faridpur reversing the decision of the Second Munsif of Madaripore. The plaintiff appellant was one of the proprietors of the estate which was partitioned under Act V (B. C.) of 1897. In the Sahan allotted to the plaintiffs certain land was held by the defendant in permanent tenure created by some of the plaintiffs co-sharers in the estate. The plaintiff brought the suit to get khas possession of this land by avoiding the tenure. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree holding that section 99 of the Partition Act was applicable. That decree has been reversed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

The only question in this appeal is the applicability of section 99. We hold that on findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge this section is inapplicable. It is found that "by private partition among all the proprietors the defendant's landlords got the land in suit in their share and that they had no co sharers when they granted the permanent tenure right to the defendant's ancestors." This finding meets the objection that has been taken, namely, that there was no express finding that the land was held by the co-sharers in severalty when the lease to the defendants was granted. This being a second appeal this finding cannot be attacked on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. But it has been attacked on the ground that there is no evidence on the point. We have examined a copy of the evidence taken and we hold that though the evidence is scanty there is sufficient to enable the learned Subordinate Judge to draw an inference from which he might come to this finding of fact. It cannot be said that as a point of law there is no evidence to support these findings.

It is urged that as the partition by the Collector was made on the application by some only of the co-proprietors section 7 of the Act would prevent there having been a partition after there had been a previous division by private arrangement. But the private arrangement described in section 7 is not necessarily the same private arrangement that would prevent the application of section 99. From the case law on the subject it would appear that the main test of applicability of section 99 is holding the land in severalty under a private arrangement. This arrangement need not be so complete or so formally made as to exclude partition on the application of some of the proprietors under section 7. On the findings arrived at, the facts of the case seem undistinguishable from those of the case of Nogendra Mohon Ray v. Pyari Mohan Saha (2), and we cannot say that the learned Subordinate Judge committed any error in law in the decision at which he has arrived.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The cross-objection is not pressed. It is accordingly dismissed. We make no order as to costs in the cross-objection.

In dealing with an application for the appointment of a Receiver, the Court should examine the grounds given for such appointment, and take the pleadings of both parties on the application, and then dispose of it according to law, as laid down in O. There is nothing in the law, as laid down in O. XL, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, which prohibits a Court from appointing a Receiver in a case under Muhammadan Law in which a widow or her heirs claim to remain in possession of the estate of her husband until her dower has been paid and the accounts have been settled, provided there are good grounds within the scope of the section for a Receiver being appointed. Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Saugor, dated 4th February 1922, in Civil Suit No. 8/22 of 1906-09.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order passed in the suit which was the subject of the appeal to the Privy Council, reported as Fakrunissa v. Moulvi Izarus Sacik (1). The appeal is against an order of the District Judge, Saugor, dated the 4th February 1922, refusing to appoint a Receiver at the request of the present appellant, the fifth defendant.

The suit was instituted in 1906 by the widow of the deceased Moulvi Zabur-ul-Islam who died in 1903. The original plaintiff, who was the widow, claimed a quarter of the estate as her share and also claimed dower which was found to be Rs. 1,25,500. This Court in June 1913 ordered the case to be remanded to the lower Court for further proceedings necessary for final decree in which accounts should be taken. The plaintiff is dead and the present respondents are her heirs. The greater part of the estate is admittedly in the possession of the respondents-plaintiffs.

The main object of the inquiry which has been going on, is to ascertain what has been the profit of the estate in the possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessor. On the 2nd September 1912 the defendants, including the present fifth defendant, applied that a Receiver should be appointed. On the 27th November 1912 it was ordered that the parties should file affidavits and this was done by the 21st April 1913. No further action was taken on the application for the appointment of a Receiver and on the 12th January 1914 the suit was dismissed.

After disposal of the Privy Council appeal the proceedings were re-opened on the 3rd May 1921, the first hearing being on the 2nd July 1921. On the 2nd December 1921 the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 applied for the appointment of a Receiver. This application was dismissed by the District Judge with the following remarks:—

"There has been no order for a Receiver since 1906 and I see no reason to appoint one now, more especially as it will encourage defendants to further delay the disposal of the case."

The ex parte order against the fifth defendant was set aside on the 4th February 1922, whereupon he applied for the appointment of a Receiver with an alternative to be put in possession of his share of the estate on certain terms, and another request was made in the same application relating to the plaintiffs' accounts to which no attention was paid.

It is admitted in this Court that the only order appealable is that refusing to appoint a Receiver. The reasons given by the District Judge for refusing the request of the fifth defendant are stated as follows:

"At the last hearing defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 applied for the appointment of a Receiver and it was refused. There has been no Receiver since 1906 and full detailed accounts and the account-books have been put in by plaintiffs and I can see no reason to appoint a Receiver. I, therefore, reject the application for appointment of a Receiver."

The learnad Counsel for the respondents supports the order of the District Judge by contending that, under Muhammadan Law, a widow or her heirs are entitled to remain in possession of the estate of her deceased husband until she has been paid her dower, and that, therefore, the District Judge was incompetent to put a Receiver in charge of the estate in place of the widow or her heirs until accounts had been settled and the dower declared to be paid. We can find nothing in the law, as laid down in O. XL, r. 1 of the First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, which prohibits a Court from appointing a Receiver in a case like the present, provided there are good grounds within the scope of the section for a Receiver being appointed.

It is complained on behalf of the appellant that the District Judge has not exercised his discretion properly in refusing to appoint a Receiver and that in fact he has not exercised his discretion at all and has refused without going into the merits of the request at all. We are bound to say that there are good grounds for this complaint. The mere fact that a Receiver has not been previously appointed is not in itself a sufficient ground for refusing to appoint one now, and the District Judge seems entirely to have overlooked the fact that a request for the appointment of a Receiver was made in 1912 and the proceedings were only dropped because the suit was dismissed in January 1914. The District Judge in saying that "full detailed accounts and accounts books have been put in by plaintiffs" does not examine the question as to whether or not the accounts put in by the plaintiffs are prima facie satisfactory ones. The copies of the accounts, which have been placed before this Court, show net profits of Rs. 56,362 from June 1903 to June 1920, a period of 7 years. This gives an annual income of Rs. 3,256 for 67 villages, or Rs. 48 odd per village for a year. On the face of it, if the extracts shown to us are true samples of the accounts put in by the plaintiffs, there seem to be good grounds for the appointment of a Receiver. We can express no opinion on the point, but it is certainly one that ought to be taken into consideration by the lower Court. The grounds given by the appellant for the appointment of a Receiver should have been examined and pleadings of both parties should have been taken on the application, and the application for the appointment of a Receiver have been disposed of according to law as laid down in O. XL, r. 1. As it is, the application for a Receiver has been summarily dismissed for reasons which appear to us to be unsound. The main parts of the record of the case are with the lower Court which is proceeding with the suit and we have not sufficient material before us to dispose of the application ourselves. It is, moreover, one which preferably ought to be disposed of by the District Judge himself after proper and legal use of his discretion. For these reasons, we set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that he restore to his file the application put in by the fifth defendant for the appointment of a Receiver and dispose of it according to law. The costs in this Court will be costs in the case. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 100.

Where a person makes a gift to another describing him as his adopted son and the adoption turns out to be invalid, the validity of the gift depends upon the question whether the donor merely described the donee as his adopted son or intended that the validity of the gift should be conditional on the validity of the adoption. First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 552 of 1915

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. H. V. Divatia), for the Appellants.

Sir Thomas Strangman (with him Mr. G. N. Thakor), for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad. The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment. The only question that has been argued in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved his title to the suit house. The plaintiff claimed under the Will of his brother Janardan, who died on the 6th January 1913. Janardan had been adopted in 1892 by his mother's father, Vishnupant. In October 1901 Vishnupant made a Will and under that Will he gave a life interest in the suit house to his wife, Rakhmabai, and the remainder over to his adopted son, Janardan. Vishnupant died in 1901 and in 1903 certain disputes that had arisen between Janardan and Rakhmabai were settled by the execution of a deed of release and agreement, whereby Janardan's interest in the suit house after the death of Rakhmabai was recognised.

The only question, therefore, is whether the gift of the suit house by the Will of Vishnupant was a valid gift, and that depends on the question whether the testator merely described Janardan as his adopted son or intended that the validity of the gift should be conditional on the validity of the adoption. As was pointed out in Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (1) the language of one instrument does not afford much assistance in the construction of another; and the case of Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2) which is relied upon by the appellants, cannot afford any assistance to the Court in construing the present Will, as the words in the Angikarpatra in that case were entirely different. If we were to consider the facts in other cases, the document in Lalta Prasad v. Salig Ram (3) was almost in the exact terms of the present Will. The testator in that case gave all his property to his wife for her life and then declared that after her death Lalta Prasad, his adopted son, should be owner of the property. The learned Judges said:

"There is absolutely nothing in the Will to show that the fact of the adoption of the plaintiff was the motive or reason for the gift, and, in the absence of anything of the kind, it appears to us that, interpreting the language of the gift in its ordinary meaning, we must treat it as a gift to Lalta Prasad as a persona designata, and that, therefore, the gift is valid."

As was stated in Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2) (page 89) "the distinction between what is description only and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest may often be very fine, but it is a distinction which must be drawn from a consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances." It seems to us that the Court should not strain to adopt a construction, which would defeat the intention of the testator, unless it was absolutely certain from the words of the Will that the testator intended to make the gift to Janardan conditional on the adoption being valid. There is no indication that Vishnupant had any such intention. We can only presume that he had adopted his daughter's son out of motives of affection and for perpetuating his name without considering too deeply the rules of Hindu Law which invalidated such an adoption. No doubt, he hoped his family would recognise the adoption and not dispute it. But having made the adoption so far back as 1892, when he came to make his Will, it is clear that he wanted to make this gift to Janardan, and he merely described him as adopted son in the ordinary course without intending that the gift should be conditional on the adoption of Janardan being valid according to the rules of Hindu Law. He also in the Will directed that Janardan should take one-third share in the Inam property. We are not concerned with that gift but it may be pointed out that the words of that gift were somewhat different and would tend more to the construction which the appellants wish the Court to put upon the words of the gift of the house. If that difference of language has any value, it is more against the appellants, for it shows that whatever the intention of the testator might have been with regard to the share in the Inam property, at any rate with regard to the house, he intended to give it to Janardan, whatever disputes might arise in the future with regard to his adoption. It is not necessary, therefore, to say anything with regard to the effect of the compromise or arrangement which was arrived at in 1908.

For his own safety Mr. Coyajee asks us to express the opinion that the eighth issue in the suit, whether the defendants Nos. 2 to 4's plea as to the invalidity of Janardan's adoption is barred by limitation has not been considered, and we do so.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs, i. e., with costs as against respondent No. 1; the other respondents to bear their own costs.

Berar Patels and Patwaris Law, 1900, ss. 6, 9, 20—Patelship allowance, suit for share of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

Under section 20 of the Berar Patels and Patwaris Law, 1900, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to enforce a claim to a share in the emoluments appertaining to the office of Patel.

Appeal from an order of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 7th April 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 30 of 1922.

Mr. R. R. Jaiwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. Balwantrao Tendhekar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mouza Singad was a village leased out under the Waste Land Rules of 1865. In 1886 it was settled in Patelship under r. 5 of the rules for the leasing out of waste lands in Berar, 1865. The allowance annexed to the Patelship is 25 per cent on the collections of the village. The present amount of collections is Rs. 521-7-6. The allowance is thus Rs. 130-5-10. Under section 6 A (4) of the Berar Patels and Patwaris Law, 1900, the share of the allowance (which in the section is called the emoluments of the Patel), to which the defendant, who is the sharer, appointed to be the Patel is entitled, is admittedly Rs. 26. The plaintiff claims a half share in the balance of the allowance. He files this suit for Rs. 156 8 9, the total of the amount due to him for the three years ending 1919-20. It is urged, as a preliminary objection in defence, that, under section 20, Berar Patel and Patwaris Law, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to try the claim. The Trial Court upheld the objection and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has overruled it and remanded the case. The defendant appeals against the order of remand.

Section 20 of the Patels and Patwaris Law provides that a Civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction with respect to any claim by any person to the office of Patel or Patwari or to any emolument appertaining to the office. The question therefore, is: is the present claim one to an emolument appertaining to the office of patel? In my opinion it is. Section 6 A (4) provides that, notwithstanding anything in section 9 the balance of the emoluments shall be divided by the Patel in proportion to their shares among all sharers (including himself) in the Patelship. But I do not see how this provision modifies section 20, as the lower Appellate Court says, and vests the jurisdiction to entertain and enforce a claim to a share in the emoluments in the Civil Court. Section 6 A (4) confers a right to share in the emoluments which was negatived by section 9, but it does not do away with the exclusion of Civil Court jurisdiction provided by section 20. In my opinion, the Civil Court's jurisdiction to try the present claim is barred. The appeal, therefore, succeeds; the order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. The decree of the First Court is restored. Costs in all Courts will be paid by the plaintiff-respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 182 (5)—Decree transferred to another Court—Application for further transfer made to First Court not step-in-aid of execution.

When a Court which has passed a decree transfers it for execution to another Court, an application for transfer to still another Court should be made to the Court to which the decree has already been transferred. Such an application made to the First Court cannot be treated as a step-in-aid of execution, as it ceases to be the proper Court within the meaning of Sch. JUDGMENT

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Salem of the Madras Presidency in 1910. After ineffective attempts at execution the decree holder applied that the decree should be transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sirsi in the Bombay Presidency for execution. The decree was transferred in July 1914. No steps were taken in the Sirsi Court to execute the decree and the Sirsi Court returned the decree unexecuted to the Salem Court in November 1918. In 1919 the Salem Court again transferred the decree to the Sirsi Court and the present Darkhast was filed on 9th June 1919. The judgment debtor opposed on the ground that execution was barred. The question was whether an application which had been made on the 4th August 1916 to the Salem Court praying that the decree might be sent to the District Munsif of Sagaram in the Mysore State for execution was a step-in-aid in execution made to the proper Court. The District Judge, following the decison in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (1), came to the conclusion that the Salem Court was not the proper Court in which to apply to take a step-in-aid when the decree had been transferred to the Sirsi Court. Under Schedule I, Art. 182 (5), of the Indian Limitation Act the period of limitation applicable is three years from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step in aid of execution of the decree, and the "proper Court" by Explanation II means the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree or order. Under O XXI, r. 10 "where the holder of a decree desires to execute it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree or to the officer (if any) appointed in this behalf, or if the decree has been sent under the provisions hereinbefore contained to another Court then to such Court or to the proper officer thereof." In Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Baliara (1) a decree was passed by the District Court and was sent to the Court of a Munsif for execution and it was held that when the decree of a District Court had been sent, under the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, section 223, to the Court of a Munsif for execution and had not been returned to the District Court, the "proper Court" within the meaning of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, Schedule I, Art. 185 (5), in which to apply "for execution, or to take some step in-aid of execution" of the decree was the Court of the Munsif, with the result that an application to the District Court would not prevent the time for enforcing the decree from running (under Art. 182) from the date upon which it was made.

In that case the application to the District Judge was for execution of the decree by sale of immoveable properties whereas in this case there was an application to the Court of Salem for the transfer of the decree to another Court. It seems to me to make little difference whether there is an application for execution or only an application to take a step-in-aid of execution. For it clearly seems to have been their Lordships opinion that when the Court which has passed a decree sends it for execution to another Court, then the First Court ceases to be the proper Court within the meaning of Schedule I, Art. 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act. Therefore, the decision of the District Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—I have felt some difficulty in this case. Though it is clear from the provisions of section 42, that when the decree is once transferred to another Court, that Court has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. I do not find any express provision in the Code as to what procedure a party is to adopt when he wants to get the decree transferred again to another Court. There is no provision as to whether in such a case the application should be made by him in the first instance to the Court to which the decree has been transferred or to the Court which originally passed the decree, and which made the order transferring the decree for execution on the first occasion. The difficulty arises from the absence of any express provision in the Code on the point. It is possible, however, to read section 42 of the Code in a comprehensive manner, and to hold on the words of that section that even an application for the transfer of the decree again to another Court must be made in the first instance to the Court to which the decree has already been transferred; and the observations in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Baliara (1) show that all the applications after the decree is once transferred for execution to another Court, in connection with its execution, must be made to that Court. No doubt the application in that case was for the execution of the decree, and as it was made to the Court which had already transferred the decree, it was held that the application was not made to the proper Court. The application in the present case is not exactly of that kind, and I should have been glad to see my way, if possible, to hold that another application for a transfer to a Third Court might be made to the Court which had originally passed the decree. At any rate it may be said in favour of that view that there is no express provision prohibiting such a procedure. At the same time there is much to be said in favour of the view accepted by the lower Appellate Court, and by my Lord the Chief Justice. On the whole, I think, though not without hesitation, that the application in this case to the Salem Court, which had already transferred the decree for execution to the Sirsi Court, for a transfer of the decree to another Court, cannot be treated as having been made to the proper Court and, therefore, cannot be held to be a step in-aid of execution.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V Charpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue on a mortgage-deed for Rs. 3,000 executed on 16th December 1908 by one Sita They claim Rs. 7,384 7-0 thereon or foreclosure of the absolute occupancy fields Nos 10 and 11 in Khel B of Mouza Khatkhed, Tahsil Wardha. These fields came to Sita who was the mother of defendant No 2 from her father, one Gajmal. Sita died on 19th April 1913. Defendant No. 1 is the son of defendant No. 2. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are said to be the nearest reversioners of Gajmal. On 3rd September 1919, that is, after the execution of the mortgage, Sita executed a deed of gift as regards these fields in favour of the first two defendants. The case proceeded ex parte against Musammat Jani, the second defendant; the others contested the case. The defendant No. 1 contends that as a bandhu he is entitled to the property. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 claim to be the agnates of Gajmal and as such the immediate reversioners. The gift was denied by the last two defendants. The pleadings led to the following issues:—

1, Whether Musammat Sita executed the mortgage in suit for consideration ?

2. If so, whether Rs. 2,985 was not due by her and whether Rs. 15 was not paid in cash to her ?

NARAYAN v. SHANKERLAL.

3. Whether the mortgage was validly attested ?

4. Whether the agreement to pay compound interest at 12-annas per cent. per annum was unconscionable ?

Whether it amounted to a hard bargain and should be relieved against ?

5. Whether the mortgage was justified by legal necessity, and is binding on the defendants ?

6. Whether out of the consideration Rs. 681 were borrowed for purchasing fields for the defendant No 1 and if so, how will this fact affect the liability of this defendant for the claim on the mortgage ?

7, Whether Saoji and Raojit, the grandfathers of the defendants Nos 3 and 4, were brothers of Gajmal. Whether these defendants are nearer reversioners than the defendant No. 1 ?

8. Whether Sita gifted the property to the defendant No. 1 on 3rd September 1909 ?

9. Whether the defendant was put in possession in pursuance of the gift ?

10. Whether the gift was legally valid and is binding on the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 ?

11. What amount is now due on the mortgage ?

The Trial Court's finding on the issues may be summarised as follows. That Sita executed the mortgage which was properly attested, that as regards the passing of consideration the defendants Nos 3 and 4 are held to be the heirs, while defendant No. 1 would be a mere donee and the proof of the execution of the mortgage-deed would throw on him the burden of proving that the consideration did not pass, while against the last two defendants that burden would lie on the plaintiffs. When the mortgage-deed was executed Rs. 2,985 were due from Sita on account of old debts and Rs. 15 were paid in cash to her, she thus recieved full consideration. The fourth issue was found in the nagative. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were found to be the next reversioners. It was found unnecessary to decide the question of gift and delivery of possession, but if necessary the Judge holds that Sita gifted the defendant No. 1 who was put in possession of the gift and the gift was thus valid, but as Sita was incompetent to gift away the property inherited from her father such gift was not binding on defendants Nos 3 and 4. It was held that the mortgage was not for legal necessity but part of it, namely, Rs. 681 were borrowed for acquiring a field for the first defendant. Not being for legal necessity, the mortgage was not binding on defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the next reversioners, but was binding on defendant No. 1, the donee. The claim for Rs. 7,38 -7 0 or, in default, foreclosure was decreed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, whole the suit against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was dismissed.

The present appeal against that finding is filed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, no cross-objection has been put in and, therefore, the finding as regards want of legal necessity stands. It is here admitted that Narayan cannot be a reversioner and it is admitted that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are, as regards this defendant, nearer reversioners. Narayan is the donee and the respondents here do not deny that possession follows the gift. It is stated that the donee could raise a plea that no legal necessity existed though no parallel case can be pointed out. Arguments in this Court narrow themselves to this, that the execution of the mortgage has not been proved nor has the receipt of consideration. The fact that Sita afterwards denied the execution of the mortgage and that it had to be proved against her in the Registrar's Court is of little value against the direct evidence there is on record. Ramchandra (P. W. No. 14), one of the attesting witnesses, swore to Sita executing the document in his presence and in that of one Janu Mahli now dead. She admitted the consideration at the time. Raghoba, her son-in law and husband of the second defendant, was present at the time. Laxman, (P. W. No. 2), is the writer of that mortgage. He also speaks to its having been executed by Sita in the presence of the attesting witnesses. Then there is evidence of one of the plaintiffs, P. W. No. 11, on the fact that the stamp of that document was purchased by Raghoba, D. W. No. 1, the father of defendant No. 1 and husband of defendant No. 2. There is no doubt that the finding of the lower Court that Sita executed the mortgage and that it was properly attested is correct. As regards the passing of the consideration, there is evidence that Sita admitted having received it. Raghoba himself admits that he used to take money for Sita from the plaintiffs' shop. P. W. No. 11 one of the plaintiffs, P. W. No 12, another plaintiff, P. W. No. 13, plaintiffs' agent, P, W. No. 5 and copies of the account-books are sufficient to prove that the consideration for the mortgage was received by Sita. I do not think that the plea of want of legal necessity can be raised by the donee in this case, and there is some evidence to show that a portion of the consideration of the mortgage deed was expended in getting a field for Narayan. It is contended that a donee is an alienee. Section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act is quoted, also section 38 of the same Act. It is true that an alienee for value could raise the question of legal necessity. Dalchand v. Chand Khan (1). But it seems to me that the donee here accepts the gift burdened with the mortgage. The mortgage would be enforceable against the widow though it may not be enforceable except as regards that part proved to be for legal necessity against the reversioners. The question whether some of the money was expended in the purchase of a field for Narayan is not pressed and is really immaterial nor is it here argued that the interest is excessive. As already stated, the case has been contested here on the ground that the execution of the mortgage decree (deed) has not been proved nor has the receipt of consideration. I have no hesitation in finding these two facts against the present appellants. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondents' costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 16, proviso—Jurisdiction.—Land situate outside British India—Suit for mesne profits, whether maintainable in British Court.

The proviso to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code makes it clear that a Court in British India has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for mesne profits of land situate outside British India, where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the British Court. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Application against a decree of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 10 of 1919, dismissing the appeal from a decree passed by the Assistant Judge at Belgaum, in Civil Suit No. 78 of 1919.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for Opponent No. 1.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for Opponent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit in the Court of the Assistant Judge at Belgaum to recover mesne profits of certain land for the years 1915-16 and 1916-17. It is admitted that the land is situated in the Kurundwad State outside British India, and that the plaintiff bases his claim to mesne profits on the fact that he became entitled to such land by an award decree in 1916 and did not get possession of the lands until 1917. The defendants contended that as the suit came under section 16 (e) of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had no jurisdiction. This contention found favour with the learned Assistant Judge and also with the District Judge.

Now, in the case of land outside British India section 16 has no application and we have to fall back upon general principles in considering whether this is a suit in which a personal relief is claimed against a defendant residing within the jurisdiction of the Court.

First, it may be as well to clear the ground by disposing of certain contentions which were raised in the course of the argument as to the proper scope of section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, sub section (c) and the proviso to the section. Sub-section (c) excludes from the jurisdiction of the Courts, outside whose local limits the property is situate, suits for compensation for wrong to such immoveable property; and the word "wrong" refers to torts affecting immoveable property such as trespass, nuisance, infringements of easements, etc. The proviso makes it clear that even although a wrong to immoveable property is alleged, yet, where the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the defendant's personal obedience, then the suit can be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain. So that assuming for the moment that the suit was one for mesne profits relating to land in British India, and the land had been outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court at Belgaum, still if the decree directed something to be done which could be done through the personal obedience of the defendant, such as the payment of money, then the Belgaum Court would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

It is admitted that the provisions of section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code are an embodiment of the provisions of the law of England on this subject. But it seems to have been suggested that the proviso enacted something different. In our opinion, there is no reason for thinking that the whole section does not follow the English Law with regard to jurisdiction in the case of suits of the nature described in section 16, and we see no reason to think that under the English Law this suit would not lie in the Belgaum Court.

Fortunately the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Kashinath v. Anant (1) is directly in point, and from that decision it is clear that the principles enunciated by the English Courts of equity apply to this case. The facts of that case were somewhat similar to these. The plaintiff sued in the Court at Nasik in British India to establish his right to a share in the income derived from certain grants of land situate outside of British India, but received by the defendant within the jurisdiction of the Nasik Court; it was held that the suit was within the jurisdiction of the Court, there being no dispute as to title. Sir Lawrence Jenkins said :

"The lower Appellate Court seems to have thought that all property which had a foreign origin was outside the jurisdiction of the Court: this, however, is not a correct view of the law. The general principle is clearly stated by Lord Cottenham in Pollard, Ex parte, Courtney, In re (2), where he says: 'If indeed the law of the country where the land is situate should not permit or not enable the defendant to do what the Court might otherwise think it right to decree, it would be useless and unjust to direct him to do the act ; but when there is no such impediment the Courts of this country, in the exercise of their jurisdiction over contracts made here, or in administering equities between parties residing here, act upon their own rules, and are not influenced by any consideration of what the effect of such contracts might be in the country where the lands are situate, or of the manner in which the Courts of such countries might deal with such equities'."

It is not suggested that the law prevailing in Kurundwad State would not permit of the defendant being directed to pay the mesne profits of the land to the plaintiff to whom the lands belong. There appears to be an equity in favour of the plaintiff that the profits of those lands which were awarded to him in 1915 should not remain in the pockets of the defendant, and, therefore, there is no reason why the Belgaum Court should not have jurisdiction to administer that equity in favour of the plaintiff. We are not concerned here with the merits of the case. We think that the Court in Belgaum had jurisdiction to decide whether, on the facts that were placed before it, mesne profits of those properties should be ordered to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff. The Rule, therefore, must be made absolute. The case must go back to the Court of the Assistant Judge to be dealt with on the merits. The plaintiff will be entitled to his costs in this Court and the Court below. Costs in the Trial Court will be costs in the cause.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 51 (1) Exception—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Rateable distribution, order for—Money not drawn by creditors—Intervening insolvency of judgment-debtor, effect of—Official Receiver, rights of, to amounts ordered to be rateably distributed.

Where rateable distribution has been ordered under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, the exception to section 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act applies not only to the amount credited in favour of the attaching decree-holder but also to the amounts rateably distributed to the other decree-holders under the section. [p. 512, col. 2; p. 513, col. 1.]

Where the insolvency of the judgment-debtor supervenes before the moneys allocated for rateable distribution are actually distributed to the creditors, they do not vest in the Official Receiver, but belong to the creditors from the date of the order. The order for rateable distribution removes the money from the operation of the Insolvency Act altogether. [p. 513, col. 2.]

Howatson v. Durrant, 27 C. 351; 4 C. W. N. 610; 14 Ind. Dec, (N. S.) 232, referred to.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tanjore, dated the 23rd March 1921, in Interlocutory Application No. 337 of 1920, in I. P. No. 43 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. D Devadoss, for the Appellant,—Under the English Bankruptcy Act and the bankruptcy procedure a claim by the judgment-debtor can be scrutinised by the Court or by the trustee in bankruptcy.

The Exception to section 51 (1) of the Insolvency Act has no application to the creditors in whose favour a rateable distribution order has been passed.

The mere order allocating the moneys to the various creditors under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, does not vest the ownership in them. It will belong to them only at the date of actual distribution. And where the insolvency occurs before that date the Official Receiver can claim the moneys on behalf of the general body of creditors.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and N. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The English Act cannot be applied, because provisions of section 51 of the Indian Act are so different. There is no justification from the language of section 51 to restrict the application of the exception only to the attaching creditor. From the date of the rateable distribution order the ownership in the moneys allocated pass to the creditors, who cannot suffer for the intervening litigation which prevented them from taking the moneys.

JUDGMENT.—Only two points have been raised in appeal. It is contended that where rateable distribution has been ordered under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the exception to section 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act only applies to the amount credited in favour of the attaching decree holder and not to the amounts rateably distributed to the other decree holders under the section. No authority is quoted and we can find nothing in the wording of section 51 to support such a view; nor is any reason suggested for such a differentiation. The learned Counsel for the appellant wished to refer to various English rulings dealing with section 45 of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883; but the difference between this section and section 51 of the Indian Act are so great that we feel unsafe in taking them as a guide. The other contention is that the amounts lying in Court should be treated as still the money of the insolvent, which the Official Receiver can claim for the benefit of the general body of the creditors. This contention also we feel bound to negative. The last of the orders for rateable distribution was passed more than six years before the insolvency; and respondent was only prevented from drawing out the sums of which he was entitled thereunder by reason of litigation instituted by other creditors of Nataraja Iyer which was carried up to this Court and ultimately proved infructuous. It seems to me that from the time of the order of rateable distribution the money must be treated as belonging, not to the judgment-debtor, Nataraja Iyer, but to the decree-holder in whose favour the order was passed. Mr. Devadoss for appellant contended that the effect of a rateable distribution order is merely to allocate the money to the different suits without affecting its ownership. The latter, he says, still rests in the judgment-debtor by the sale of whose property it was allocated. I do not think this is so. The section does not speak of distribution to the credit of the different decrees, but of distribution among the decree-holders. The latter are entitled to draw it out at will; and the judgment-debtor most certainly is not. I think the money in this case must be treated as the property of the decree-holder, the present respondent, and that the Official Receiver could no more recover it from Court than he could recover from the respondent if it had actually been paid out to him by Court. Mr. Devadoss eventually admitted that he could not recover the money in the circumstances of the present case if it had passed into respondent's possession. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

ODGERS, J.—The first point raised is on section 51 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as to whether the proceeds of execution held by various Courts as detailed in the District Judge's judgment are "assets" realised or not. In the absence of authority the executing decree-holder cannot be held to be solely entitled.

It was said there is a difference between section 73, Civil Procedure Code and section 51 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act on this point. Mr. Devadoss points to section 40 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, to show that completion of execution in England means a different thing to what it does here. The Indian section is by no means identical with the Statute; in fact, it differs from it in many material respects and it seems to be not only unnecessary but dangerous to hold that there may be distinction between the meaning of execution in these two sections. The point fails.

The second and more important point is this. It is said that the moneys held in Court as payable to the judgment-creditors are still the property of the judgment-debtor so as to vest in the Official Receiver on the insolvency of the former, and the fact that these sums have not yet been distributed may give the Official Receiver the right to go behind the decrees is satisfaction of which they have been paid and to see whether or not the transactions are founded on good consideration, etc. This may be so, unless the order for rateable distribution (which was admittedly made six years before the adjudication in 1919) removes the money, the subject of the order, from the operation of the Insolvency Act altogether.

Cases have been cited to the effect that if a judgment creditor wants to prove in insolvency his claim may be subject to scrutiny by the Court or the Official Receiver or Trustee in Bankruptcy; but if the matter is wholly outside the insolvency law it is clear that the Insolvency Court under its officers has no such power. In my opinion such is the case here. Section 51 provides that where execution has issued, assets realised in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition shall be protected from the operation of the Insolvency Act and the case in Howatson v. Durrant (1) shows that an order for rateable distribution stands on the same footing. It would, therefore, appear that the transaction sought to be impeached by the Official Receiver stands outside the operation of the Insolvency Act and he can neither scrutinize its legality nor have it set aside for the benefit of the general body of creditors. The judgment creditor entitled to the rateable distribution is in this respect in the same position, as if he had actually been paid out of money which was realized in execution and that being so, the Official Receiver has no right to it. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL EXTRAORDINARY APPLICATION No. 265 OF 1921.

RATANBAI SHIVLAL LOHAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SHANKAR DEOCHAND LOHAR—OPPONENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 8, O. XVII, rr. 2, 3—Suit, hearing of, not commenced—Default in appearance on adjourned date—Dismissal of suit under O. IX, r. 8—Part heard case adjourned—Default in appearance at time fixed—Procedure—Equity considered.

Ordinarily, if on an adjourned date of hearing either or both of the parties make default in appearance the Court should proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes indicated in O. IX of the Code of Civil Procedure: there is no necessity whatever to have recourse to O. XVII, r. 3 of the Code. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Where the hearing of a suit has not commenced and it is the plaintiff who is in default and there is no evidence to support his case, the suit should be dismissed under O. IX, r. 8, of the Code. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Courts should exercise extreme caution when on an adjourned date the parties or any of them fail to appear. They should in the first place have recourse to O. XVII, r. 2, of the Code rather than r. 3 and even in cases where r. 3 can be considered to apply, that is, where a case has been part heard and an adjournment granted, it would not be in accordance with justice to refuse a party, who has failed to appear on the adjourned date at the time fixed but appears at a later hour, the chance of having the suit restored. If the equity of the case demands, he should certainly have an opportunity of satisfying the Court that he had sufficient cause for not appearing. [p. 515, col. 2.]

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This suit was fixed for hearing for the 12th March 1920. Various adjournments were granted, the last of which was for the 24th July 1920. On that day when the case was called on the plaintiff was absent and the suit was dismissed. The same day the Pleader appeared and presented an application for the restoration of the suit to the file. On the 23rd August this application was dismissed. The learned Judge said:

"The applicant's Pleader urges that the dismissal of the suit should be held to be under O. XVII, r. 2 and O. IX, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, but it is clear that the Court has not dismissed the suit under the above provisions. The suit has been decided under O. XVII, r. 3, because the plaintiff to whom time was given failed to produce the evidence, and the provisions of O. IX do not, therefore, apply. The plaintiff's only remedy is to appeal against the decree."

The plaintiff has obtained a Rule from this Court on the 25th November 1921 calling on the defendant to show cause why the decision of the lower Court should not be reversed and a re trial of the suit directed. The decision of the learned Judge, if it were allowed to stand, would apply to every case in which there has been an adjournment before the trial of the case has actually commenced, to enable a party to produce his evidence, and the party does not appear on the adjourned date. We are constantly having cases in which the failure to distinguish between the provisions of r. 2 and r. 3 of O. XVII has caused injustice. That Order deals generally with "adjournments." Rule 1 gives the Court power to grant adjournments from time to to time provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit should continue from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

Under r. 2, where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by O. IX or make such other order as it thinks fit.

Order IX deals with "appearance of parties and the consequence of non-appearance." In all the cases which come under O. IX, the party against whom a decree or order is passed in default of his appearance, can apply to the Court to have the ex parte decree or order set aside on the ground that he can show sufficient cause for his non appearance. Ordinarily, then, if a case appears on the Board on an adjourned date for hearing, and there is default of appearance on the part of both or either of the parties, the Court must refer to O. IX so as to ascertain the proper procedure to be followed, and there is no necessity whatever to have any recourse to O. XVII, r. 3.

In this case the hearing of the suit had not commenced, and, therefore, as it was the plaintiff who was in default, and there was no evidence to support his case, the suit should have been dismissed under O. IX, r. 2.

Rule 3 of O. XVII is certainly somewhat unfortunately worded, as it may be construed as being applicable to every case in which an adjournment has been granted to a party because he has not been ready with his evidence, whether the trial has commenced or not. It would not make much difference if there were not authorities to the effect that if the case is decided under r. 3 the only remedy of an aggrieved party is by way of appeal or review. There seems to be a direct conflict between r. 2 and r. 3, because r. 2 deals with any kind of adjournment which can be ordered under r. 1 and gives the Court power to dispose of the suit as directed by O. IX in default of appearance of the parties or any of them. If the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear, the Court can pass a decree ex parte on the merits of the case as appearing from the plaintiff's evidence. If the plaintiff is absent and the defendant appears the Court shall dismiss the suit except in so far as the plaintiff's claim is admitted.

In either case the suit is disposed of or decided, but the party in default can apply to have the ex parte decree or order set aside on showing cause. If, then, there is a default in appearance after an adjournment, ordinarily O. XVII, r. 2, will apply, and there is no necessity to have recourse to the stricter provisions of r. 3 unless the hearing of the action has already commenced. I think r. 3 was only intended to apply to such cases, as otherwise this strange result would follow. If a case is adjourned by consent without any reason being given, and the plaintiff does not appear on the adjourned date, the suit will be dismissed and he can apply to have the ex parte decree set aside. If, however, the adjournment is granted on the ground that the plaintiff is not ready with his evidence and the plaintiff does not appear on the adjourned date, his suit will be dismissed; but he can only appeal or ask for a review. The ground for appeal or review will be exactly the same, viz., that he had sufficient cause to account for his non-appearance; and, again, if he succeeds the result will be the same. There will be a re-hearing. If the hearing of the action has actually commenced it is another matter, though, again, the result of an appeal may be that the lower Court is directed to continue the case from the point where the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, made default. It is necessary, therefore, for the Courts to exercise extreme caution when on the adjourned date the parties or any of them fail to appear. They should, in the first place, have recourse to O. XVII, r. 2 rather than r. 3, and even in cases where r. 3 can be considered to apply, that is to say, where the case has been part-heard and an adjournment granted, it would not be in accordance with justice to refuse a party who has failed to appear on the adjourned date at the time fixed, but appears at a later hour, the chance of having the suit restored. Generally, I should like to point out that, a party who has failed to appear at the time fixed for the hearing, if the equity of the case demands it, certainly should have an opportunity of satisfying the Court that he had sufficient cause for not appearing. Otherwise much delay is caused before a decision is arrived at on the merits. [See Shrimant Sagarirao v. Smith (1)].

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Object of section—Decretal amount, reduction of, in appeal—Restitution, application for, by judgment-debtor—Prejudice due to error in regulating order of sale items, effect of.

The object of section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to remove, by means of restitution, any prejudice due to the erroneous terms of the original decree.

Where the amount of a decree is slightly reduced on appeal and the judgment-debtor applies for restitution in respect of certain items of property which, he contends, need not have been sold at all, restitution should not be granted, as his position as regards the sale is in no way affected by the variation in the decree and the prejudice, if any, is solely due to the order in which the items of property were sold. [p. 517, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Nellore, dated 19th October 1920, in Original Petition No. 45 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnawami Aiyar with him Mr. Raghava Rao, for the Appellants.—The lower Court should not have ordered delivery. Here there is no question of placing the parties in the same position which they would have occupied but for the appellate decree. The decree was slightly varied as to interest. It cannot be said that the judgment-debtor was prejudicially affected by the decree of the first Court, which could only be removed by restitution. The only prejudice of which the judgment debtor could complain was that, if certin items were postponed to the last, the decree amount would have been realised by the sale of the rest of the items. The prejudice was due to the Court's order regulating the order of sale of the items. That is not within the terms of section 144, Civil Procedure Code of 1908, which is more restricted in scope than the corresponding provision in the Code of 1882.

Mr. O Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents, relied on Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudaly (1), Zain-ul-Abdin v. Asghar Ali Khan (2), Chandan Singh v. Ramdeni Singh (3) and Sagore Mandal v. Mofijuddin Sardar (4) in support of the lower Court's order.

JUDGMENT.—Appellants in this case represent the decree-holders in Original Suit No. 24 of 1911 on the file of the Nellore District Court. Respondents are the judgment-debtors. The decree was for Rs. 5,663 6 8 with subsequent interest at 9 per cent. per annum. It was confirmed on appeal to the Court with the single modification that the rate of subsequent interest was reduced from 9 per cent. to 6 per cent. While the appeal was still pending, 19 items of property belonging to the respondents were brought to sale in execution of the decree, the amount due being notified as Rs. 7,695 The correct amount calculated according to the decree of this Court was Rs. 7,815. The total sale-proceeds aggregated to Rs. 10,357 and of the 19 items, five items were purchased by appellants for Rs. 2,719.

Respondents applied under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, for restitution by re delivery of these five items, cancelling the sale and the District Judge passed an order in their favour, against which the present appeal is preferred.

In our opinion the order is not justified by the terms of the section. The latter runs thus, (1) where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed; and, for this purpose, the Court may make any orders including orders for the refund of costs, and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits, which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal.

(2) No suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub section ( ). Its object is clearly to enable the Court to place a party who has been prejudicially affected by a decree, which has been varied or reversed in his favour, in the same position as he would have occupied if the decree had stood originally in the same terms, as it stood after the variation or reversal.

To put it in another way : The prejudice to be removed by restitution must be the result of the erroneous terms of the original decree. Now, in the present case, respondents may fairly claim that as things turned out the decree amount might have been realised by the sale of the 14 items of property other than those of which they now claim re-delivery, if the items had been sold in a different order. The last item No. 19 fetched Rs. 3,600, the amount realised by the sale of the preceding items being only Rs. 6,757 which was nearly Rs. 1,000 under the decree amount. It was, therefore, necessary to proceed with the sale of Item No. 19. If the five items they claim had been put last in the list, the decree amount might have been realised without selling them. But such prejudice as respondents have suffered is due not to the variation in the decree, but to the terms of the sale order regulating the order in which the items were to be sold, and it is not alleged that respondents took any exception to this either at the time of fixing sale proclamation or at the time of sale.

Whether the amount to be realised was Rs. 7,695 or Rs. 7,495, did not affect the necessity of putting up the last item of sale. In other words, their position as regards the sale was in no way affected by the variation in the decree.

It was argued that any reduction in the amount of a decree affects the position of the judgment-debtor, inasmuch as it renders it easier for him to satisfy the decree and prevent the sale of his property in execution. No doubt, where the reduction is large this may be so, and whether it is so or not, must be a question of fact. But in the present case the reduction is so slight that it cannot be seriously contended that respondents could have satisfied a decree for Rs. 7,495 but could not raise the extra Rs. 200 and no such allegation has ever been made.

Of the cases relied on in support of the District Judge's order the first is Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudaly (1). The facts there were very similar to those before us; and if it had been decided under the present Civil Procedure Code, we should have felt bound to refer the matter to a Full Bench. Under the old Code (section 583) the Court was not limited, in granting such restitution as it thought fit, to placing the party in the same position as he would have occupied but for the variation or reversal of the original decree. Section 144 of the present Code gives, as has been pointed out, much more restricted power. The decision in that case may be distinguished on this ground and although, with all respect, we feel doubtful as to whether any equity in that case called for the decision arrived at, we do not feel bound to say more about it.

The Privy Council decision in Zain-ul-Abdin v. Asghar Ali Khan (2) which was relied on in Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudaly (1) dealt with a case in which the Court sale sought to be set aside would have been altogether unnecessary, under the modified decree, the amount found due having been realised by an earlier sale. Such a case, of course, stands on a different footing both in equity and with reference to the provisions of section 144.

Chandan Singh v. Ramdeni Singh (3) is another case like Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudaly (1) under the old Code, and although Sagore Mandal v. Mofijuddin Sardar (4) is under the present Code, it simply follows the earlier case without reference to the change in wording in the Code.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge, and direct respondents to pay appellants costs in both Courts.

An application under s. 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act by a Hindu father to be appointed the guardian of his minor son who is living with his mother is not competent, because, under the Hindu Law, the father is already the natural guardian of his minor son. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The petitioner filed this application under the Guardians and Wards Act to be appointed guardian of the person of his minor son, who was living with his mother, opponent No. 4, and his maternal grandfather, opponent No. 5. I may point out at once that the application ought to have been dismissed, because such an application by a Hindu father under the Guardians and Wards Act, presumably under section 19, is not competent, and a considerable amount of confusion has arisen in the course of the argument from neglecting to recognise that fact. The application should have been made under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, because it is admitted that under Hindu Law the father is the natural guardian of his minor son, and he can apply to the Court, if his ward leaves or is removed from his custody, for an order for the minor's return, and the Court will, if it is of opinion that it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to his guardian, make such an order.

The facts of this case make it perfectly clear that it is not to the interests of the minor that the Court should make such an order. Unfortunately there have been disagreements between the petitioner and his first wife, with the result that for some years she has been living separate with her father and has had the custody of the boy. The petitioner has married again, and it is obvious that the boy, who was only seven years old at the time this application was made, will be much better off living with his mother than with his father. No suggestion whatever has been made as to the character of the mother, which would be good ground for taking away the boy from her tender care and handing him over to the father who would be a perfect stranger to him. The step-mother cannot be expected to be very much interested in his welfare, and the uncles and any members of the prior generation who may be living in the house will also not be likely to give this small boy the attention and sympathy which he naturally requires.

Once it is recognised that the application should have been made under section 25 of the Act, and not under section 19, which has nothing whatever to do with the case, a decision can easily be arrived at. We have nothing to do with the question whether the father is unfit to be the guardian of the person of the minor. That would only be at issue if there was an application by another person to have a guardian appointed other than the father; and we have to accept the facts as we find them, that this small boy has been living with his mother for the last five years, and apparently the father has acquiesced in that. As my learned brother has pointed out, it is really a question what is the proper time for the father to make an application to the Court to obtain the custody of his son, and that question must depend entirely upon the further question when will it be for the interests and welfare of the minor to return to the custody of his father.

We were referred to the case of Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (1) as being in favour of the respondents, but when that case is read, it will be found that it is entirely in favour of the appellant in this case. The father there had accepted an offer made by the defendant to take charge of his two sons for educating them in England. He was dissatisfied later on with that arrangement, so he wanted to get back the custody of his children. Their Lordships said at page 634 :*

"The real question was whether he (the father) was still entitled to exercise the functions of guardian and resume the custody of his sons and alter the scheme which had been formulated for their education...The real question was whether in the events which had happened the plaintiff was at liberty to revoke it (the authority given by the said letter). Both questions fell to be determined having regard to the interests and welfare of the infants, bearing in mind, of course, their parentage and religion, and could only be decided by a Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants, and in their presence."

Therefore, treating it as an application under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act asking the Court to direct the return of the boy to the father, I think myself it is distinctly to the interests and welfare of the boy to remain with his mother. That, of course, will not prevent the father from making a further application at any later date when he may be able to satisfy the Court that it will then be to the interests and welfare of the minor that he should leave his mother's care and live with his father. The appeal must be allowed and the application dismissed with costs throughout. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—I concur in the order proposed by the Chief Justice. I desire to add that this order is made on the footing that the application made to the District Court by the father is one under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act for the custody of the minor. It is not necessary for the purposes of this appeal to decide the question as to whether a father can properly make an application under the Guardians and Wards Act to be formally appointed the guardian of his minor son. That was evidently not necessary in the present case ; and though the application is in form for such an appointment, it is in substance an application for the custody of the minor and must be treated and disposed of as such. On that footing the only question is, whether it is for the welfare of the minor that the existing custody of the mother should be disturbed. It is unfortunate that, owing to the differences between the father and the mother, it has become necessary to consider this question : and it is still possible that in future these differences may be made up and that the interests of the minor may be advanced by the co-operation of the father and the mother in that respect. But at present it seems to me fairly clear that it is not desirable for the welfare of the minor that the custody should be changed. The boy is of tender age and I think that at present the personal care of the mother is a paramount consideration. On that ground I agree that the present application of the father for the custody of his minor son should be dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Pro-note—Separate oral agreement to pay additional interest, whether provable.

Where in a suit on a promissory-note the plaintiff alleges an oral agreement to pay interest at a higher rate than mentioned in the pro-note, he is not entitled to prove the alleged oral agreement by parol evidence. [p. 520, col 2]

Ali Jawad v. Kulanjan Singh, 66 Ind. Cas. 131; 20 A. L. J. 247; 44 A. 421, referred to.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 16th November 1921.

Mr. M. Wasim, holding brief of Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought on a pro note executed by the two defendants for Rs. 10,000. The pro-note provided that both the defendants were jointly and severally liable and that interest should be payable at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem. In the plaint it was also alleged that there was a separate agreement between the plaintiffs and the second defendant whereby the second defendant agreed to pay additional interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem. The plaintiffs admitted that Rs. 1,000 had been realised and claimed Rs. 10,765 from the defendants and Rs. 1,465 from the second defendant alone. The first defendant paid the sum due on the pro-note into Court for payment to the plaintiffs. He pleaded that the sum of Rs. 1,000 had been paid by him on the 1st of August 1921 and the plaintiffs had agreed to wait until October before filing the suit but they filed it on the 5th of September and, therefore, they were not entitled to get costs from him. He also pleaded that the plaintiffs were not entitled to prove the alleged oral contract regarding the additional rate of interest and that he was not liable to costs. The second defendant did not appear to contest the suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had agreed with defendant No. 1 to wait till October before filing the suit and that he was not liable to costs. He also held that the alleged oral agreement can be proved and that the second defendant had agreed to pay additional interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem. He has dismissed the suit as against the defendant No. 1 and has given a decree against the defendant No. 2 for Rs. ,465 and the full costs of the suit. Against this decree the second defendant has appealed, and two points only are taken in arguing the appeal. The first is, that the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act bar the plaintiffs-respondents from proving the alleged oral agreement. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that section 92 is not applicable. He argues that the oral contract was entered into between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 before the pro-note was executed, that the agreement by defendant No. 2 to pay interest at 1 per cent. constituted a condition precedent to the execution of the pro note and that proviso (3) to section 92 was applicable. It seems to me clear that that proviso has no application whatsoever to the present case. As has been pointed out in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Evidence Act at page 617 of the 7th Edition, this proviso is intended to embody the rule that when, at the time of a written contract being entered into, it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed, parol evidence of such oral argument is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and, consequently, that the written contract has not become binding. Until the condition is performed there is, in fact, no written agreement at all. This is the view expressed in a recent case by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court, Ali Jawad v. Kulanjan Singh (1). And it is quite clear that proviso (2) to section 92 of the Evidence Act cannot help the respondents who wish to prove a separate oral agreement as to the rate of interest between them and the appellant. The document is not silent with regard to the rate of interest, as it distinctly states that the rate shall be 8 annas per cent. per mensem, and the oral agreement which the respondents seek to prove is clearly inconsistent with the terms of the document itself. It is, however, urged that, while under the pro-note the liability for payment of the interest as well as the principal is a joint liability of both the defendants, the second defendant only is liable under the oral agreement. This argument has no force as the liability under the pro-note is both joint and several liabilty. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs cannot prove the separate oral agreement on which they wished to rely.

The other point taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant was with regard to costs. Although the plaintiffs had agreed not to bring a suit against defendant No. 1 till October yet they had to bring their suit against the defendant No. 2, appellant, when they did so in order to save limitation But as the defendant No. 2 did not defend the suit it would appear that under the rules the plaintiffs are entitled only to one fourth of their costs as against him.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed as against the defendant No. 2 but the plaintiffs will be allowed one fourth of their costs in the lower Court on the sum of Rs. 10,765, the amount due under the pro-note at the time of institution of the suit. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court.

THE ASSISTANT COLLECTOR, HAVELI—RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 18—Compensation, measure of—Valuation of immoveable property—Hypothetical calculations, value of—Important points that arise on compulsory acquisition.

A purchase of property by a willing purchaser from a willing seller, is direct evidence of the market-value of the property, and when Government notifies its intention to compulsorily acquire a property, they are bound to offer what was given for the property unless they are able to show conclusively that a fair value had not been given for the property. Where, however, the purchaser claims considerably more than what he gave for the property, he must show that in the neighbourhood there has been a general rise in the value of property between the date of his purchase and the date of the compulsory acquisition by Government. [p. 523, col. 1.]

The valuation of immoveable property is not an exact science and the very best efforts of an expert or a Court to fix a market value for a property can never amount to much more than a quasi-scientific guess which the Court should, in the case of compulsory acquisition, temper with liberality. Hypothetical calculations when put forward before a Court of first instance should be seriously considered, but they are usually of no assistance whatever in enabling it to come to a decision with regard to the market value of the property. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Where land is compulsorily acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act, the two most important questions that arise are :

(1) Whether the claimant has paid so high a price that a Court may consider that he has not displayed the ordinary caution which a purchaser of land should display.

(2) Whether there has been any increase in the value of property in the neighbourhood within the time which elapsed between his purchase and Government Notification, to show that the property is worth more than what he gave for it. [p. 522, col. 2; p. 523, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Poona, in Reference No. 11 of 1919.

Mr. Campbell, instructed by Messrs. Payne & Co, for the Appellant.

Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate General (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Poona in a reference under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The land in reference is a square piece of land measuring 4·77 acres with good frontages on Connaught Road and Wellesley Road. In the far corner of it there was a bungalow, which undoubtedly at the time the property was notified for acquisition on the 25th April 1919, was in a state of disrepair. The property is situated certainly near the centre of the business part of the Poona City, excluding, of course, the city proper. All round there are public offices, hotels, churches, shops and other such premises. I think, the Judge is right in saying that it is not quite in the best situation, either for being used for residential purposes or for shops which are patronised by European customers. At the same time, it cannot be doubted that the property is in the centre of what I may call the business quarter of the town.

The claimant bought the property from Mrs. Sassoon for Rs 92,500 in July 1918. Mrs. Sassoon had not been in India for some years, and her affairs were being looked after by her agents. The property had not been very well looked after. The bungalow was rented by Mr. Defreece at Rs. 150 a month, and we may safely say that, however favourable the situation of the property may have been, it does not appear from the evidence that there had been much demand for it before its acquisition. But for whatever reasons the claimant bought the property in 1918, there can be no doubt that that was a purchase by a willing purchaser from a willing seller, and it is, in the first place, direct evidence of the market-value of the property in July 1918. It would be open to the claimant to show that in this neighbourhood there has been a general rise in the value of property between July 1918 and April 1919, but he has absolutely failed to produce any evidence to show that the value of property in this neighbourhood has increased. Of course, it may be said that from the very nature of the use to which the surrounding properties are put, it would not be likely that many of these properties would come into the market. Still, if the claimant wishes to show that his property in April 1919 was worth more than what he gave for it, he would have to produce evidence to that effect.

On the other hand, it would be open to Government to show that the claimant, when he purchased the property, had taken a far too sanguine a view of its possibilities in the future. The Acquisition Officer, without considering the price which the claimant had paid for the property, has in the offer he made to the claimant done everything he could to cut down the value of the property. He has valued the bungalow on a rental of Rs. 300 a month with a life 25 years. To that he has added the deferred value of the site at the end of the period and the value of the compound 14,334 square yards at Rs. 6,000 an acre or a little more than a rupee a square yard, the whole giving a total of Rs. 55,688, to which had to be added, the 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition. Now that was a very low offer to make to a man who had purchased the property a few months before, for Rs, 9,500. On the other hand, the claimant went to the other extreme. He produced a report by Mr. Fritchley, another by Mr. Bhedwar, and a third by Mr. Batley, all containing fantastic conglomerations of figures produced for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the property which the claimant had purchased for Rs. 92,500 in July 1918 was worth over two lacs in April 1919. They are obviously worthless.

This is one of those numerous cases which show how undesirable it is that valuations for compulsory land acquisition should be brought before a Court of Law. If this case had gone before an arbitrator, the whole of these elaborate calculations would have been swept aside in a few words. But in a Court of Law such evidence cannot be excluded and the Court of first instance has to seriously consider all the various hypothetical considerations produced on the one side or the other. Speaking for myself, in dealing with the case in appeal, it is open to us to express an opinion that all those calculations are of no assistance whatever in enabling the Court to come to a decision with regard to the market value of the land in April 1919.

The two most important questions are, (1) whether the claimant has paid so high a price that the Court may consider that he had not displayed the ordinary caution which a purchaser of land should display; (2) whether there has been any increase in the value of property in the neighbourhood within the few months which elapsed between his purchase and the Government Notification to show that the property in April 1919 was worth more than what he gave for it. I see no reason to think that the price of Rs. 92,500 which the claimant gave for the property in July 1918 was not a fair market-value of the property. But I think he has failed entirely to prove that there was any chance of a purchaser being found in April 1919 who would give more than that price for the property. No doubt, in considering the question of value from a purely hypothetical point of view, it would be open to both sides to try and show, the one that, in whatever manner the property was developed, the property would not realize as much as Rs. 92,500, the other that it would realize considerably more. One side would be inclined to cast as much doubt as possible on the probabilities of profitable user, while the other side would endeavour to show that every portion of the property would be put to a very profitable use; so that the capital value would amount to very much more than the purchase price.

But all those considerations are purely hypothetical, and a great deal of the arguments used by the experts on both sides, the one to appreciate, the other to depreciate the value, if one took the trouble to analyse them would be found to have very little value. It seems to me that, when Government notified this property for compulsory acquisition in April 1919, they were bound to offer the claimant what he had given a few months before the property, unless they were able to show conclusively that he had not given a fair value for the property. After all, the Government have very wide powers under the Land Acquisition Act to deprive a man of his property, and it is only fair that he should be recouped on a liberal scale; any endeavours to unduly depreciate the value of properties that have to be acquired in order that Government may acquire as cheaply as possible, should be condemned equally with the exaggerated valuations put forward by claimants.

It seems to me, on a consideration of all the evidence in the case, that it all amounts to this, that the claimant has not proved that he could have realized more for this property in April 1919 than what he paid for it. The Government have not proved that if it was put in the market it would realize less. From the evidence it is difficult to see how a fair rent could have been obtained for the bungalow without spending a considerable amount in repairing and furnishing it. The property, as it stands, can best be valued at an all over rate per acre giving the fullest consideration to its situation. Looking at it in this way, the claimant paid about 16,000 rupees an acre. This on the evidence was a very fair rate and even the witness Hormasji Sorabji did not put the value of the land higher than Rs. 15,000 an acre, though he undoubtedly put an exaggerated value on the bungalow. Therefore, I think, that the claimant should be awarded Rs. 92,500 together with 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition. I would once more refer to the futility of elaborate calculations which purport to enable one to ascertain the marketable value of property almost to annas and pies, and I would draw attention, in illustration of that, to the calculations made by the District Judge by which he arrived at the conclusion that the property was worth Rs 90,193. The valuation of immoveable property is not an exact science, and the very best efforts of an expert or a Court to fix a market value for a property like this can never amount to much more than a quasi scientific guess, which the Court should, in the case of compulsory acquisition, temper with liberality. Considering the appellant made a claim of two lacs even here, there will be no order as to costs.

SHAH, J.—I agree that the market value in this case should be fixed at Rs. 92,500, which is the amount paid by the claimant for this property in July 1918. I do not think that under the circumstances of this case the figures supplied to the lower Court on certain hypothetical bases afford any assistance to the Court in determining the true market value. The only safe basis which, on the facts of this case, is most favourable to the claimant, is the price which he paid for the property in July 1918. In spite of the argument of the learned Advocate-General to the contrary, there is nothing on the record of this case to show that that was not a fair market price at the time when he purchased the property. The fact that he paid that amount is indicative of the then value of the property and unless there is any thing definite on the record to justify the result that the market value was really less than what he paid for it at the time, that argument could not be accepted.

The only question which presents some difficulty to my mind is whether the claimant is entitled to anything more than the amount which he paid in July 1918 on the ground that there was some increase in the value of the property from July 1918 to April 1919, when it was notified for acquisition. It may be that there was some rise, generally speaking, in the value of properties at Poona during that interval, but it was for the claimant to prove that during that period, i.e., from July 1918 to April 1919, there had been such appreciable rise that he was entitled to some extra compensation on that account. Though I am rather inclined on general grounds to favour the view that probably there was some rise in the values of properties in this locality during that period, in the absence of any evidence on that point it is not possible to give effect to that consideration. I think, therefore, that the highest amount that the claimant could be awarded as the market value of the property is the amount which he paid in July 1918.

I, Art. 11 A, applicability of.

In cases coming under O XXI, rr. 98, 99 or 101 of the Code of Civil Procedure an order to be conclusive under r. 103 must be an order passed after investigation. [p. 527, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, an application under r. 100 complaining of dispossession by a decree-holder or auction-purchaser is dismissed for default without holding some sort of investigation, as expressly laid down by sub-rule (2) of r. 100 and r. 101, the special rule of limitation contained in Art. 11A of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act has no application and a suit to recover possession on establishment of title instituted more than one year after the date of the order of dismissal for default is not barred by limitation.

(Case-law considered.)

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Burdwan, dated the 14th of May 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Katwa, dated the 31st of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Chowdhury (with him Babu Haradone Chatterjee), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of title and recovery of possession. The defence was that the defendants Nos. 1—15 purchased the property in execution of a decree obtained by them against Baidya Nath Sarkar. They took possession through Court. The plaintiffs applied under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code but the application was ultimately dismissed on 14th February 1914. The present suit was brought on 27th July 1915. The first Court decreed the suit On appeal it has been dismissed on the ground of limitation. I submit the special rule of limitation as contained in Art. 11A of the Limitation Act does not apply. Our previous application was dismissed for default. There was no investigation under O. XXI, r. 100 (2) and r. 101, Civil Procedure Code. There must be some sort of investigation before the order can be treated as conclusive. Refers to Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), Kunja

I submit, that under the circumstances the present suit is clearly not barred under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt, for the Respondents.—Under section 283 of Act XIV of 1882 investigation was necessary under sections 280, 281 or 282. But the law under the New Code of 1908 has been changed. O. XXI, r. 63 does not mention any specific rules under which orders in claim cases are passed. Refers to Nogendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan (6), Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (7), Satindra Nath v. Siva Prasad Bhakat (8).

Article 11A of the Limitation Act applies even to cases where there has been no investigation. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of right to, and recovery of possession of, the property in dispute from which the plaintiffs were dispossessed by the defendants Nos. 1 to 15 who purchased the property in execution of a decree which they obtained against one Baidya Nath Sarkar.

It appears that the defendants Nos. 1 to 15 took possession of the property in dispute through Court, and the plaintiffs applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 100. On the day ultimately fixed for the hearing of the case, namely, on the 14th February 1914, neither the petitioners nor their Pleader appeared and the petition was accordingly dismissed for default.

The present suit was instituted on the 27th July 1915 which was more than one year after the date of the said order.

The question is whether the suit is barred by the provisions of Art. 11A of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

The Court of first instance decided both the questions of title and limitation in favour of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

O. XXI, r. 97 deals with a case of obstruction or resistance by any person to a holder of a decree for the possession of immoveable property or the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree, and sub rule (2) of that rule lays down that the Court shall fix a date for investigating the matter and rr. 98 and 99 states what is to be done according to the result of the investigation.

R. 100 deals with the case of any person other than the judgment-debtor who is dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property, or, where such property has been sold in execution of a decree, by the purchaser thereof.

Sub rule (2), rule 100 lays down that the Court shall fix a day for investigating the matter and shall summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer the same.

R. 101 provides that the Court, if satisfied that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account, or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, shall direct that the applicant be put into possession of the property.

Then comes r. 103 which provides that any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 9 or r. 101, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive.

There were similar provisions in Act XIV of 1882, section 332 of which dealt with the case of dispossession of any person other than the judgment-debtor by the holder of a decree for possession, section 334 dealt with cases of obstruction to the purchaser of any immoveable property by the judgment-debtor or any one on his behalf, and section 335 dealt with cases where the purchaser of any such property is resisted or obstructed by any person other than the judgment debtor claiming in good faith a right to the present possession thereof, or where in delivering possession any such person is dispossessed.

There is no doubt that upon an application being made to the Court under O. XXI, r. 100, the Court has to hold some sort of investigation as expressly laid down by sub-rule 2 of r. 100 and r. 101.

In this case there was no investigation and the case was dismissed for default. The question is whether under these circumstances the special limitation contained in Art. 11A of the Limitation Act applies.

The provisions of O. XXI, rr. 97 to 103 are analogous to sections 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, (corresponding to O. XXI, rr. 53 to 63 of the present Civil Procedure Code). Those sections relate to claims preferred to attachment of immoveable property.

There have been numerous decisions on the question whether the one year's limitation under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act, (XV of 1877), apply to cases where there has been no investigation of a claim, under section 278, or objections under section 332 or 335, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The decisions are not uniform.

In the case of Sardhuri Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1) in dealing with a case under section 278 of Act XIV of 1882 the Judicial Committee observed that the policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title, and pointed out that the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go. That indicates that in their Lordships' opinion (as the sections expressly laid down) there should be some investigation before the order can be treated as conclusive. There are various other cases in which it has been held that there must be some investigation by the Court before the order can be held to be conclusive and Article 11 of the Limitation Act may be applicable to the case.

It is to be observed, however, with reference to claim cases, that sections 278 to 282 provided for an investigation and section 283 provided that "the party against whom an order under section 280, 281 or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claim to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." But the corresponding provisions of present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) viz., O. XXI, r. 63 provides that "where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." It is to be observed, therefore, that whereas in section 283 of Act XIV of 1882 there was express reference to sections 280, 281 and 282 which dealt with investigation into a claim. O. XXI, r. 63 does not make any mention of any specific rules under which orders in claim cases are passed. Upon these grounds it has been held in some resent cases that there has been a change in the law and that the decisions under the old Code are no longer in force.

In the case of Nogendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan (6) it was held that where an application has been dismissed with or without investigation, a regular suit, if instituted, must be commenced within one year from the date of such order The learned Judges held as follows:—"All that is now necessary is that a claim should be preferred under rule 58 and that there should be an order either allowing or rejecting it. The party against whom the order is made may then bring a suit in the language of rule 63 'to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute'."

The same view has been taken in the case of Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (7) where a Full Bench of the Madras High Court referring to the general policy of the previous Code as explained by the Judicial Committee in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1) said that section 283 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 only gave a right of suit to the party against whom an order had been passed under section 280, 281 or 282 and did not provide for the case when the Court under section 278 refused to investigate the claim on the ground that it had been designedly or unnecessarily delayed. In such cases, section 283 failed to provide for the speedy settlement of questions of title raised by the claim. The learned Judges held that the intention of the Legislature was to widen the scope of the rule in accordance with the general policy of this legislation as explained by the highest Tribunal. It may be mentioned that in the case before the Madras Full Bench there was no order either allowing or rejecting the claim, and the Court directed that the allegations of the claimant would be notified to the bidders with the remark that she "did not take steps to have her claim inquired into during the last 10 months."

A similar view has also been taken in the case of Ponnusami Pillai v. Ramu Ammal (14) where it is held that, "the language of Art. 11 in the new Act is more comprehensive than that of the previous Act, and that has been construed in this Court as covering orders after full investigation as well as orders passed on default." See also observations on the point in the case of Satindra Nath v. Siva Prasad Bhakat (8).

These decisions relate to claim cases and, as stated above, they are based upon the alteration in the wording of r. 63, O. XXI as compared with section 285 of the old Code.

So far as the provisions of r. 103 are concerned, there has been no change in the Civil Procedure Code as compared with sections 332 and 335 of the old Code.

Sub-rule (2) of r. 100 and r. 101 (as also rr. 97 to 99) expressly provide that the Court shall investigate the matter and any order made under r. 101 (or r. 99) must, therefore, be the result of such investigation. When, therefore, r. 103 lays down that any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property but subject to the result of such suit (if any) the order shall be conclusive, it evidently contemplates an order passed after investigation as laid down in rr. 97 to 99 or rr. 100 and 101. The conclusiveness, therefore, attaches to an order made after investigation under those rules. The question has been considered with reference to section 335 of the old Code in the case of Kunj Behari Lal v Kandh Prasad Narain Singh (2) where the learned Judges held that "it is manifest, therefore, from the language of the Code itself, that the only order upon which the character of finality is impressed, is an order made upon inquiry" and that where there has been no investigation at all and no judicial determination and the Court without any enquiry dismissed the application for default and withdrew the proceedings, it is impossible to say that the order is of the description contemplated by section 335, and they approved of the decision in the case of Sarat Chandra Bisu v. Tarini Prasad Pal Chowdhury (3).

We have been referred by the learned Pleader for the respondent to the cases of Bhagun Chand v. Shibbi (9) and Chandi Prasad v. Nand Kishore (10) in support of the proposition that one year's rule of limitation has been applied even in cases where there has been no investigation. But in the first case it appears that the Pleader for the applicant appeared and stated that his client did not wish to adduce any evidence and the application was accordingly dismissed. In the second case, the Pleaders for both parties were present; no evidence was adduced and the learned Judges held that the dismissal of the petition under those circumstances could not be treated as dismissal for default of appearance. Neither of these cases, therefore, was dismissed for default.

It is also contended that the princip upon which it has been held that the limi tion of one year applies to orders passe connection with claim cases, even v there has been no investigation should also be applied to a case like the present. But, as pointed out above, r. 63 does not refer to orders passed under r. 60, 61 or 62 of the Code under which the orders are made and it is upon that ground that the learned Judges in Nogendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan (6) and some other cases referred to above, held that the law had been changed.

So far as O. XXI, r. 103 is concerned there has been no change in the law. That rule like section 335 of Act XIV of 1882 refers to the previous rules, viz., rr. 98, 99 and 101 under which orders are to be made after investigation. The distinction appears to be a narrow one, because orders under the claim sections have also to be made after investigation. But, having regard to the fact that although there was express reference to sections 280 to 282 in section 283, of Act XIV of 1882, there is no reference to those sections (corresponding to rr. 58 to 62) in r. 63, whereas in O. XXI, r. 103 there is express reference to rr. 98, 99 and 101 under which the investigation is to be made, and, having regard to the decisions referred to above, we are constrained to hold that in cases coming under O. XXI, rr. 98, 99 or 101, an order in order to be conclusive must be an order passed after investigation.

The next question for consideration is what constitutes "investigation," and it is a question of some difficulty in some cases.

As pointed out by the Judicial Committee (in connection with claim cases) in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1) the Court does not lay down to what extent the investigation should go. There seems to be a divergence of opinion as to what constitutes "investigation."

In a number of cases mostly relating to claim cases—where the claimant did not adduce evidence and the claim was dismissed, it was held that a suit brought more than a year after the date of the order was barred, some of the decisions were based on the ground that, where a party was allowed an opportunity of adducing evidence but failed to do so and there was an order rejecting the claim purporting to be made under section 281, there was investigation sufficient to bring the case under section 281. See Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (15) and the earlier cases of Gooroo Doos Roy v. Sona Monee Dossia (16) and Sreemunto Hajrah v. Syud Tajooddeen (17).

In some cases where the party was not even present as in Tripoora Soonduree Debia v. Ijjatoonnissa Khatoon (11), Gulab v Mutsaddi (12) Jugal Kishore Marwari v. Bejoy Krishna Mukerjee (13) (the last two cases being under the present Code) and Lachmi Narain v. Martindell (18) (a case under the Rent Act XII of 1881) the same principle was applied.

On the other hand, in some other cases it was held that the limitation did not apply where the order was passed dismissing the case for default of appearence [see Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (4) and Sarala Subba Rau v. Rammsala Timmayya (5)].

It is difficult to reconcile all these decisions. It may be said (as it was urged in some of the cases) that there is no reason why the limitation should apply where the party appears and is unable to, or does not, adduce evidence; and that the limitation should not apply where the party takes care not to come to Court on the day fixed for hearing. But a distinction has been drawn in the Civil Procedure Code between a case where it is dismissed for default, and a case where the party appears and fails to adduce evidence and the case is, in consequence, dismissed in which event the dismissal is not one for default.

It is pointed out on behalf of the respondent that Art. 11A of the Limitation Act does not refer to any section or rule of the Civil Procedure Code and is very general in its terms. It is accordingly contended that an order passed under rule 103 dismissing a case for default comes under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

Art. 11A refers to a suit by a person against whom an order has been made under the Code (among others) upon an application by a person dispossessed of immoveable property in the delivery of possession thereof to the decree holder or purchaser. But although the Article does not refer to any section, the order must be an order under O. XXI, r. 103. That rule expressly refers (15) 32 C. 537.

(16) 20 W. R. 345.
(17) 21 W. R. 409.
(18) 19 A. 253; A. W. N. (1897) 60; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 166 (F. B.).

to rr. 98, 99 and 101 and these rules provide for investigation into a petition of objection. The right of suit is given by r. 103 only when there is any order under rr. 98, 99 or 101, and Art. 11A merely provides for limitation applicable to such suits. We do not think it satisfactory to hold that although the provisions relating to claims and those relating to delivery of possession are similar in nature, different periods of limitation should be applied, but, as already stated, having regard to the decisions under sections 332 and 335 and to the fact that the language of sections 332 and 335 has been retained in O. XX, r. 103, though the language of O. XXI, r. 63 has been altered from that of section 283 of Act XIV of 1882, we must hold that the order dismissing the application under O. XXI, r. 101 for default is not barred by the provisions of Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

The appeal must accordingly be allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. We make no order as to costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court which will be borne by each party.

Appeal allowed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 7 OF 1921.

Pandit PRAG NARAYAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Covenant postponing redemption, when amounts to clog on equity of redemption—Redemption before expiry of term, when allowed—Undue influence—Burden of proof.

A covenant postponing redemption for a long term need not necessarily of itself amount to a clog on the equity of redemption, but the effect of all the conditions in the deed must be considered as a whole, and if those conditions would result in making redemption very difficult, if not impossible, at the end of the term, a Court may ignore the covenant postponing redemption and may allow redemption at any time on such terms as it thinks fit [p. 534, col. 1.]

Durga Singh v Nawab Mirza Muhammad Raza Husain Khan, 25 Ind. Cas. 912; 17 O. C. 313 and Sarabdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh, 24 Ind. Cas. 705; 12 A. L. J. 927; 36 A 551, followed

Where in the case of a mortgage-deed it is shown that the mortgagee's brother was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagor and that the terms of the deed are clearly hard and unconscionable and that an unfair advantage was taken of the mortgagor in getting him to execute the deed, the burden lies upon the mortgagee to show that undue influence, under the circumstances, was not exercised. [p. 532, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 8th September 1920.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Dr. J. N. Misra and Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are somewhat complicated. The property in suit consists of a 4 annas share in Mauza Satan in the District of Unao. It belonged to one Baldeo Bakhsh, the grandfather of Har Dayal who was defendant No. 9 in the lower Court. On the 1st of September 1868 Baldeo Bakhsh mortgaged the property with possession to one Daya Shankar. Possession was not given and in 1870 Daya Shankar brought a suit against Baldeo Bakhsh and got a decree for possession as mortgagee of 1 anna only out of the 4 annas. Daya Shankar obtained a review of judgment and on the 29th of April 1871 the original decree was amended and he was given a decree for possession of the remaining 3 annas in full proprietary right. This was clearly a mistake, as he was entitled to possession only as mortgagee, but no appeal was filed against this decree. On the 9th of February 1912 Har Dayal, the grandson of Baldeo Bakhsh, executed a mortgage deed in favour of Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai for a sum of Rs. 4,075 out of which Rs. 2,000 were to be left with the mortgagees for redeeming Daya Shankar's mortgage. Under this deed it was provided that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem until after the period of 41 years. Interest was fixed at 1·8 per cent. per mensem: the profits of the property were estimated at Rs. 200 and the balance of interest amounting to Rs. 538·8·0 was to be added to the principal and was to be paid with compound interest along with the principal at the time of redemption. Badri Bisal, one of the mortgagees is the father of

KUNJ BEHARI LAL v. PRAG NARAYAN.

Pandit Prag Narain, the plaintiff in the present suit. On the 28th February 1912, Har Dayal alleging himself to be a minor instituted a suit through his next friend Baij Nath for cancellation of the mortgage-deed of the 9th of February 1912 on the grounds that Har Dayal was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed and that the mortgage had been obtained by undue influence. Baij Nath applied to the District Judge on the 11th of April 1912 to be appointed guardian of the person and property of Har Dayal. In that application he stated that he was the brother-in-law of Har Dayal and was the de facto guardian of his person and property, and he asked to be appointed guardian by the Court in order that he might make arrangements for the payment of Daya Shankar's mortgage and for redeeming Har Dayal's property. It is admitted that Har Dayal had no property other than the 4-annas share now in suit. On the 26th of April 1912 Baij Nath was appointed by the District Judge as guardian of the property of Har Dayal and his mother desired that Baij Nath should be appointed and the application was unopposed. On the very day on which he was appointed guardian Baij Nath applied for permission to mortgage or sell some portion of the minor's property for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage held by Daya Shankar. This application was refused by the learned District Judge by his order of the 17th of May 1912. On the 29th of March 1913 the suit brought by Har Dayal through his next friend Baij Nath for cancellation of the mortgage executed by Har Dayal in favour of Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai was compromised and Har Dayal was given a decree for cancellation of the mortgage on condition of payment of Rs. 1,300 to the mortgagees on or before the 3rd of April 1913. It is to be noted that in this compromise the plea of minority was withdrawn and Har Dayal was recognised as having attained majority, although the order of the District Judge appointing Baij Nath as his guardian had not been discharged, and according to his age given in the guardianship proceedings he could not have been more than 17 years old at the time of the compromise. It is also to be noted that the compromise was brought about by Baij Nath who stated before the Court that he had come to terms with the defendants (Exhibit 12). Two days afterwards on the 31st of March 1913 the mortgage-deed, which is the basis of the present suit, was executed by Har Dayal in favour of Jagan Nath. Jagan Nath was admittedly the brother of Baij Nath and they with their other brother, Ganga Narain, and their sons were members of a joint Hindu family. The mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 5,000 made of the following items:—

Rs. 1,200 were to be paid to Baij Nath for conducting the case of Har Dayal against Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai.

Rs. 1,300 were to be deposited in Court for payment to Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai in accordance with the terms of the compromise decree of the 29th of March 1913:

Rs. 2,440 were left with the mortgagee to redeem the mortgage of the 1st of September 1865 and for other costs that might be incurred in redeeming it: and the balance of

Rs. 60 was to be spent in the purchase of stamp and costs of execution of the mortgage-deed.

This mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem for a period of 50 years. Interest was fixed at 12 annas per cent. per mensem; the profits of the property was estimated at Rs. 300 and balance of interest amounting to Rs. 150 was to be added to the principal and was to be paid with interest at the same rate along with the principal at the time of redemption. It will be observed that Har Dayal, the mortgagor, was under the terms of the mortgage deed to receive no portion of the consideration. On the 10th of April 1913 Jagan Nath brought a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1865 against the representatives of Daya Shankar. He obtained a decree, paid the mortgage-money amounting to Rs. 2,232-5-0 and obtained possession of the 4 annas share now in suit. In the meantime Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai filed an appeal in the Judicial Commissioner's Court against the compromise decree of the 29th of March 1913, and Har Dayal, who had presumably been won over by Badri

KUNJ BEHARI LAL V. PRAG NARAYAN.

Bisal confessed judgment and prayed that his suit should be dismissed. On the 10th of March 1915 the appeal was allowed and the suit was dismissed. Bardi Bisal and Sheo Sahai thereupon filed a suit on the 11th of May 1915 on the basis of their mortgage-deed of the 9th February 1912 for possession of the mortgaged property. Their suit was dismissed and they were directed to take the sum of Rs. 1,300 deposited in Court by Jagan Nath to their credit. That decree was confirmed in appeal by this Court. The result of all these proceedings was that Jagan Nath obtained possession as mortgagee of the 4-annas share by virtue of his mortgage of the 31st of March 1913.

On the 2nd of July 1919, Har Dayal sold his equity of redemption to Prag Narayan, the plaintiff, who is the son of Badri Bisal. Prag Narayan brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for redemption of the 4 annas share. In his plaint he alleged that the mortgage deed was not binding on Har Dayal and was, therefore, not binding on him on the grounds, among, others that the conditions in the deed were hard and unconscionable and were a clog on the equity of redemption and that the deed had been obtained from Har Dayal by the exercise of undue influence. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the terms of the deed taken together are hard and unconscionable, that they amount to a clog on the equity of redemption and that the deed was executed under undue influence. On these grounds he has held that the plaintiff who is the representative of the mortgagor is entitled to redeem although the period fixed in the mortgage-deed has not yet expired. He has given the plaintiff a decree for redemption on payment of the principal sum of Rs. 5,000 plus Rs. 1,200 per annum for 3 years, that is, from the date of the deed 31st March 1913 till the end of the period fixed for payment, and he has ordered the parties to pay their own costs. Against this decree the defendants mortgagees have appealed and the plaintiff has filed cross-objections. In the appeal it is urged that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the terms in the mortgage deed amount to a clog on the equity of redemption and that undue influence was exercised and it is also urged that the costs of the suit should have been allowed to the defendants mortgagees. The only ground argued on the petition of objections is that the appellants should not have been allowed the item of Rs. 1,200 which were left with the mortgagee for payment to Baij Nath for conducting the case of Har Dayal against Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai.

The history of the property which we have given in detail shows very clearly that Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai on the one hand and Baij Nath on the other were very anxious to get hold of it and that Har Dayal was a pawn in their hands, sometimes under the influence of one party and sometime under the influence of the other. At first Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai got hold of him and got him to execute the iniquitous mortgage of the 9th of February 1912 at the time when he was almost certainly a minor. Then his brother in-law, Baij Nath, stepped in and got him to bring a suit for the cancellation of that mortgage and got him to agree to Baij Nath's application to be appointed his guardian. The compromise of the 29th of March 1913 indicates that Badri Bisal and Baij Nath agree to divide the spoil, Badri Bisal taking Rs. 1,300 and letting Baij Nath get hold of the property. Immediately after that compromise Baij Nath had the mortgage-deed now in suit executed in favour of his brother, Jagan Nath, who was joint with him. Then Badri Bisal repented to his bargain, filed an appeal from the compromise decree of the 29th of March 1913, won over Har Dayal and got him to confess judgment. Badri Bisal, however, failed in his suit to obtain possession under his mortgage of 1912 and he, therefore, resorted to the expedient of purchasing the equity of redemption in the name of his son Prag Narayan. The learned Counsel for the appellants, while admitting that his clients were very eager to obtain possession of the property, argues that the conditions entered in the mortgage deed in suit are by no means unusual, that they are at any rate not nearly so onerous as the conditions of the mortgage obtained by Badri Bisal and Sheo Sahai on the 9th of February 1912 and that they cannot be held to be hard and unconscionable or to constitute a clog on the equity of redemption. It is quite true that they are not so iniquitous as the conditions of Badri Bisal's mortgage, but we have no hesitation whatsoever in holding that the intention of the mortgage was to ensure that the right of redemption could never be exercised and that the conditions entered in the mortgage-deed were such as would effectually prevent redemption. A covenant postponing redemption for a long term need not necessarily of itself amount to a clog on the equity of redemption, but the effect of all the conditions in the deed must be considered as a whole, and if those conditions would result in making redemption very difficult, if not impossible, at the end of the term the Court may ignore the covenant postponing redemption and may allow redemption at any time on such terms as it thinks fit [Durga Singh v. Nawab Mirza Muhammad Raza Husain Khan (1) and Sarabdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (2)]. In the present case there was a condition in the mortgage-deed that the balance of Rs. 150 of interest should be added annually to the principal sum and that it should be paid with compound interest along with the principal at the time of redemption. A rough calculation shows that at the end of a period of 50 years the principal and interest payable to the mortgagee would amount to over a lakh even if we were to presume that there would be no increase in the revenue during that long period. We may note that a new Settlement falls due in 1925 and that the revenue will then be almost certainly enhanced. It is urged that there is nothing in the mortgage deed which would justify the mortgagee in refusing to receive payment annually of the excess interest of Rs. 150 and that the mortgagor would only have himself to blame if he failed to pay the interest as it fell due. The only provision in the mortgage-deed in respect of this Rs. 150 is that it shall be added to the principal amount at the end of each year and shall carry interest and compound interest and the total amount shall be paid after the expiry of 50 years. There is no provision such as is generally found in the mortgages of this nature that the interest shall be paid regularly every year and in case of default shall be added to the principal. But whether or not the mortgagor might, under the terms of the deed, be at liberty to pay the excess interest annually the mortgagee knew that the mortgagor was not in a position to do so. Admittedly the mortgaged property was the only property of which Har Dayal was possessed and he had no means whatsoever for paying the excess interest. And it is to be noted that the mortgagor was obtaining no advantage whatsoever by executing this mortgage. No portion of the consideration-money was to be paid to him. He was given only a right to redeem after 50 years, a right which in all probability he would never be able to exercise.

We are also satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a right conclusion on the question of undue influence. There cannot be slightest doubt that Baij Nath was in a position to dominate the will of Har Dayal. On the 28th of February 1912 he had persuaded Har Dayal to file a suit for cancellation of Badri Bisal's mortgage and in that suit he was shown as the next friend of Har Dayal. In that suit Har Dayal had pleaded that he was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage, and although the plea of minority was withdrawn and Har Dayal himself executed the deed of compromise professing to have attained majority, yet we have the statement of Baij Nath himself that it was he who arranged the terms of the compromise with Badri Bisal (vide Exhibit 12 at page 27 of the paper-book). We find that Baij Nath applied to the Court on the 11th April 1912 to be appointed Har Dayal's guardian and that Har Dayal himself supported that application. Baij Nath was appointed guardian by the Court and the order appointing him guardian had not been discharged when the mortgage-deed in suit was executed in favour of Jagan Nath who is Baij Nath's brother and member of a joint Hindu family along with Baij Nath. Baij Nath as guardian of Har Dayal had applied to the Court on the 26th of April 1912 for permission to transfer this very property or a portion of it by sale or mortgage and his application was refused. If the age of Har Dayal given in the application for guardianship was correct, Har Dayal could not have been more than 17 years of age when the mortgage-deed in suit was executed. It is at least probable that he had at that time not attained the age of 21, and as a guardian had been appointed by the Court he was still, in view of the provisions of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), a minor. The mortgage-deed has not been attacked on this ground, probably because the plaintiff is the son of Badri Bisal who had taken the mortgage of 1912 from Har Dayal and had entered into the compromise of the 29th of March 1913 with Har Dayal as a major. As we have pointed out, it was Baij Nath who arranged the compromise of the 29th of March 1913 and the mortgage-deed in suit was executed only two days afterwards on the 31st of March 1913. These facts show beyond question that Baij Nath at the time of the execution of the mortgage was in a position to dominate the will of Har Dayal. The terms of the deed were clearly hard and unconscionable and an unfair advantage was taken of Har Dayal in getting him to execute the deed. We have shown that under the terms of the deed redemption would have been practically impossible. In addition to this, though the income of the property stated in the deed is not disputed, yet there can be no doubt that t' at income was liable to very considerable enhancement. A comparison with other pattis in the same mahal shows that the income of the property in suit ought not to be less than Rs 800, while it is stated in the deed to be only Rs. 300. The deed provides that any increase in rent shall be appropriated by the mortgagee while any increase in revenue shall be paid with compound interest thereon by the mortgagor. Further, we have shown that Har Dayal got no advantage of any kind by executing the mortgage. As we have shown that Baij Nath was in a position to dominate the will of Har Dayal and that the terms of the deed were hard and unconscionable and an unfair advantage was taken of Har Dayal the burden lay on the defendants-appellants to show that undue influence was not exercised. They have made no attempt to discharge this burden.

With regard to the question of costs it is sufficient to say that the whole history of the property shows that Baij Nath, who was joint with the mortgagee Jagan Nath, was prepared to go to any length to obtain this property. He has been found to have exercised undue influence in obtaining the mortgage deed and to have imposed terms which were hard and unconscionable and which, if adhered to, would have resulted in effectually preventing the exercise of the right of redemption, and the defendants who are now the representatives of Jagan Nath and Baij Nath have resisted the plaintiff's claim and denied his right to redeem. In these circumstances the defendants were clearly not entitled to their costs.

In support of the plaintiff's objection that he is not liable to pay the item of Rs. 1,200, which under the terms of the mortgage-deed were left with the mortgagee to be paid to Baij Nath for conducting Har Dayal's suit against Badri Bisal, it is urged that no proof has been adduced that this sum was actually spent in the conduct of the case and that the defendants failed to produce their accounts to show that the money had actually been paid. The item of Rs. 1,200 is clearly not the actual amount spent by Baij Nath in conducting the case but it is a lump sum payable according to the terms of the mortgage to Baij Nath for the conduct of the case. Har Dayal had admittedly no income. The case against Badri Bisal was contested right up to the end and a considerable amount must have been spent in conducting it. That it was conducted by Baij Nath is admitted. The plaintiff has made no attempt to show that the item is fictitious and Har Dayal himself has not been examined as a witness. It is true that the plaintiff summoned the defendant's account-books but he made no attempt whatsoever to have them produced in evidence. This plea, therefore, has no force.

The result is that the appeal and the petition of objections are both dismissed. The defendants appellants will pay the plaintiff-respondent's costs in the appeal and the plaintiff respondent will pay the defendants-appellants' costs on the petition of objections.

Railway Company—Risk Note, Form B—Consignment, loss of—Proof necessary to render Company liable.

Where, while goods are being carried by a Railway Company, a theft occurs while the train is running, the Railway Company is protected by the Risk Note. It is, however, open to a plaintiff in such a case to prove that theft did not occur in a running train or that it was brought about by the Company's servants.

Civil Extraordinary Application against the decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 2015 of 1920.

Mr Campbell, instructed by Messrs. Crawford, Bayley & Co., for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover for the loss of a consignment of molasses. The Judge seems to have found as a fact that there had not been a theft in the running train. Therefore, the Company could not escape the liability. But, unfortunately, the learned Judge went on to make some remarks which were not necessary for the purpose of deciding the case, and if those remarks were to stand, they might be followed in similar cases by the Subordinate Courts, and, therefore, it is necessary to remark that if there is a theft in a running train, then the Company are protected by the Risk Note. It is open to the plaintiff in such a case to prove that theft did not occur in the running train, or that the theft was brought about by the Company's servants. But if nothing more can be proved except that there was a theft in a running train, then the Company by the Risk Note, Form B, which is now before us, are protected. Rule discharged with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 31st March 1920.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—At the time of the institution of the suit out of which this appeal arises the principal defendant, Musammat Parbati, was in possession of the suit property and had been in possession of it for the past 25 or 26 years. She held it under two possessory mortgages of 23rd July 1884 and 17th June 1893 executed by Talib Ali in favour of her deceased husband, Dharnidhar. The plaintiff, who is the son of the mortgagor, wants to get back the property without redeeming the mortgage and for this purpose has got a deed of release from certain distant collaterals who were the reversioners of Jamnadhar father of Dharnidhar. Their case is that Musammat Parbati is a trespasser. Dharnidhar, according to them, was joint with his father, Jamnadhar, whom he had admittedly predeceased, and on Jamnadhar's death the rightful heir to the property was his widow, Musammat Mukta, who died in 1910. Musammat Mukta released her rights in favour of Musammat Parbati. Musammat Parbati was in possession till 1910 in virtue of this deed of release. The present reversioners only became entitled to possession on the death of Musammat Ladli, daughter of Jamnadhar, in 1918. The suit is thus within time. Musammat Parbati has died since the filing of the appeal and is now represented by her daughter and her daughter's son. The following pedigree will serve to elucidate the facts of the case:—

SHEO SAHAI

Jamnadhar, (died 15th July 1894) =Musammat Mukta, (died 26th February 1910)

Gangadhar, (died 3rd July 1909).

Dharnidhar, (died 2nd August 1933) =Musammat Parbati, defendant No. 1, (now dead)

Musammat Ladli, (died childless 15th April 1918).

Musammat Chameli, (appellant)

Shiam Bihari, (appellant).

The learned Subordinate Judge has found for the plaintiff and decreed the suit. The appellants contest the finding on two grounds:—

1. That Dharnidhar and Jamnadhar had separated before the death of the former and that the mortgagee rights were the separate property of Dharnidhar.

2. In the alternative that Musammat Parbati acquired those rights by adverse possession which began on the death of Dharnidhar.

The appeallants' case regarding the deed of release executed by Musammat Mukta is that so far as it affected the property which stood in the name of Dharnidhar it was merely a recognition of Musammat Parbati's right.

As the family held a large amount of property on mortgage the question of the status of the family at Dharnidhar's death has given rise to much difficulty and formed the subject of a great deal of litigation. There have been decisions both in favour of the widow and against her. The earliest decisions of which there is any evidence was against her in the year 1897. In 1900 there was a decision in her favour. This case was referred to the arbitration of two Pleaders of the District. The opposite parties, who were residents of the same town Sandi in which Musammat Parbati lived, at first took the plea that Dharnidhar and Jamnadhar were joint but on the case being referred to arbitration they withdrew it and the arbitrators found on the admission of the parties that Musammat Parbati was the heir and representative of Dharnidhar, her husband, and as such was competent to bring the suit. In 1903 there was another suit which was also decided against her. In this case, her Pleaders in the Appellate Court (Exhibit 128) did not contest the finding that Jamnadhar and Dharnidhar were joint. In 1912 there was another suit decided in her favour, mainly on the admission of the husband of Musammat Ladli, who was then alive and was the next reversioner of Jamnadhar, that Jamnadhar and Dharnidhar had separated. Besides these cases in which third parties were the defendants there was one case which was actually inter partes but which cannot be relied on as res judicata, because it was decided by a Munsif who would not have been competent to hear the present suit, but which, like the other judgments, is relied on as evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act. In that case the finding of both the Original and the Appellate Courts was in favour of the present plaintiff and against Musammat Parbati.

The previous judgments are of very little assistance in this case. The weight of evidence on the present record is decidedly in favour of the respondent. The evidence relied on by each side has been carefully tabulated by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment (pages 111 to 117 of the paper-book), and except that the respondent relies on an admission in Exhibit 60 the whole of the evidence relied on by both sides has been fully discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge. Exhibit 60 is a deed of gift executed by Musammat Parbati in 1915 in favour of her daughter Musammat Chameli, appellant No. 2, and contains an admission that with one or two exceptions mutation of all the properties, which stood in the name of Dharnidhar, was effected in favour of Jamnadhar on Dharnidhar's death. Neither party has placed much reliance on the oral evidence. The oral evidence adduced by Musammat Parbati has been severely criticised by the learned Subordinate Judge and the appellants' Counsel has conceded that he cannot ask the Court to rely on it unless the Court holds that the weight of documentary evidence is in his favour.

Perhaps the two most important pieces of evidence on the side of the respondent consist of two admissions, one by Musammat Parbati herself and the other by her brother and general agent, Banke Lal. Both these admissions were made shortly after Musammat Parbati came into possession of the property. Musammat Parbati's admission was made in the course of her evidence recorded by commission in a case originally instituted by her husband, Dharnidhar. Jamnadhar had applied to be substituted as his legal representative and it was in connection with this application that her evidence was recorded In the statement she made she admitted that her husband and Jamnadhar were members of a joint family. Musammat Parbati in her evidence tried to explain away this admission by saying that Jamnadhar persuaded her to make the statement because she could not go out of her house for a year on account of her husband's death and, therefore, he must be brought on the record in order to prosecute the case for her. This explanation is not satisfactory. In the first place, nearly a year from her husband's death had elapsed when the statement was recorded. He died on 2nd August 1893 and the statement in question was made on 3rd June 1894. In the second place, it would have been perfectly easy for her to have executed a power-of-attorney in favour of Jamnadhar. In the the third place, this admission has been relied on in several previous cases to which Musammat Parbati was a party, and the judgments show no trace of this explanation ever having been put forward in any of those cases.

The admission by Banke Lal was made in 1895 in a Civil case in which he was appearing as Musammat Parbati's agent. It was to the same effect as her own admission, namely, that Dharnidhar and his father were living jointly and that there had been no division between them. He also stated that Dharnidhar was the manager. It was brought to our notice in the course of the hearing that the copy of this statement on the record was a copy of a copy. It would, therefore, have been inadmissible but for the fact that the statement was put to Banke Lal in the course of his examination in the Court below and he admitted having made it. He offered no explanation of the contradiction between this statement made shortly after the death of the person concerned and the evidence which he had been giving in this suit.

The deed of release executed in favour of Musammat Parbati by Musammat Mukta on 3rd September 1854 has been relied on by both parties. It recites that Dharnidhar was owner and in possession and manager (muntazim) of all the family property and the active member and head of the family. He has died without leaving any male issue and the executant's husband, Jamnadhar, is also dead. There is no one remaining in the family except the executant herself and her daughter-in-law, Musammat Parbati. The latter is in possession of the property and to prevent disputes it has been agreed by their mutual consent that she should continue in possession and manage it. Musammat Mukta undertakes to make over to her all documents such as mortgage deeds, etc., whether they stand in the name of Jamnadhar or Dharnidhar. On the same date Musammat Parbati executed a deed of maintenance in favour of Musammat Mukta guaranteeing the latter Rs. 100 a year for maintenance in consideration of the fact that Musammat Mukta had executed a deed of relinquishment of the property "in which she had a right of inheritance, being the property left by her husband and son." The language of the deed of relinquishment is ambiguous but the words 'manager (muntazim) and head of the family (ogwokar)' are suggestive of a joint family and there is this important consideration in favour of this view.

The case now set up by the defendant is that a separation had taken place in 1876, seventeen years before Dharnidhar's death, and that there had been an actual division of all the property. If this story had been true what necessity was there for Musammat Mukta to execute a deed of relinquishment of property of which Dharnidhar had been in separate possession for many years and as to which the right of his widow could not possibly be disputed. If, on the other hand, the family really was joint up to Dharnidhar's death and after her death and that of her husband Musammat Mukta wished her daughter-in law to have the property, the execution of the deed of relirquishment was a perfectly natural act. The language of the deed of maintenance, moreover, is quite inconsistent with the theory of separation. That deed recites that Musammat Mukta has given up her rights of inheritance in the property of her husband and her son. If Dharnidhar had separated from his father, Musammat Mukta could have no right of inheritance in his property seeing that he left not only to widow, Musammat Parbati, but a daughter also. If, on the other hand, the family was joint, Musammat Mukta as the widow of the last surviving member was entitled in law to the whole of the family property. There is also an initial presumption in favour of jointness in a Hindu family and this presumption is particularly strong in the case of a father and his only son. The improbability of separation is also increased, as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, by the fact that Dharnidhar must have been very young when separation is said to have taken place. Even if the evidence on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied in fixing Dharnidhar's age does not enable to fix it with absolute exactness, Dharnidhar can hardly have been more than eighteen or nineteen at most in the year 1876.

The previous judgments and the terms of the deed of release have already been discussed. Excluding these the only important evidence relied on by the appellants to rebut the strong evidence on the other side consists of—

1. The fact that Musammat Parbati's name was recorded as owner in the khewat and the mutation proceedings in connection therewith.

They also rely on the fact that Musammat Parbati obtained a Succession certificate as heir of Dharnidhar and was substituted as his successor in certain pending suits.

2. An admission by the present plaintiff made in the year 1900, Exhibit A6.

3. The fact that on the same date two mortgage-deeds were executed by the same person, one in favour of Jamnadhar and the other of Dharnidhar.

The only khewat entries which can be of any value in support of the defendant's case are those in which her name was recorded prior to the execution of the deed of release. After the execution of that deed she was entitled to possession whether her husband and Jamnadhar were joint or separate. Only two instances have been proved in which she obtained mutation in the lifetime of Jamnadhar and the terms in which Jamnadhar supported her application are very significant (Exhibits A7 and A8). In both cases he stated that he did not wish mutation being made in his own name because he was very old. This clearly implies that he was entitled to get his own name recorded had he so desired. The Succession Certificate and the cases in which Musammat Parbati was brought on the record as her husband's legal representative were all after Jamnadhar's death.

The alleged admission of the plaintiff is contained in his deposition in the mutation case regarding two plots Nos. 30 and 31 of the Kasba Sanci which are now in dispute. Mutation of the 10 biswas share had been effected in 1876 but not of these two plots. Mutation in respect of these plots having been applied for in 1900 notice was issued to the plaintiff as mortgagor and he stated that as Dharnidhar, the mortgagee, was dead and Parbati was his widow and mutation by right of inheritance had not so far been effected in her favour her name might now be entered. This cannot fairly be treated as constituting an admission that any separation had taken place between Dharnidhar and his father.

The fact that two mortgage-deeds, Exhibits A56 and A57, were executed on the same date by Ali Mohammad, one in favour of Jamnadhar and the other of Dharnidhar, is of very little value as evidence of separation. Dharnidhar was in all probability a minor at the time and there are many reasons which may lead a father to take a mortgage in the name of his minor son instead of in his own. Any value which the document in favour of Dharnidhar might otherwise have had as supporting the defendant's case is destroyed by the fact that the deed itself shows that the advance in respect of which the mortgage was executed had been made by Jamnadhar.

The only other plea which remains to be considered is that of adverse possession. Possession which commences during the lifetime of a Hindu widow with a limited interest cannot be adverse to the reversioners. The case argued before us has been that adverse possession commenced on Dharnidhar's death in 1893. Even if Musammat Parbati was in actual possession of the property it would be very difficult to hold, in the absence of any express declaration by any of the parties interested, that her possession was adverse to that of her father-in-law in whose house she was living. It is, however, not proved that she was in possession. The only evidence relied on in this behalf consists of the two statements of Jamnadhar in the mutation cases already referred to, Exhibits A7 and A8, which relate to property not in suit in which he says he allows her to get mutation because he himself is old, and three witnesses whose evidence has not been accepted by the Court below and is entirely worthless.

The appeal fails on both issues and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Prima facie a Zemindar or Polygar is a rent receiver and his right of direct possession of lands is confined to his "private lands" and old waste lands and does not extend to raiyati lands. [p. 545, col. 1.]

In declaring the rights of occupancy raiyats and emphasizing the distinction between a landlord's "private lands" and "raiyati lands", the Madras Estates Land Act affirmed the old customary law that has always been recognised by the British Administration. Apart from the rules relating to procedure and jurisdiction of Revenue Courts, it created one new right in order to settle the constant disputes between landlords and tenants and gave occupancy rights to all raiyats in occupation of lands within an "estate" at the time it was passed. It also declared and gave statutory recognition to existing rights and status. These remarks do not apply to raiyatwari tracts in the direct possession of Government which are let out to mirasidari or hereditary raiyats for purposes of cultivation. JUDGMENT.

AMEER ALI.—These several consolidated appeals arise out of five suits brought by the plaintiff on the 27th July 1904 in the Court of the District Munsif of Kulitalai in the Madras Presidency, in his capacity of head of a Mutt, to eject the defendants from the lands in their occupation in the village of Karappudayanpatti, which he alleged belonged to his Mutt. The defendants in the suit are cultivating tenants holding separate lands unconnected with each other. Accordingly, separate suits were brought against them.

The plaintiff's case is that in the year 1743 the Polegar of Turaiyur, who owned the estate within which the village is situated, granted to the head of the Mutt at the time the village in question; and that since then the successive holders of the office have been in possession and enjoyment not only of the right to the receipt of the dues payable by the tenants to the landlord, usually called in the Madras Presidency the melvaram, but also of the right to the actual occupancy of the lands technically called the kudivaram.

The five suits that were brought in the Munsif's Court were numbered 676, 677, 720, 721 and 722 of 1904. In Suit No. 676 the plaintiff alleged that the particular tenant, for whose ejectment he was suing, held the land in dispute under a muchilika executed by the defendant's predecessor on the 18th June 1880, by which he bound himself to surrender the land in his occupation on failure to pay rent. In Suit No. 720 the plaintiff's action related to two items of land in respect of which he alleged that the defendant's father had executed two muchilikas on the 9th April 1894, and the 2nd June 1894, respectively. With regard to Suits Nos. 721 and 722, the plaintiff's suit rests on his general allegation that as under the grant he is entitled to both the rights he claimed in the land—viz., the right to receive the rent as well as the right to occupy the lands—he was entitled to eject the defendants, who were tenants at-will. In Suit No. 722 he appears to have also set up an oral lease. In Suit No. 677 the plaintiff relied upon a muchilika executed on the 24th July 1893, by the defendant's brother.

The defendants in all the cases denied the right of the plaintiff to eject them from the lands in their occupation and under their cultivation; they alleged that he was only entitled to the melvaram and not to the kudivaram, and that they and their predecessors had held their lands from times immemorial and possessed and exercised the full rights of occupancy tenants to the knowledge of, and with the acquiescence of, the plaintiff and his predecessors: They further charged that the muchilikas produced and relied upon by the plaintiff were fabricated documents concocted for the purpose of destroying their old and hereditary right in the lands in their occupation.

Upon these allegations the parties went to trial. The District Munsif framed two principal issues which were common to all the cases, viz:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the plaint land (that is, the land in suit) itself or only to the tirva (rent) thereon?

(2) Is the defendant entitled to the occupancy right in the land by custom and prescription?

The other issues related to the genuineness of the muchilikas and to the amount of rent, etc.

The first two issues being common to all the suits, by consent of parties the five actions were tried together, and, as the Trial Judge states at the beginning of his judgment, the whole evidence was adduced in Suit No. 676, and was "used as evidence in all the connected suits."

The inam grant on which the plaintiff's claim rests is Exhibit "A." After reciting by whom and to whom the gift is made, the document proceeds thus:—

"The village gifted to our Swami out of our several villages is Karappudayanpatti, to the north of Upiliyapuram, east of Vayirichettipalayam, south of Kottapatti and west of Sokkapuram. As we have gifted it most willingly to the Swami, you shall for ever have dominion over and enjoy the wet and dry lands, tope, well, betel garden etc, water, tree, stone, treasurers, etc., found therein and live happily. Further, what we command to be done for the Guruppoja day is this. We command that Guruppooja shall be conducted by collecting at the rate of 4 measures of grain per plough in respect of Agrabaram, Sarwamaniyam, Umbalam etc, including wet and dry lands in the whole of our Turaiyur State. You shall accordingly conduct Guruppooja every year and shall not omit to collect at the rate of 4 measures of grain in respect of dry and wet lands also in the whole of Turaiyur State. You shall enjoy the whole of Karuppudayanpatti village. Further, you shall, as ordered by our predecessors, receive always Mahamai and allowance of rice and money for extra expenses. The Andeanam shall, in continuous succession, have dominion over and enjoy for ever the village, Guruppooja Kattalai, rice allowance, etc. He who helps this charity by thought, word or deed, will be blessed with happiness and live long in the same manner as one who establishes temple of several crores of Siva-lingams in such holy places as Benares, Chidambaram. Tiruvalur, Arunachelam, Srikalahasti, Conjee, Kalugungundram, Kumbakonam, Rameswaram etc"

The grant was recognized by the inam authorities in 1865. But the inam proceedings furnish no indication regarding the extent of the rights covered by it. Both sides in support of their respective contentions produced a mass of evidence, which the District Munsif, in a singularly well balanced and exhaustive judgment, has analysed with great industry. He held on the evidence that the defendants had proved they had been in occupation of their respective lands from very early times, and had been dealing with them as lands in which they had full occupancy rights, that they had been selling, mortgaging, making improvements, and that when any portion of the same was taken up for public purposes, they had claimed and received compensation from Government. He held further that the plaintiff had utterly failed to show that the defendants had been let into possession by his predecessors or by himself, or to rebut the testimony they had produced in establishment of their right of occupancy. His main judgment is in Suit No. 676. He also found that the documents the plaintiff had produced in support of his claim, together with the muchilikas on which he relied in the three cases, had been fabricated with the object of destroying the tenants' right in their lands. He accordingly dismissed the five suits save and except as regard certain claims for rent.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court of Trichinopoly against the District Munsif's decrees, and these appeals were numbered as follows:—Appeal No. 39 of 1908 (Suit No. 676); Appeal No. 41 of 1908 (Suit No. 720); Appeal No. 42 of 1908 (Suit No. 721); Appeal No. 43 of 1908 (Suit No. 722); Appeal No. 40 of 1908 (Suit No. 677).

It is necessary to give the numbers of the appeals as well as of the suits, in view of the complication that enters into the determination of the cases owing to the course the proceedings took in the subsequent stages.

In Appeal No. 39 (Suit No. 676) the Officiating District Judge, Mr. Thornton, dismissed the appeal on the ground "that he did not consider the plaintiff had established he was entitled to both the varams in all the cultivated lands in the village, nor had he proved the terms of their tenancy". In Appeal No. 40 (Suit No. 677), in which the plaintiff had put forward a muchilika numbered in the Munsif's Court as Exhibit "O," the District Judge set aside the decree, and in reversal of the Munsif's order made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for ejectment of the tenant. In Appeal No. 41 (Suit No. 720) he agreed with the Munsif as to item covered by muchilika "O1", and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's appeal with respect to that item, but he differed from the Munsif as to the item covered by muchilika "O2," and accordingly decreed ejectment in respect thereof. In Appeals Nos. 42 and 43 (Suits Nos. 721 and 722) he affirmed the Munsif's decrees.

Both parties appealed to the High Court against the decrees, which operated severally against them. By the time the appeals reached the High Court, the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) had come into force, and, accordingly, the defendant, against whom a decree for ejectment had been made by the Officiating District Judge and who was appellant in Second Appeal No. 541 of 1909 filed on the 27th September 1910, an additional ground of appeal against his order.

All these second appeals came on for hearing before the High Court on the 14th August 1911, but in view of the provisions of section 6 of Act I of 1903 and the contentions of the parties, the learned Judges considered it necessary to obtain from the Officiating District Judge a finding on the following point:—

"Whether the grant to the plaintiff was of the land revenue or of the kudivaram also?" Opinions have no doubt been expressed in the judgments of the lower Courts on the point, but the question was never tried with reference to section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act. Section 6 will be referred to later on.

The cases accordingly went back to the Officiating District Judge who returned the appeals to the High Court with the following "finding":—

"But it seems to me that, seeing that Exhibit 'A' purports to grant all the land in the village absolutely to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, and that the plaintiff is admittedly entitled to both varams in 70 cawnies while there are no tenants on 77 of the remaining 185 cawnies in the village, the burden lies on the defendants to show that their predecessors in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant [see also Indety Okina Nagadu v. Ketu Konchi Venkatasubbaya (1)], and that, in the absence of proof of this, there can be no presumption that there were any cultivating tenants in the village at the date of the grant, or that the Zamindar was not the owner of both varams in the land comprised in the grant. My finding on the issue sent down with reference to section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act, therefore, is that the grant to the plaintiff was an absolute grant of all the land in the village, and was not a grant of the land revenue alone to a person not owning the kudiwaram therof.

On the return of this "finding" to the High Court, the learned Judges considered it neither satisfactory nor sufficient. They express their views in the following terms:—

"The learned District Judge has not, so far as it appears to us, considered all this mass of evidence, and he seems to have based his conclusion on the language of Exhibit 'A' and on certain presumption which according to him arises from the facts that the plaintiff is admittedly entitled to both varam in 70 cawnies of land in the village and that about 77 other cownies are waste. He throws the burden on the defendants to prove that their predecessors-in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant. We are not disposed to express any opinion on the question of presumptions, because, as a matter of fact, there is considerable evidence upon which the points in issue can be decided one way or the other. But we wish to point out that there is no burden on the defendants to show that their predecessors-in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant. If they succeed in showing that at the time of the grant the land was in the occupation of cultivating tenants, that might be sufficient to raise a presumption in their favour. We would, therefore, ask the District Judge to return a fresh finding, on the issue remitted to him, and he will also return a finding on the second issue in the case, namely, 'Is the defendant entitled to the occupancy right in the land by custom or by prescription?"

The Officiating District Judge does not appear to have applied his mind to the determination of the question involved in the second issue. it was now expressly and clearly brought to his notice.

On the return of the cases to the Officiating District Judge, that officer, even with the fresh evidence the plaintiff was allowed to produce, found himself unable to come to any definite conclusion. The end of his judgment shows that he was not clear at all in his mind as to the conclusion to be derived from the evidence, and he expressed his difficulty in the following words:—

"I do not see, therefore, how it is possible to say whether the grant to the plaintiff was of land revenue or of kudivaram also."

With these remarks the appeals were re-submitted to the High Court.

Upon the return of the appeals to the High Court the learned Judges again found that neither had the evidence been properly considered, nor had the issue to which the attention of the Officiating District Judge had been expressly called been determined, and they expressed their view as follows:—

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 365; (1910) M. W. N. 639; 8 M. L. T. 376.

CHIDAMBARA SANNADHIGAL v. VEERAMA REDDI.

"We are not disposed to express any opinion on the question of presumption because as a matter of fact there is considerable evidence upon which the issue can be decided one way or the other.

The finding again submitted by the District Judge after this remand order does not at all show that the District Judge addressed himself seriously to a consideration of the mass of evidence considered by the District Munsif. The Judge says he is 'in a position of some difficulty' and in a short paragraph (paragraph 3 of the finding paper) says that it is not possible to say one way or the other on that point. We are unable to accept the findings and we request the present District Judge to submit fresh findings on the two issues mentioned in the second remand order after detailed consideration of the evidence and with reference to the above remarks, irrespective of the question of onus and presumption.

The case had accordingly to be remitted once more to the District Court for a proper finding. By that time the permanent incumbent of the office, Mr. Harding, seems to have resumed work. He considered the case on the evidence irrespective of any presumption, and on the 30th September 1914, embodied his conclusions into definite findings of fact as required by the High Court. He found on the evidence, in agreement with the District Munsif, that the defendant-tenants had been in occupation of the lands for a very long time, that they had been dealing with their holdings and the lands in their occupation as tenants entitled to occupancy rights, that they had been transferring their holdings, partitioning the same among themselves, making improvements on the land, receiving compensation for land taken up from their holdings by Government, and that the plaintiff had not only utterly failed to rebut the inference arising from those facts, but had fabricated the documents with which he came to support his claim. He accordingly returned the appeals with the finding as follows:—

"11. It is unnecessary to say more. A Zemindar could only gift the melvaram of occupied and both varams of unoccupied lands, and we find in actual fact that the holdings and dealings have been as they must be if that supposition is correct. From 1829 onwards, the raiyats or tenants in many cases have partitioned their properties or sold them to Government or to one another, and plaintiff has accepted these things from 1870 onwards at any rate. Plaintiff now holds kudivaram rights in many lands not by his grant but by some subsequent acquisitions. But he never held it in suit lands which are neither pannai nor waste, and in 1901 he was found by the Deputy Collector to be illegally taking possession of lands and this was upheld by the High Court. He is no doubt trying to get the kudivaram of the whole village, but his claim thereto is entirely baseless.

I find that the grant was of the melvaram only of occupied lands and of both varams of unoccupied lands. Defendants or their predecessors have always had the occupancy rights in their holdings, and were not affected by the gift from the Zemindar to the inamdar."

The learned Judges of the High Court, upon the return of the above finding, held as follows:—

"It must be conceded in favour of the plaintiff that we expected the learned District Judge to discuss the evidence at somewhat greater length than he has done, we having indicated in our remand order that the District Munsif had devoted about 85 paragraphs to the consideration of that evidence, and that we required to be reasonably satisfied that the conclusions of the learned District Judge are arrived at after a careful consideration of the whole evidence.

"But we do not think that we are entitled to hold that full consideration has not been bestowed by the District Judge on the whole evidence before he arrived at the findings now submitted by him, and we, therefore, accept the same.

"The result is that Second Appeals Nos. 515 to 518 will stand dismissed with costs, while Second Appeal No. 544 of 1909 will be allowed with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Courts.

From these decrees the plaintiff has now appealed to His Majesty in Council, and it is contended on his behalf that the High Court acted without jurisdiction in remitting the appeals to the District Judge for a proper finding. The argument proceeds on the same misapprehension of the law, as was pointed out by the Board in the case of Seturatnam Aiyar

v. Venkatachala Gounden (2). It is to be observed that the Indian Legislature, in its anxiety to prevent the High Court from being inundated with second appeals in trifling matters, has provided in section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code that such appeals shall lie to the High Court only on the following grounds:—

"(1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law,

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits."

At the same time, in order to avoid gross miscarriage of justice resulting from the omission by the lower Appellate Court to determine any issue of fact or to come to a definite conclusion on a set of facts, it has made two distinct provisions. By section 103 the High Court itself is vested with the power, when the evidence on the record is sufficient, to determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower Appellate Court.

By r. 25, O. XLI, it is further provided:—

"Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required:

And such Court shall proceed to try such issues, and shall return the evidence to the Appellate Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor."

The High Court had thus the power of determining the issue left undetermined by the Officiating District Judge on the evidence on the record, or of remitting the case to the lower Court for a finding on that issue, with liberty to the parties to adduce additional evidence if they chose to do so. The learned Judges of the High Court chose the latter, which, under the law, was fully within their competence. The case was remitted three times because the Officiating District Judge in the first instance misunderstood the order of the High Court, and in the second instance expressed himself as unable to come to a definite conclusion. The High Court did not in the present case, as in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (2) remand it under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code but under r. 25. The remarks that follow in the judgment in Seturatnam Aiyar's case (2) explain the reason why the remand in that case, as in the present, became necessary.

"In the opinion of the learned Judges of the High Court," say their Lordships, "the District Judge had omitted to determine a question of fact which appeared to them essential to the right decision of the suit on the merits; he had failed to consider whether, apart from the particular contract to which his attention was exclusively directed, there was evidence on which to hold that from their inception the holdings of the defendants were permanent or in the nature of occupancy rights."

As already observed, the Madras Act I of 1908 had come into force on the 1st July of that year, whilst the appeals in these cases were pending before the High Court. In view of the plaintiff's contentions, which have travelled over a wide range, and also of the question relating to the grant, it becomes necessary to examine briefly the provisions of the Statute. The preamble states the object of the enactment in the following words:—

"Whereas it is expedient to amend and declare the law relating to the holding of land in estates in the Presidency of Madras, it is hereby enacted as follows, etc."

(2) 56 Ind. Cas. 117; 47 I. A. 76; 43 M. 567; (1920) M. W. N. 61; 27 M. L. T. 102; 11 L. W. 399; 38 M. L. J. 476; 22 Bom. L. R. 578; 15 A. L. J. 707; 25 C. W. N. 485 (P. C.).

Clause (d) in section 3 defines the expression "estate" in the Act to mean—

"Any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof provided that the grant has been made, confirmed or recognised by the British Government, or any separated part of such village".

Section 3 gives a definition of the words "private land" as meaning the "domain or home-farm land" [expressions borrowed from English Law] of a land-holder, by whatever designation known, such a kambattam, khas, sir or punnai It defines the words 'raiyat" and "occupancy raiyat", and declares "raiyati land" to mean "cultivable land in an estate other than private land" This definition includes other varieties of land to which no specific reference is necessary.

It also defines "old waste" as meaning any land in the estate which, not being private land,

"(1) has at the time of letting by the landholder been owned and possessed by him or his predecessors in-little for a continuous period of not less than ten years and has continuously remained uncultivated during the time, such period being either after or partly before and partly after the passing of this Act, or within twenty years before the passing of this Act, or

"(2) has at the time of any letting by the landholder after the passing of this Act remained without any occupancy rights being held therein at any time within a continuous period of not less than ten years immediately prior to such letting."

Section 8 deals with what is called "the merger of occupancy right. It declares:—

"(1) Whenever before or after the commencement of this Act the entire interests of the landholder and the occupancy raiyat in any land in the holding have become united by transfer, succession or otherwise in the same person, such person shall have no right to hold the land as a raiyat, but shall hold it as a landholder; but nothing in this sub section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person."

And clause (3) provides:—

"The merger of the occupancy right under sub-sections (1) and (2) shall not have the effect of converting raiyati land into private land."

Section 10, clause 1, declares that "all rights of occupancy shall be heritable, and shall be transferable by sale, gift or otherwise".

Clause 2 provides:—

"If a raiyat dies intestate in respect of a right of occupancy and without leaving any heirs except the Crown, his right of occupancy shall be extinguished, but the land in respect of which he had such right of occupancy shall not cease to be raiyati land."

Section 13 declares the right of the occupancy raiyat to make improvements of the land in his occupation or "in respect of his holding."

Coming now to section 6, clause (1), it runs thus:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, every raiyat now in possession or who shall hereafter be admitted by a landholder to possession of raiyati land not being old waste situated in the estate of such landholder, shall have a permanent right of occupancy in his holding, but nothing contained in this sub section shall affect any permanent right of occupancy that may have been acquired in land which was old waste before the commencement of this Act".

Chapter XII of the Act deals with the landlord's private land. Section 181 provides that nothing in the previous sections will confer a right of occupancy in the landlord's "private lands", but that nothing in that section shall prevent a landholder from converting his private land into raiyati land. Chapter XIV provides that no contract between the landlord and a raiyat shall take away the right of an occupancy raiyat or limit his right to use the land as provided by law.

In declaring the rights of the occupancy raiyats and emphasizing the distinction between the landlord's "private lands" and "the raiyati" lands, the new Act affirmed the old customary law that had always been recognized by the British Administration. Apart from rules relating to procedure and the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, it created one new right in order to settle the constant disputes between landlords and tenants which had been going on for nearly a century; it gave occupancy rights to all raiyats in occupation of lands within an "estate" at the time of the passing of the Act. It also gave some security to non-occupancy raiyats in the enjoyment of their lands. In other respects, generally speaking, it declared and gave statutory recognition to existing rights and status. One important feature of the Act is worthy of note: it throws into relief the component parts which, from immemorial times, go to constitute a village; first, the lands in the direct cultivation of the proprietor (called by various names); second, lands occupied by tenants or raiyats, and third, old waste lands over which by custom the landlord possessed certain specific rights now crystallized in the Statute. These remarks do not apply to raiyatwari tracts in the direct possession of Government which are let out to mirasidari or hereditary raiyats for purposes of cultivation.

The existence in a village of pannai lands, in which the tenant cannot acquire occupancy rights except by contract, connote the existence of lands in which he can acquire such rights by prescription.

In the present case the grant itself does not convey in express terms the kudivaram to the grantee. Nor does the term inam, an Arabic word meaning "a reward," give any indication of the intention of the donor, even if he had the right to bestow it on the donee. Prima facie a Zamindar or Poligar is a rent-receiver, or, to use the language of section 4 of Act I of 1908, he has the right to collect the rent from his tenants. Prima facie, his right of direct possession of the lands is confined to his "private lands" and the old waste land; it does not extend to "raiyati land."

The place of the cultivating raiyats in the agricultural economy of Southern India is thus described in a Proceeding of the Board of Revenue of Fort St. George (Madras), dated 5th January 1818.*

"The universally distinguishing character, as well as the chief privilege of this class of people, is their exclusive right to the hereditary possession and usufruct of the soil, so long as they render certain portion of the produce of the land, in kind or money, as public revenue; and whether rendered in service, in money, or in kind, and whether paid to Rajahs, Jagirdars, Zamindars, Polygars, Motahdars, Shrotriemdars, Inamdars or Government officers, such as Tahsildars, Amildars, Ameens, or Tanadars, the payments which have always been made by the raiyats are universally termed and considered the dues of the Government."

It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the onus was wrongly placed upon him, and in support of this contention the judgments of this Board, in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (3) and in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Seetharamudu (4) were relied upon.

In the first case the grant appears to have been made somewhere in the fourteenth century of the Christian era, and it was conclusively proved, on behalf of the plaintiff in that suit, that he and his predecessors had since then been in actual occupation of the lands, extending over centuries; they had further produced documents showing they had been actually cultivating the land. It was also established from the inam Register that the grant not only included the revenue but also the soil. The Munsif had found on these facts in favour of the plaintiff, but his judgment was reversed by the District Judge, whose decree was affirmed on second appeal by the High Court. The Board upon a review of the facts established in the case declared that it could not under the above circumstances be assumed that the grant was only a grant of the King's share in the produce of the soil, and did not include the kudivaram. It was a presumption which was certainly not warranted by the facts of the case.

In the subsequent case of Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Seetharamudu (4) it was again found upon the evidence that the grant included the kudivaram. Their Lordships say in their judgment delivered by Viscount Cave:—

"There is not in any of the documents above referred to any trace of a claim by any person other than the inamdar to a permanent right of occupancy; and the fact that by the terms of the grant the grantee is desired to cultivate the lands, and that he is referred to as residing in the village, tend to show that no such right existed in any other person.....And when the subsequent history of the estate comes to be examined, it is found to be wholly inconsistent with the existence of any permanent occupancy rights. Tenancies have been continually granted by the inamdars for short periods and at variable rents. When tenancy lands were compulsorily acquired by Government and compensation was paid to the agraharamdar, no claim to compensation was put forward by the tenants. In the year 1904 all the tenants formally relinquished their lands to the plaintiff and put them in his possession, and from that date until tenancies were granted in the year 1907 the property remained vacant."

In the view of those facts the Board overruled the objection that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that under the provisions of section 189 of the Act the Revenue Courts only had the power to deal with the matter. In dealing with the judgments of the District Judge and of the High Court, their Lordships observed that the two Appellate Courts in India had acted on a supposed presumption of law that an inam grant of a village, particularly if made to a Brahman, is prima facie a grant of the melvaram right only and does not include the kudivaram, and they pointed out that in the previous case, already referred to [Suryanarayana v. Patanna (3)], it was held that no such presumption exists. And then they add :—

"Each case must, therefore, be considered on its own facts; and in order to ascertain the effect of the grant in the present case, resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances as far as they can now be ascertained."

The question came up again for consideration before the Board in the subsequent case of Setharatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (2) to which reference has been made before. That was a suit for ejectment by a mirasidar against the tenants in occupation of the lands in a village granted to him many years ago. As already observed, the mirasidar is himself is cultivating raiyat, and the land which is granted to him is for purposes of cultivation in a raiyatwari tract. The defendants contested the claim for ejectment, and alleged that they possessed occupancy rights. A considerable body of evidence was produce on both sides. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the defendants had established their prescriptive occupancy rights in the lands in their occupation and under their cultivation. The Munsif found that the plaintiff's claim to eject the defendants from the lands in actual cultivation was "barred," but decreed the claim in respect of the pasture land. The decree of the District Munsif was set aside by the District Judge, as he considered the question for consideration in the case was "whether the defendants had shown that the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title had contracted the right of tenancy should be changed into a right of permanent occupancy." And his conclusion was that "in those circumstances I think it clear that the defendants have not established any contract on the part of the plaintiff or his predecessor in title to convey to them a right of permanent occupancy," and he had accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for possession of the suit lands. On the appeal of the defendants, the High Court set aside the decision of the District Judge and remitted the case for a finding on the real point involved in the determination of the case. The learned Judges considered that the question which the District Judge had to consider was whether "on the admitted and undoubted facts of the cases, and the evidence on both sides, the defendants held the lands in their possession as tenants from year to year or as persons having a right of permanent occupancy." On the return of his finding the learned Judges of the High Court found that he had omitted to consider the question that he had been remitted to him. The following remarks are pertinent to the present case. The learned Judges observed :—

"The District Judge in his order submitting his findings had, notwithstanding the caution given by the High Court, again assumed that the defendants' original right was that of tenants from year to year, and that it lay on them to prove an express or implied contract by which the right of tenancy from year to year was changed into a right of permanent occupancy."

Without, however, remitting the matter for a proper finding, the High Court proceeded themselves to determine, upon the evidence on the record, the issue. To use the words of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, who delivered the judgment of the Board :—

"If and so far as this was an issue of fact—a point on which it is not necessary to express a definite opinion in the circumstances of this case—the Court had power to deal with it under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908."

The conclusion of the High Court was that the defendants had established occupancy rights in the land they held; and this Board affirmed its decree.

It will be noticed that neither in the case of Suryanarayana v. Patanna(3) nor in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (2) is there a suggestion of a presumption in favour of the inamdar or pattadar on the one side or of the raiyat on the other. It was further distinctly point out in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Dvi Sathavamudu (4) that—

"Each case must, therefore, be considered on its own facts; and in order to ascertain the effect of the grant in the present case (that is the case with which the Board was dealing) resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances so far as they can now be ascertained."

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court, however, has in a recent case Muthu Goundan v. Perumal Iyen (5) held that underlying the exposition of their Lordships such an initial presumption is to be inferred. Their Lordships cannot help observing that in drawing this inference the learned Judges are clearly in error. Each case must be dealt with upon its own facts with special regard to the evidence and circumstances therein.

When the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court the debate as to onus is purely academical. On this point they desire to associate themselves with the observation of the Board in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (2): "The controversy had passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof was pertinent; the relevant facts were before the Court, and all that remained for decision was what inference should be drawn from them."

(5) 63 Ind. Cas. 790; 44 M. 588; 40 M. L. J. 429; 13 L. W. 483; (1921) M. W. N. 263; 29 M. L. T. 398.

Dealing now with the facts of the present case, there is first the grant in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, the terms of which have already been set out. It does not in express terms grant to the inamdar both rights, melvaram and kudivaram. It speaks of other villages held by the grantor which it might be inferred from the document were occupied by tenants, nor does it expressly say that only the melvaram right was granted to the donee. The defendants contended that they had been from time immemorial in possession of their holdings. They alleged they had been transferring their holdings, whole or in part, from time to time; that the lands had descended to their heirs in succession, and the descendants of the transferees were in possession; that they had partitioned the holdings amongst themselves; that they had made improvements, sunk wells and erected buildings thereon for husbandry and dwelling purposes, and have received compensation when any portion of their holdings were taken by Government for public purposes. Under these circumstances it became essential to have the evidence on both sides in support of the propositions they advanced, and to draw therefrom the right inference. Both sides, as already stated, produced a volume of evidence. The District Munsif considered it in the most exhaustive manner. He found that the village that had been granted to the plaintiff covered three classes of lands; one was in his own possession and cultivation, another was waste or pasturage, and the third was in the occupation of tenants. He found also that the plaintiff had for a number of years been fabricating evidence to defeat the rights of the tenants, and had in the course of the trial suppressed material evidence. He found, further, that the defendants had fully established their contentions that they had been in possession and occupation from before 1829 at least; they had dealt with those lands as occupancy raiyats, partitioning their holdings, transferring and mortgaging them with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff and his agents; and that they had, in fact, received compensation for lands taken up by Government for part of their holding which had been acquired for public purposes. From these facts and circumstances he drew the inference that the defendants had fully established their prescriptive rights of occupancy, and accordingly dismissed the suits by the plaintiff. His conclusion amounts to this, that, assuming that the onus was on the defendants, they had fully discharged it.

The Officiating Judge, Mr. Thornton, on appeal was apparently bewildered by the volume of decided cases, often inconsistent with each other, of his own High Court, and, therefore, unable to come to a definite conclusion on the facts as established by evidence; he accordingly dealt with the appeals, principally on the basis of onus and presumption.

A part of his judgment in Suit No. 676 (Appeal No. 139 of 1908), throws light on some of the salient facts of the case:—

"9. I do not think the mere circumstance that the plaintiff admittedly enjoys both varams in the whole of the wet land, considering the very small proportion this bears to land under cultivation in the village, is by any means a conclusive argument in his favour. A proprietor almost invariably has some pannai land, and there is no reason why in the case of the plaint village the wet land granted to the plaint mutt should not have been the Zemindar's pannai at the time of the grant. The village consists of 255 cawnies, of which 22 cawnies are poramboke and 55 cawnies waste, and even including the land for which muchilikas have been executed on the terms of a year to year tenancy, the plaintiff is not shown to have both varams in more than about 70 cawnies of the cultivable lands. As the District Munsif points out, the plaintiff's predecessor-in title cannot have obtained greater rights from the Zemindar in respect of the tenants who were in possession at the time of the copper-plate grant than he enjoyed himself, and it is not suggested the Tirayur Zemindar owned both varams in other villages in his zemin, nor is there anything to show that he was entitled to greater rights in the plaint village than in other villages. Nor can the existence of muchilikas for about 16 cawnies, of which 4 cawnies are described in the plaintiff's adangal (Exhibit VII) as Mettam Sontham, offer any evidence as to plaintiff's rights in other lands in the village. The muchilikas, Exhibit N series, are almost all dated after 1893, and little value can attach to documents which came into existence long after the dispute about occupancy right had arisen.

"10. I do not think the defendants can properly be described as puravkudis, as contemplated in Thiagara a v. Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi (6), for both in the present case and in the connected case, with the exception of the tenant who cultivates the land included in the registers of Uppiliapuram village, the tenants are all residents of the neighbouring village of Koppampatti, of which the plaint village is shown to form part in the Settlement Register of 1896 (Exhibit XXI). Again, though the rates of rent may be higher in the plaint village than in neighbouring villages now it is clear from Exhibit B (1)—the inam Register of 1864—that the rates were fixed at the average rate prevailing in the neighbouring villages, and I agree with the District Munsif in thinking plaintiff can derive but little support from Exhibit E. J. and H. Lastly, with regard to the land taken up by Government for the road: though the plaintiff received the full value of 96 kulis under Exhibit K, it is doubtful whether Exhibit K (1), which comprises the much large extent of 2 acres 78 kulis, relates to both varams. The recital in the document is that compensation is settled at Rs. 100 on account of income and tirwa lost to the plaintiff, and it is suggested by the plaintiff's Vakil that the expression income and tirwa should be construed to mean both the kudivaram and melvaram. But I see no reason why this should not have been more definitely expressed had it been intended to award compensation for both varams, and the expressions used may, as urged by the defendant's Vakil, be construed with equal fairness to mean that compensation was paid only for the melvaram. I do not consider the plaintiff has established he is entitled to both varams in all the cultivated lands in the village, and as he has not proved what the terms of the tenancy are under which the defendants have cultivated the plaint land, I dismissed the appeal with costs throughout."

In his consideration of the muchilikas which he, differing from the Munsif, considered to be genuine, he gave little attention to the reasons the lower Court had assigned for considering them to be fabricated. In these circumstances the High Court deemed it necessary to call upon the Officiating District Judge to record another finding on the evidence. The case had to go back twice for the purpose, and in the result Mr. Thornton expressed himself unable to come to any definite conclusion. The High Court were compelled to send down the case again, and it was then taken up by the permanent incumbent, who came to a definite conclusion upon the evidence on the record, and that finding has been affirmed by the High Court.

The case has now been before three Courts in India, and all the Courts have come to the conclusion upon a full consideration of the evidence and all the circumstances that the plaintiff does not possess the kudivaram which he claimed against the defendants, in respect of the lands in their occupation. The defendants have shown conclusively how they have been dealing with the property for at least a hundred years. They have also shown (and the Munsif has dealt with the subject most exhaustively) that they had received compensation from the Government for lands taken out of their holdings for public purposes. The plaintiff's evidence has been found to be mostly false or fabricated. In this view of the case their Lordships do not consider it necessary to express any opinion as to whether Act I of 1908 applied to rights in litigation at the time of the passing of the Act. The defendants clearly acquired their occupancy rights by prescription long before the Statute came into force.

Under these circumstances their Lordships think that the conclusion of the High Court is correct, and that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed. In accordance with the terms under which special leave to appeal was granted, the appellant will pay the respondents' costs as between solicitor and client. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—This is a cross-appeal by the plaintiff, Saiyed Mohammad Hadi, against the same judgment which was the subject of Appeal No. 34 of 1920 [Parbati v. Mohammad Hadi (1)] already decided by us. The following pedigree will serve to elucidate the facts.

- First wife = Jamnadhar (died 15th July 1894) = Musammat Mukta, (died 28th February 1910).
  - Musammat Ladli, (died childless, 15th April 1918).

The facts have been stated in our judgment in Appeal No. 34 of 1920 [Parbati v.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 534; 9 O. L. J. 304.

Mohammad Hadi (1)]. It will be sufficient to say here that the suit was one for possession of property of which Musammat Parbati, the principal defendant in the Court below, claimed to be in mortgagee possession as heir of her husband, Dharnidhar. Musammat Parbati died after the decision of the suit and is now represented by her daughter and daughter's son. The property was originally mortgaged in favour of Dharnidhar by the plaintiff's father, Talib Ali. He has obtained a release of the mortgagee rights from the reversioners of Jamnadhar, father of Dharnidhar, and claims to be entitled as full owner. It has been found by the Court below, and the finding has been affirmed by us in Appeal No. 34 of 1920 [Parbati v. Mohammad Hadi (1)], that the mortgaged property was the joint family property of Dharnidhar and Jamnadhar, that after Dharnidhar's death, Jamnadhar became full owner of it by right of survivorship, that Musammat Mukta, widow of Jamnadhar, succeeded to the property as a Hindu widow on the death of the latter, that she relinquished her rights by a deed in favour of Musammat Parbati, and that the latter was in possession of the property in virtue of this relinquishment until Musammat Mukta's death in 1910. On Musammat Mukta's death Musammat Ladli, daughter of Jamnadhar, became entitled to the property. She, however, made no attempt to claim it up to the time of her death on 15th April 1918. It was only on this event that the present reversioners became entitled. The deed by which they released their rights in favour of the plaintiff was executed on 15th January 1919. The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiff's claim subject to payment to the defendant of a sum of Rs. 5,425 consisting of Government Revenue paid by Musammat Parbati from 3rd September 1894, the date of the deed of release executed by Musammat Mukta, down to the date of recovery of possession by the plaintiff. It is this part of the decree which the plaintiff contests in appeal. He also contests the rejection of his claim for mesne profits. He claimed mesne profits only from the death of Musammat Ladli, the amount claimed being the small sum of Rs. 200.

The learned Subordinate Judge has considered separately :

(a) the period from the deed of release executed by Musammat Mukta down to her death in 1910, and

(b) the period from Musammat Mukta's death to the date of the recovery of possession by the plaintiff.

As regards period (a), he holds that Musammat Parbati was in lawful possession as mortgagee under the deed of relinquishment and, therefore, entitled to claim all amounts paid as revenue as salvage payments under section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. As regards period (b), the theory on which he proceeds is that a transfer by a Hindu widow is only voidable and not void and, therefore, the defendant was holding, as the Subordinate Judge puts it, "under a qualified title" until actually turned out by the plaintiff. It may be noted here that these amounts were not claimed by the defendant in her pleadings under section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act but under the terms of the mortgage-deed. At the time of the execution of the original mortgage no revenue was assessed on the land. The deeds provided that if revenue should be assessed in future the mortgagor would pay it and would not be entitled to redeem without so paying it. It has been contended that this amount was not made a charge on the property but having regard to the condition that the mortgagor should not be entitled to redeem the property without paying this amount we have no doubt that it was the intention of the parties that it should be a charge.

The learned Subordinate Judge has fallen into several errors in dealing with this part of the case. In the first place Musammat Parbati cannot claim this amount of Rs. 100 apart from the special stipulation in the mortgage-deed. She was in possession of the property and the enjoyment of its profits. She was the person primarily responsible for payment of the revenue under section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. She can have no more claim to appropriate the income without paying the revenue than can any other mortgagee in possession.

Musammat Parbati is, therefore, thrown back on the special stipulation in the mortgage-deed. According to that stipulation the only person who can recover the amount is the mortgagee. But Musammat Parbati was no longer the mortgagee when the suit was brought. She ceased to be such at latest when Musammat Ladli died. While she was in lawful possession as mortgagee holding the estate of Musammat Mukta she might have recovered it. As she did not do so, the amount becomes an accretion to the estate and the right to recover it passed to the reversioners along with the right to recover the mortgage money under the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Kcerain (2).

The principle laid down by the Subordinate Judge in dealing with period (b) is also erroneous. A voidable transaction is good as against third parties till it is set aside but as regards the person who has a right to avoid it, it is in a state of suspense until such party exercises his option. If he avoids it, it is treated as void from the outset as against him. It is on this principle that mesne profits are always allowed in a suit by the reversioners to recover property from a transferee from a Hindu widow after her death. That mesne profits can be claimed in such a case was decided by the Privy Council in Bhagwat Dyal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (3). Whether the plaintiff can claim mesne profits for the period between Musammat Ladli's death and the deed of release in his favour depends on the terms of that deed. The deed in this case gave him the right to recover them.

For these reasons we allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by giving the plaintiff an unconditional decree for possession together with mesne profits to the amount claimed with full costs in both Courts.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is one Musammat Ishar Kaur, the daughter of Santa Singh. She sued the collaterals of her father in the sixth degree for possession of the estate left by her father who died on the 24th April 1915. The Trial Court found that half of the property left by Santa Singh was ancestral and half was self-acquired. It was also found that according to the custom by which the parties, who are Gill Jats of the Amritsar District, are bound, the daughter excluded the collaterals in succession to the self acquired property but was in her turn excluded by the collaterals qua the ancestral property of Santa Singh. The collaterals appealed against the decision and the learned District Judge dismissed their appeal, agreeing with the Trial Court both as to the nature of the property left by Santa Singh and as to the custom by which the parties were bound. The learned District Judge, however, granted a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914, on the question of custom. Armed with this certificate, the collaterals have come up to this Court in second appeal, and on their behalf we have heard Dr. Gokal Chand Narang while Mr. Tirath Ram has addressed us on behalf of the respondent, Musammat Ishar Kaur.

The first point for determination is whether the land left by Santa Singh was ancestral or self-acquired. It has been urged that the finding of the Courts below on this question is one of fact which cannot be examined in second appeal. Dr. Narang, however, contended that he was not attacking the finding of fact arrived at but the inferences drawn from that finding by the lower Appellate Court. Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (1) is an authority for the proposition that legal inferences drawn from facts may be examined in second appeal. In the present case, however, we are unable to see any reason for thinking that the Courts below have drawn any unwarranted inferences. It appears that in 1865 Nidhan Singh, the father of Santa Singh, and Ganda Singh, his second cousin, were in possession of all the property, with which we are at present concerned, in equal shares. On the 31st May 1881, Ganda Singh sold his half share to Santa Singh, who was then a minor, for Rs. 440. The Courts below have held that Santa Singh having acquired this land, other than by descent or through his relationship to the common ancestor, it must be regarded as his self-acquisition and that although the property was ancestral originally, on coming into Santa Singh's hands it lost its ancestral character. Dr. Narang has drawn our attention to Taj Muhammad v. Islam (2) and other rulings which, however, we need not discuss, as, in our opinion, the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below is warranted and we are unable to say that it is in any way erroneous. We hold, therefore, that the view taken by the Courts below as to the character of the land is correct.

There remains the question of custom. On this point Art. 23 of Rattigan's Digest lays down that, according to the general custom of the Province, a daughter excludes collaterals in succession to self-acquired property. It would, therefore, be incumbent on the collaterals to prove a custom opposed to this general custom. In order to do this they have referred to the riwaj-i-am of the Settlement of 1865 in which it was stated that a proprietor could not make a gift of even his self-acquired property to his daughter. Our attention was also drawn to the evidence of a certain number of witnesses who have stated that in this village daughters do not succeed to self-acquired property. Dr. Narang contended that an entry in the riwaj-i-am was prima facie evidence of a custom and referred to Beg v. Allah Ditta (3). The value of the riwaj i-am of 1865 as a piece of evidence, however, is considerably minimised by the fact that in Dial Singh v. Dewa Singh (4) in referring to this very riwaj i-am it was said that it did not lay down what the custom was but what the compilers thought it ought to be. Again, we find that in the Settlement of 1914, when a new riwaj i am was compiled, it is stated that a gift to a daughter can be made of ancestral or self-acquired property to a certain extent—vide answer to Question 117. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the collaterals have failed to prove a custom by which they exclude daughters from succeeding to the self-acquired property of a sonless proprietor. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

THE PERSON OF DIP NARAIN—OPPOSITE PARTY—RESPONDENT.

Guardian and ward—Court's duty—Minor's welfare.

In matters of guardianship the main question for a Court is the welfare of the child and it need not assign the personal guardianship of the child to a person merely because, in other respects, he has the best title to be guardian.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Gonda, dated 23rd February 1922.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gonda directing that Dip Narain, a minor son of Kamta Prasad, aged 27 months, shall be subject to the guardianship of Ramphal, the father by adoption. The adoption is admitted but it is urged by the appellant that the only thing that should be considered by this Court is the real welfare of the child which, it is maintained, will be best attained by leaving him in the charge of his mother. There can be no question of the correctness of the proposition of law that the main question for the Court in matters of guardianship is the welfare of the child and that the Court need not assign the personal guardianship of the child to the person who in other respects has the best title to be guardian. On behalf of the respondent it is urged that the residence of a minor with the adoptive parents was a part of the consideration for their adoption of a son, and that unless serious ill-treatment or incompetency on their part is proved, they are the proper guardians. Reliance is placed on Lakshmibai v. Shridhar Vasudeo Takle (1), which ruling was followed by this Court in Select Cases of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Basanta v. Babuji (2). No ill treatment has been proved or alleged before this Court. Moreover, the facts of the case preclude the argument, it seems to me, that the minor will be better off with the mother. It appears that, after the adoption had taken place and the child had gone to the adoptive father, the mother of the child in the course of being pregnant with a second child became strongly desirous of having her child back. With this object in view the real parents filed a criminal application under section 100, Criminal Procedure Code, for restoration of the child. An agreement was entered into that, so long as the natural mother remained pregnant, she should be allowed to have the child for 15 days in each month while the adoptive father would have it for the other half of the month. The adoptive father allowed the child to go after retaining him for 15 days to the real parents but they refused to abide by their part of the bargain and send him back. Consequently, the present application became necessary. In these circumstances, it does not lie in the mouth of the natural parents to say that the child is not well looked after. The fact that the mother wants the child is no reason for allowing the request. The natural parents should have thought of this before agreeing to the adoption. I see no reason to interfere with the order of the District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Custom—Widow—Partition.

A widow governed by agricultural custom and having only a life-estate in the land left by her husband is entitled to claim partition in cases in which she cannot secure the full enjoyment of her rights otherwise. [p. 554, col. 2.]

Abdul Qadir v. Musammat Rabia, 41 Ind. Cas. 473; 4 P R. 1917 Rev.; 1 P. W. R. 1917 Rev, referred to

SHADI v. JEONI.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 25th June 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 16th January 1917.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this second appeal is whether a widow governed by agricultural custom and having only a life-estate in the land left by her husband is entitled to claim partition under any circumstances?

In this case one Shadi sued Musammat Jeoni, widow of his brother, for a declaration that on account of unchastity she was not entitled to hold her deceased husband's property and that, in any case, she was not entitled to obtain her share of the joint holding by partition. The Trial Court found that no unchastity was proved and decided the case against the plaintiff on that point. With regard to the widow's right to ask for partition, the decision was in favour of the widow on the authority of Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1). The plaintiff appealed and his appeal was rejected by the learned District Judge who agreed with the Court of first instance on both the above points. It was contended before him that the onus of proving that a widow has by custom a right to claim partition should have been laid on the widow and was wrongly placed on the plaintiff and a reference was made to a decision of the Punjab Chief Court, Parshotam v. Raj Devi (2), where it is laid down that in a suit in which a widow claims partition, and the parties are governed by custom, the onus lies on the widow of proving that she can claim partition. The plaintiff has now come up to this Court on second appeal through Mr. Kanwar Narain who advances the same contention before us.

We think there is no force in this appeal. In the first place, it may be pointed out that Parshotam v. Raj Devi (2) cannot help the appellant, because it relates to a case in which the suit claiming partition was brought by a widow. What happened here was that the widow applied to the Revenue Authorities for partition and it is her husband's brother, the present plaintiff-appellant, who was referred to a civil suit. Moreover, in the case before us, the riwaj-i-am of the Jullundur District, to which the parties belong, is in favour of the defendant, and in view of that the Trial Court was perfectly justified in placing the onus on the plaintiff to prove that the widow was not entitled to obtain partition. The riwaj-i-am clearly states that a widow can get her husband's share in a joint estate partitioned.

Section 111 of the Land Revenue Act makes it clear that the widow, as a joint owner of the land (though possessed of limited ownership rights) is entitled to apply for partition. This principle is recognised in Abdul Qadir v. Musammat Rabia (3) by the learned Financial Commissioner who has held that a widow has a locus standi under section 111 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act to apply for partition. He, no doubt, favours the view that under Customary Law ordinarily a widow would not be entitled to get partition because of the limited nature of her estate, but a reference to paragraph 15 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law shows that she may at times obtain a separation of the share to secure her a full participation of the profits in cases in which she cannot secure the full enjoyment of her rights otherwise. This is exactly what it appears that she desired in this particular case, when she applied for partition. As stated by the Trial Court the object of her husband's brother seems to be to keep her out of her due share of produce. Under these circumstances we think that the plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed by both the Courts below, and, agreeing with them we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 18th October 1921, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 17th March 1920.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 1-3.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are few and simple. The property in suit belonged to one Kalka Singh, a member of the Bhole Sultan clan, mostly to be found in the District of Sultanpur in the Province of Oudh. He died many years ago and the exact date of his demise is not known. He was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Hansa Kunwar, in virtue of a Will of the 15th August 1832, which Kalka Singh had executed in her favour. On the death of Musammat Hansa Kunwar, the property came into the possession of Mathura Singh and Kalu Singh, sons of Musammat Jadunath Kunwar, one of the daughters of Kalka Singh, and of Musammat Sartaji, who is the widow of Hanuman Bakhsh Singh, deceased, who was the son of another daughter, Musammat Nawela, of Kalka Singh. Mathura Singh, Kalu Singh and Musammat Sartaji are the chief defendants in the suit. The plaintiffs-appellants are the reversioners of Kalka Singh. The other defendants in the case are transferees of certain portions of the property in suit from Musammat Hansa Kunwar.

The case of the plaintiffs as presented before the lower Courts was that the Will of the 15th August 1832 conferred no more than a Hindu widow's estate on Musammat Hansa Kunwar and that the issue of daughters are excluded from inheriting Kalka Singh's property because of a custom of exclusion of such persons from such property obtaining in the clan of Bhole Sultan. The defense was that the Will conferred an absolute estate on Musammat Hansa Kunwar and that, consequently, the property which was devised to her by the Will became her stridhan property and further that there was no custom in the tribe of Boole Sultan which had the effect of excluding the daughters and their issue from inheriting their mother or grandmother's property as the case may be. The two points which arose out of the parties' case as stated above have been decided by both the lower Courts against the plaintiffs appellants and in favour of the defendants respondents.

On the first point, the learned Pleader, who appeared to support the appeal before me, did not address any argument and accepted the finding of the Courts below. The language of the Will in question leaves no room for doubt that Kalka Singh intended to confer an absolute estate on Musammat Hansa Kunwar. The material words used therein for the purpose of indicating the nature of the estate devised to Musammat Hansa Kunwar are that she was "malik" of the property devised and that she had the interest of "milkiat" in the same. In a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (1) Lord Buckmaster said with regard to the word malik:—"It is not that the word is a term of art, it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be; and in the context of the present Will their Lordships think that the estate was absolute." In the setting in which the words quoted above appear in the Will before me I have no doubt that they indicate that the nature of the estate devised was an absolute one. In another decision of the same Tribunal of a date later than the one just referred to all the precedents bearing on the interpretation of those words have been considered by Sir John Edge in his judgment in the case of Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury (2). I hold, therefore, in agreement with the Courts below that Musammat Hansa Kunwar acquired an absolute estate in the property in suit under the Will of her husband dated the 15th August 1882.

On the second point, the Courts below have held that the custom of exclusion of daughters and their issue from the patrimony of their father is established as existing in the Bhole Sultan clan, but that no custom of the exclusion of them is proved to be prevalent in the same clan as regards the separate property of the mother. The learned Pleader argued chiefly with reference to the evidence in the case that the custom of the exclusion of daughters and their issue from inheriting their father or maternal grandfather's property, as the case may be, leads to a necessary inference of the exclusion of the same from their mother or maternal grandmother's property. I am not prepared to accept this reasoning as an adequate substitute for strict proof of the custom in question. The view which I take is supported by the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock in the judgment of the Privy Council in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3). His Lordship is reported to have said as follows:—"The Judicial Commissioner, however, was of opinion that the plaintiff had failed to prove the special usage and custom which he had set up, and that there was no sufficient evidence to warrant the Courts excluding daughters from the succession. Their Lordships concur in that view, and are of opinion that there was no sufficient evidence to prove the custom set up. Beyond all doubt there was no such custom proved as regards the separate or absolute property of a woman." In that case the property in dispute was held to have belonged to the mother of the defendant-respondent as her absolute property and the remark quoted above was made with reference to the evidence led by the plaintiffs to prove the custom of exclusion of daughters from inheriting father's property. The same view was taken in a recent decision of a Bench of this Court in case of Badri Narain Singh v. Thakurain Harnam Kuar (4).

A subsidiary point was taken in appeal before me to the effect that besides the two items of property which the Court below has held as not covered by the Will of Kalka Singh and with regard to which the appellants have been given a decree there are some other properties of the same nature. On examining the terms of the Will and the nature of the properties, I am of opinion that there is no force in the contention. The description of the property devised as given in the Will of the 15th August 1832 is of the widest character and would clearly include the property which the appellant's Pleader urges are not comprised therein.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act (II of 1913), s. 12—Redemption proceedings—Possession delivered to mortgagor by Collector's order—Suit by mortgagee for mere declaration, if maintainable—Appeal—Objection to form of suit, whether can be raised in appeal for first time.

Where by an order under the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab Act, the mortgagor obtains possession of the mortgaged property on payment of a sum fixed by the Collector, the mortgagee, if aggrieved by the order, can, under section 12 of the Act, sue for a mere declaration without suing for possession.

An objection as to the form of the suit which is not raised in the Courts below, cannot be raised in appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 14th January 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Sialkot, dated the 15th August 1917.

JUDGMENT.—The brief facts of the case, out of which the present second appeal arises, are as follows :—

On the 16th August 1889, Diwan Lachhman Das, father of the persent defendant-respondent, mortgaged some 39 ghumaons of land to Bhai Sobha Singh, plaintiff-appellant, for Rs. 600. It was agreed that the produce of the land was to be taken by the mortgagee in lieu of interest on Rs. 300, while the remaining Rs. 300 was to carry interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the land before the expiry of ten years and that on his failing to redeem the land in the month of Magh after that year the land would be considered as sold to the mortgagee. The defendant's father did not pay the mortgage money and the plaintiff on his part, took no steps for foreclosure under the terms of Regulation XVII of 1806. On the 14th February 1917, the defendant applied under section 4 of Act II of 1913 for redemption of the land. The Assistant Collector held that the defendant was entitled to redeem the land on payment of Rs. 1,392, i. e., Rs 600 principal and Rs. 792 interest on Rs. 300 for eleven years at the stipulated rate. The plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration that the defendant was not entitled to redeem the land except on payment of Rs. 600 principal and Rs. 1,980 interest due from the date of the execution of the deed up to the date of the institution of the suit. The Courts below held, following Balanda v. Fateh Din (1), that the plaintiff was only entitled to eleven years' interest and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court and it is urged on his behalf (1) that the terms of the mortgage-deed show that it was the intention of the parties that interest should continue to be paid even after the due date and up to the date of redemption, and (2) that, even if no such agreement can be implied, then, in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench in Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (2), the mortgagee is entitled to post diem damages which should be calculated at the rate of interest agreed upon in the deed.

In the first place, we find it necessary to refer to an objection raised by Counsel for the respondent as to the form of the suit. He urges that as the defendant has got possession of the land after redemption, the plaintiff should have sued either to be again put in possession until payment of the full amount claimed by him, or for recovery of the sum to which, he alleges, he is entitled. Now, there was no objection raised in the Courts below as to the form of the suit, and we, therefore, do not think that such an objection should be allowed at the present stage. Moreover, section 12 of the Redemption of Mortgages Act, II of 1913, lays down that any party aggrieved by an order made under sections 6, 7, 8, 9 or 11 of the Act may institute a suit to establish his right in respect of the mortgage. This clearly indicates that an aggrieved party may institute a suit to have his right declared. No doubt the plaintiff might have sued for possession of the land, but, having regard to the clear wording of section 12 of the Act, we consider that he was entitled to sue for a mere declaration.

BHAIRON V. BALAK.

The terms of the mortgage-deed show that the mortgage was for ten years and that it was also stipulated that the mortgagor could not redeem until the month of Magh. The date of the mortgage is 16th August 1889, and, therefore, there could be no redemption before about the 12th January 1900, or nearly $10\frac{1}{2}$ years after the date of the execution. We cannot suppose that the parties to the deed intended that interest should not be payable for the whole of this period though it exceeds the ten years fixed in the deed. It was also stipulated that interest should be paid for the year of grace allowed by Regulation XVII of 1806 and that at the time of redemption the mortgagor was to pay the cost of repairs of a well together with interest thereon. Diwan Lachhman Das was not an ordinary Zemindar but a man of intelligence and wealth and must have perfectly understood the terms of the deed. His son, the defendant, is a Pleader. After a careful consideration of the terms of the mortgage-deed, we are clearly of opinion that the parties intended that interest should not cease upon the arrival of the date fixed for redemption, but should continue until redemption. Under these circumstances, there is no necessity for us to refer to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (2) referred to above. We hold that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree as claimed, namely, that he is entitled to receive from the defendant prior to redemption a sum of Rs. 2,580.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, give the plaintiff a decree as above together with costs in all Courts.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 25th October 192 , confirming a decree of the Munsif, Ramsanehighat, dated the 18th July 192 .

Mr. B. N. Chakbast, for the Appellant.

M Ram Bharose Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of a tenancy holding made by Sarju, the father of the plaintiff, in favour of Bhairon, the defendant appellant. The mortgage was made on the 10th May 1898 for Rs. 59 and the mortgagee was given possession over the holding forthwith. The contention of the mortgagee is that the mortgagor was not competent to mortgage the tenancy and that no suit for redemption would, therefore, lie. That contention was repelled by the Courts below and cannot be accepted here.

In the case of an occupancy tenant the law imposes a restraint on alientation, but in the case of an ordinary tenant-at-will the law merely permits the landlord in certain contingencies to terminate the tenancy in the manner laid down in section 53 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886).

Section 4 restricts the right of a landlord to eject a tenant on grounds other than those recognised by law in spite of anything in the contract to the contrary. If the tenant contravenes any terms recognised by law or does anything forbidden by law he is liable to ejectment under section 62. Till the landlord exercises that right, the tenancy continues, and his mortgagee or sub lessee continues in possession, but he cannot acquire under section 68 the rights referred to in section 67, to which a tenant is entitled. If a tenant dies, his rights are to a certain extent heritable and his heirs-at-law can step into his shoes during the currency of the tenancy within the limits prescribed by sections 47 and 48. A mortgage by a tenant at-will is not binding on the landlord, but it is open to the landlord to recognise it by accepting rent from the mortgagee during the currency of the tenancy. Such a mortgage is not ab initio void and a suit for its redemption is maintainable.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant relies on the decision in Tika v. Sheo Narain (1), but in that case no question about the validity of a transfer really arose, for the landlord had recognised the transferee and granted him a lease in his own right, and a suit filed by the transferee for possession against the transferor was decreed. In Kampher Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh (2) where a person who obtained a decree from the Settlement Court giving him a heritable but not a transferable right of occupancy in some land had sold a portion of his holding to another person and his son subsequently filed a suit against the latter for possession, it was held that the restriction on the right of transfer contained in the decree of the Settlement Court was intended for the benefit of the landlord and his heirs and not for the benefit of the tenant or his legal representatives. In Jangi Ram v. Chaudhuri Sheoraj Singh (3) it was held that a mortgagee could not go behind the mortgage to dispute the mortgagor's right to enforce redemption. In Sheikh Jawahar v. Sheikh Nasir (4) it was similarly held that a person who was a transferee from a tenant of a non-transferable holding could not be heard to say that his transferee had not a right to transfer the holding or to transfer his rights therein to the plaintiff. In Jang Bahadur v. Rae Raja (5) a distinction was drawn between the right of a landlord to question a mortgage made by an occupancy tenant having a non transferable right of occupancy and the right of such an occupancy tenant to derogate from his own grant and to claim possession of the holding mortgaged on the ground that the mortgage was illegal. Section 6, clause (i), of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) permits a transfer to be made where it is not opposed to the nature of the interest created thereby and excludes from its operation only such rights of occupancy as are non-transferable Section 62 of the Act gives, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, a right to the mortgagor to recover possession of the mortgaged property on payment or tender of the money due on the mortgage. It is not open to the mortgagee to plead that a mortgage was invalid or to set up a right by trespass if he originally obtained possession under the mortgage, that is by license and permission of the mortgagor.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66—Auction

ABDULLA KHAN v. JALAM SINGH.

sale—Agreement with auction-purchaser to purchase property sold—Specific performance.

The provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be strictly construed. [p. 561, col. 2.]

A suit by a plaintiff claiming specific performance of an agreement to sell, made by a purchaser at an auction-sale, cannot be described as a suit brought on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff, because, in such a case, the purchase is made on behalf of the purchaser with whom the title remains until the plaintiff obtains specific performance of the contract. [p. 561, col. 2.]

Therefore, section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code does not preclude a suit to enforce specific performance of an agreement made either prior or subsequent to the purchase by the auction-purchaser to sell the property to the plaintiff when the purchase-money has been entirely found by the defendant and where there is no allegation that without the enforcement of the agreement to sell, the property is actually the property of the plaintiff, that is, that it was bought by the defendant benami for the plaintiff [p. 561, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal from an order of remand passed by the District Judge, Nimar, on the 20th January 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 168 of 1921.

Mr. V. R. Panjit, R. B. for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract for sale alleged to have been entered into by the defendant No. 1 with him, or, in the alternative for refund of the money which he alleged to have paid as part consideration of the sale. The plaintiff's case as stated in the plaint is, that he wished to purchase certain property which was to be sold at an auction. For certain reasons, it was not considered advisable that the plaintiff should appear as a bidder and the defendant No. 1 agreed to purchase the property himself and to sell it, after the sale was confirmed, to the plaintiff for cash consisting of the purchase-money and expenses. The property was accordingly so purchased by the defendant No 1 and after the sale was confirmed the defendant No. 1 again agreed to sell the property to the plaintiff but not for cash as originally agreed but on certain other terms specified in the plaint.

The First Court dismissed the suit as being contrary to the provisions of section 66, Civil Procedure Code, and, as regards the claim for refund, it held that the plaintiff could not recover the money, as the object of the agreement was unlawful with reference to the provisions of section 23 of the Contract Act. It is the plaintiff's case that the purchase-money was, in the first instance, to be paid and was paid by the 1st defendant.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that the suit could not be brought on the original agreement prior to the sale set out in paragraph 2 of the plaint. He says: "The suit based solely upon that agreement, even though it be thrown into form of a suit for specific performance for a contract for sale would be barred by the section 66: for, as the Privy Council judgment in Ramathai Vadivela Mudaliar v. Peria Manicka Mudaliar (1) points out, the distinction between a purchase on behalf of another and a purchase coupled with an undertaking to convey to another at the price of purchase is somewhat nrarow, and if the agreement entered into before the auction stood alone there would be considerable force in the contention that the purchase was merely made benami." But the learned Judge held with reference to paragraphs 4 and 5 of the plaint, where a subsequent agreement after the sale to defendant No. 1 is set out as follows: "This is an allegation of a distinct subsequent agreement to sell and to deliver possession. It is upon the truth or falsity of this allegation that the maintainability of the suit must depend. In the Privy Council case cited above fresh agreements were made after the sale and it was held that such agreements, although carrying out agreements made before the sale, could be sued upon and were not barred by section 66." The District Judge, therefore, remanded the case for a decision as to whether or not there had been a subsequent agreement as alleged by the plaintiff, in which case the suit would be maintainable.

ABDULLA KHAN v. JALAN SINGH.

As regards the second point as to whether any refund of money alleged to have been paid as consideration for the re sale is due, the learned Judge held: "that while section 66 bars the suit to prove benami character of certain transactions it does not make these benami transactions illegal," and he, therefore, held that the consideration, if any, could be recovered under section 65 of the Contract Act. An appeal has been made to this Court against the order of remand. It is contended that there was even according to the plaintiff's allegations no fresh agreement after the confirmation of the auction sale, and that, even if there was, the plaintiff had not relied on it, since, in paragraph 6 of the plaint, he asks for a relief on the ground of the original agreement. I have carefully considered the allegations set out in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the plaint and agree with the learned District Judge that they do amount to allegations of a fresh contract in supersession of the original contract. Though the plaintiff has not expressly asked for a relief in relation to the fresh contract, the facts entitling him to such relief are fully set out in the plaint and the plaintiff should not be non suited merely because of the inartistic method in which his pleas were made in the Mofussal Court. The further ground of appeal that the suit for refund of the consideration in case the other relief is not granted is very wisely not pressed, the lower Appellate Court having taken a correct view of the law. It will, of course, have to be decided whether, even on the plaintiff's own case the money which he claims can really be called consideration in respect of the agreement set up.

The learned Counsel for the respondent supports the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case by urging that the learned District Judge wrongly decided that the suit as brought on the original agreement does not lie because it is contrary to the provisions of section 66, Civil Procedure Code. No reported case has been brought to my notice in which it has been held that section 66 precludes a suit to enforce specific performance of an agreement made prior to the purchase by the auction-purchaser to sell the property to the plaintiff when the purchase-money has been entirely found by the defendant and where there is no allegation that without the enforcement of the agreement to sell, the property is actually the property of the plaintiff, that is to say, that it was bought by the defendant benami for the plaintiff. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted by the learned District Judge were obiter and we do not know what the decision of the case would have been if there had been no subsequent agreement. Their Lordships upheld the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Amrutam Venkatappa v. Vavilala Jalayya (2) that an agreement to sell subsequent to the confirmation of the auction sale is not inconsistent with the auction-purchaser's own title, but rather the reverse. Their Lordships did not deal with the plea discussed in the earlier part of the judgment, as on the facts it did not arise. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court observe: "The finding is that the defendant agreed that the property should be purchased in the name of the defendant and that one half of it should be conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff after the sale certificate had been obtained. This, in our opinion, is not a benami transaction at all." These observations are also obiter. A provision like section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code must be strictly construed and it appears to me that a suit claiming specific performance of an agreement to sell made by a purchaser cannot be described as a suit brought on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff. The purchase is made on behalf of the purchaser with whom the title remains until the plaintiff obtains specific perfomance of the contract. The object of the section appears to be to prevent the Executing Court being led to believe that a person who is not the purchaser is the purchaser. I am, therefore, of opinion that if the plaintiff proves the original contract and fails to prove the subsequent contract he is entitled to fall back on the original contract.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for accounts. The case for the plaintiff was that the defendant was employed as his rent-collector from the 12th December 1907 to the 11th October 1915, although no written agreement was executed and registered till the 5th October 1909. He prayed that a preliminary decree might be passed directing the defendant to submit a correct account during his term of office and that a final decree might be passed for the amount found due from the defendant on examination of the accounts. The substantial defence was two-fold; namely, first, that the claim was barred by limitation and, secondly, that in so far as the claim might be found to be not barred by limitation, the accounts had been duly rendered. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and has directed the defendant to render accounts for the period between the date of his appointment and the date of his dismissal. He has further directed that a Commissioner be appointed to determine, on the examination of the accounts, what amount the defendant would be liable to the plaintiff. On the present appeal, the defendant has contended that the claim is barred by limitation; and that, in any event, the Subordinate Judge should have held that accounts had been duly rendered.

Art. 89 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act provides that a suit by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for must be instituted within three years from the date when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused or where no such demand is made when the agency terminates. Art. 115 provides that a suit for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, and not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for, must be instituted within three years from the date when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) from the date when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or, where the breach is continuing, from the date when it ceases. Art. 116 provides that a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered must be instituted within six years from the date when the period of limitation begins to run in respect of a suit brought on a similar contract not registered. It was argued at one stage that inasmuch as the contract of agency in the present case was in writing registered, Art. 116 was applicable. But there is no foundation for this contention. To make Art. 116 applicable, it must be shown, as provided in Art. 115, that the suit is of a nature not specifically provided for in the Schedule. Art. 89, however, plainly applies to a suit of this description, as the term "moveable property" includes money. Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (1), Venkatachalam Chetty v. Narayanan Chetty (2), Pichu Vadhiar v. Secretary of State (3), and, consequently, excludes the operation of both Art. 115 and Art: 116. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nobin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (4), which reversed the decision of this Court in Chandra Madhab Burua v Nabin Chandra Barua (5). A similar view had been taken in the cases of Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (6), Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (7), Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (1) and Venkatachalam Chetty v. Narayanan Chetty (2). This principle is applicable, as appears from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nabin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhu Barua (4), as also from that of this Court in Bhabatarini Debi Chowdhurani v. Sheikh Bahadur Sarkar (8), even though the contract provides that the accounts are to be rendered from year to year. No doubt, where immoveable property is hypothecated to secure the performance of an obligation undertaken by an agent, a suit by the principal may in essence be regarded as a suit to enforce a charge on immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act and may consequently be governed by the period of 12 years provided by that Article. The present case, however, is not of that description, and the question of limitation must be answered with reference to the terms of Art. 89, which contemplates two distinct starting points, namely, first, when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, time runs from the date of refusal; and, secondly, where no such demand is made, time runs from the date of termination of agency, and it is plain that there may be cases where only one of these contingencies has happened. On the other hand, there may be cases where both the contingencies may have happened. It is plain from the evidence that both the contingencies have happened here, there has been a demand and refusal and there also has been a termination of the agency. The results which may be reached in such a case by the application of the two tests would not necessarily be identical. In the case before us, it is clear that on the 21st April 1914 the plaintiff demanded accounts from the defendant. The demand was embodied in a letter addressed by the officer of the plaintiff to the defendant in the following terms: "You will clear your account by submitting to the Sadar office the account papers relating to your works up to 1320 B. S. within 30th Baisak. In default take notice that fine will be imposed from the 1st Jaistha.' The demand in essence was for accounts to be submitted up to the 12th April 1914 on or before the 13th May 1914. The evidence makes it abundantly plain that the accounts were not rendered as demanded. Consequently there was a refusal, because as was pointed out in Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal

Chandra Das Basak (1), which was followed in Bhabatarini Debi Chowdhurani v. Sheikh Bahadur Sarkar (8), an omission to render account where the account is demanded may operate as refusal. It need not be disputed that, as pointed out in Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das Basak (1), and Bhabatarini Debi Chowdhurani v. Sheikh Bahadur Sarkar (8) where the agent in answer to the demand promises to submit the accounts later, his conduct cannot be deemed to amount to refusal. But in the case before us, there was a demand made by the plaintiff on the defendant to render accounts; the defendant did not comply with the demand; his conduct consequently amounted to refusal. The first contingency mentioned in the third column of Art. 89 consequently happened and the suit in so far as it claims accounts from the defendant up to the 12th April 1914 must be deemed barred by limitation as it has been instituted after the lapse of three years from the date of refusal, that is, the 13th May 1914.

The second contingency mentioned in the third column has also happened, because the agency has been terminated. This is a question of fact, as explained in Nagappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettar (9), Venkatachalam Chetty v. Narayanan Chetty (2), Muthiah Chettiar v. Chithambaram Chetty (10) Muthiah Chetty v. Alagappa Chetty (11), Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Veerappa Shettiar (12) and is proved beyond doubt by the letter of the 11th October 1915 which was addressed by an officer of the plaintiff to the defendant, and was in the following terms: "You are dismissed from the post of Tahsildar of Pargana Pustail and Gavraha and Dakhina Runjan Basu is transferred from the post of Tahsildar of Kushidanga and is placed in charge of your office and you are hereby ordered to make over the charge of the original papers, etc., in your custody to the said Basu, to submit the charge sheet signed by both of you and the cash found at your disposal to the Sadar Kutchery at Headquarters Kumartalah and to render your accounts up to date. Remember that you do not fail in this." The suit was instituted on the 27th August 1918, that is, within three years from the date of dismissal. Consequently, the plaintiff is entitled to accounts from the defendant other than the accounts demanded on the 21st April 1914. The suit is thus in time for the accounts from the 13th April 1914 to the 11th October 1915. In this connection we have to consider whether the defendant can be called upon to pay to the plaintiff money which might have been found due if accounts could have been ordered up to the 12th April 1914. In our opinion, the answer must be in the negative. No doubt, as was pointed by this Court in the case of Suresh Kanta Banerjee v. Nawab Ali (13), when a suit for accounts is decreed, the accounts are not necessarily restricted to the three years preceding the institution of the suit or three years preceding the termination of the agency. But in the present case we have already held that by reason of events which have happened the claim for accounts up to the 12th April 1914 had become barred by limitation at the date of the institution of the suit. Consequently, the defendant can be called upon to render accounts only in relation to transactions which took place after the 12th April 1914 up to the 11th October 1915 when he was dismissed from service.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge varied. The decree will direct that the defendant do render accounts from the 13th April 1914 to the 11th October 1915. We may add that in this view it is not necessary to discuss the question whether the accounts had been rendered for the period antecedent to the 12th April 1914. But the respondent admitted that accounts had been rendered and adjusted up to the 13th April 1909; so that in any event the claim for accounts from the 12th December 1907 to the 13th April 1909 was bound to fail. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court but the order for costs made by the Court below will stand: such costs as may be incurred after remand will abide the result.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—We have heard argument at considerable length on the facts and law involved in this appeal. But, as the majority of the issues raised will require consideration at the trial of the suit by the lower Court, we enter on no detailed discussion of them.

There is, we think, no doubt that the lower Court had power to supersede first defendant, notwithstanding that he was appointed manager by the Temple Committee and was only removeable after regular enquiry. Such action was approved in Veeraraghava Thathachariar v. Krishnaswami Thathachariar (1) in similar circumstances against a trustee and manager, who was, no doubt, hereditary but who also would be removeable only in the same way.

As regards the facts, we have been taken carefully through the history of first defendant's incumbency and, in particular, of the last ten days, during which the important Chithrai festival should have been celebrated, and, in our opinion, it is just and convenient in the interests of the public, whom the plaintiffs represent, and of the institution that the immediate management should be in other hands and should, so far as the circumstances permit, be under the supervision and control of the Court during the pendency of the suit.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and the connected petition, except that we add to the lower Court's order appealed against the provision already made in our order of 11th May 1921 on Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1618 of 1921 for the maintenance, subject to the Receiver's right and duty to consult the Court, when necessary, of his subordination to the Temple Committee.

Appellants will pay respondents' costs in the appeal.

RAMESAM, J.—I agree. The case in Veeraraghava Thathachariar v. Krishnaswami Thathachariar (1) shows that in a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, though there is no prayer to remove a trustee, a Receiver might be appointed during the pendency of the suit. The reason is, that, in this class of suits, it is not merely the defendants' rights that are the subject of consideration by the Courts but the interests of a public institution of far greater importance than the defendants' rights. It may be that the power of a Temple Committee to remove a trustee appointed by them is limited but it does not follow that a Court's powers over the trustee are similarly fettered. Having regard to all the facts placed fully before us, I concur with my learned brother in thinking that the Receiver should continue to be in charge of the institution till the suit is disposed of. I agree with the order of my learned brother.

The statement of a person made when he was thirty-six years of age that he was adopted when he was four years old is admissible in evidence after his death to prove the fact of his adoption under section 32 (5) of the Evidence Act, as he possessed the special means of knowledge about the relationship required by the section. The fact that the person making the adoption died while the person adopted was too young to remember him would not be material as the latter would surely be able to declare positively that he had been adopted from that acquaintance with the history of his family which he would necessarily possess. JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by one Fadali along with three other persons to obtain possession of a half share in property of which the last male owner was a distant relation named Janki. The principal defendant is Gulab, the appellant to this Court.

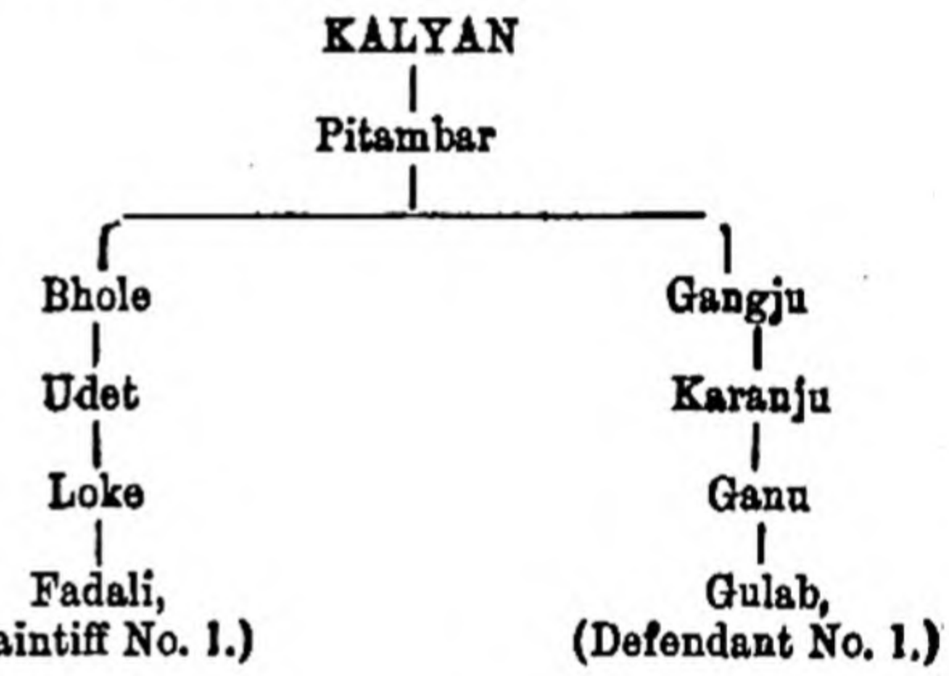
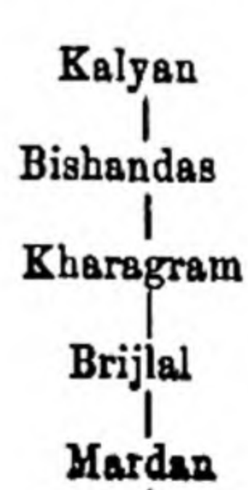
As to the descent of Fadali and Gulab from one common ancestor there is no doubt, and the following table shows how they are related to each other :



Janki's father was admittedly one Mardan who died on the 28th May 1849. Janki himself died in June 1897 at the age of 75 years and was succeeded by his daughter, Kashi Bai, who died in April 1916. The suit was filed on the 24th January 1917. The second defendant, Maharani, was the widow of Janki's son, Girdhari, who predeceased Janki.

Mardan was admittedly the natural son of Gangju who figures in the above tree as the defendant Gulab's great grandfather. The plaintiffs' case is that Mardan was adopted by Brijlal and, according to them Janki, was descended from Kalyan as shown in the following table :—



According to the defence, Mardan was not adopted by Brijlal and Brijlal was the son of Kharagram's brother, Manju.

From these particulars of the pleadings it will appear that if the plaintiffs genealogy is correct, Fadali and Gulab are related in the same degree to Janki, while if the defence is accepted Gulab is the sole heir being two degrees nearer than Fadali.

With the plaint were filed certified copies of two old documents. The first document (Exhibit P-1) is a statement made by Mardan on the 4th December 1828 supporting a claim made before the Revenue Authorities to hold 15 bighas of land in Mauza Pamakheri free of revenue. The other (Exhibit P 2) is a pedigree of the Zemindars of the same Mauza which was filed in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner in charge of Settlement operations on the 7th May 1864. The defence contended that neither of these documents was admissible and that Mardan could not be validly adopted by Brijlal inasmuch as he was Brijlal's paternal uncle's son. There were other pleadings the nature of which will be sufficiently apparent from the principal issues, namely :—

"1. Whether Brijlal was the son of Kharagram ?

2. (a) Whether Mardan was adopted by Brijlal ?

(b) Whether all the members of the family acquiesced in this adoption ?

3. Whether Mardan inherited the property of Brijlal and did not get any share in the property of Gangju ?

4. Whether the adoption of Mardan by Brijlal is valid in law or by the principle of factum valet ?

7. Whether plaintiff No. 1 is the next heir to Janki's property and has got a half share in it?

9. (a) Whether the point about Mardan's adoption by Brijlal was in dispute when Mardan made his statement as given in Exhibit P 1 and when Janki produced the family tree as shown in Exhibit P. 2 ?

(b) Are these documents admissible in evidence ? "

The Trial Judge held that Exhibits P-1 and P-2 were both admissible in evidence as statements made before any dispute regarding Mardan's adoption arose by persons having special knowledge of the family. On the strength of Exhibit P-1 Kharagram, not Manju, was held to have been Brijlal's father. The adoption of Mardan by Brijlal was found to be proved and valid in law. The plaintiffs were accordingly given a decree for possession in respect of the property inherited by Kashi Bai from Janki, ordinary and occupancy holdings excepted. The defendants were ordered to bear the plaintiffs' costs in proportion to the relief granted.

The only respondents are the plaintiffs, and of them Bhawani Prasad alone put in an appearance.

In the first ground of appeal Exhibits P-1 and P-2 are said to be inadmissible in evidence and, if admissible, of no evidential value. I shall deal first with the question whether Exhibit P-1 is admissible. The appellant urges that Mardan's own allegation showed him to have been only 4 years old when adopted and Brijlal to have died a year later. It is urged that Mardan cannot, therefore, be regarded as having possessed special means of knowlegde regarding the adoption. It is also said that the adoption should be regarded as having been disputed in December 1828, inasmuch as failing the adoption Mardan could have no title to the land which he claimed to hold free of revenue. Section 32 (5) of the Indian Evidence Act renders admissible a statement by a person who is dead and runs as follows :—

"When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption between persons as to whose relationship by blood, marriage or adoption the person making the statement had special means of knowledge, and when the statement was made before the question in dispute was raised."

I cannot think there is any force in the appellant's contention. Mardan may well have remembered at the age of 36 or 37 that he was adopted when 4 years old and lived for a year with his adoptive father. Moreover, even if Brijlal had died when Mardan was too young to remember him, the latter would surely be able to declare positively that he had been adopted from that acquaintance with the history of his family which he would necessarily possess. In

GULAB THAKUR v. FADALI.

Debi Pershad Chowdhry v. Radha Chowdhrain (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to the well-known practice by which Hindu boys were taught the names of their ancestors, paternal and maternal, by their parents and other relatives while very young. These instructions are given not merely as a matter of curiosity, but as a matter of necessity. In accordance with this practice Mardan would necessarily have learnt the name of his adoptive father, if he was adopted, and I have no hesitation in holding that he possessed the special means of knowledge required by law.

With regard to the question whether the statement in Exhibit P-1 was made before any dispute arose as to Mardan's adoption I can find no indication that the adoption itself was questioned. It appears from Exhibit 1 D 7, the order rejecting Mardan's claim, that the rejection was based merely upon his inability to show that he had ever received a sanad of exemption. It was no part of his story that the land had ever been held revenue-free by Brijlal, nor was his story told in the course of any reply to an opponent as was the case in Narain Kuar v. Chandi Din (2), an authority relied upon for the appellant. I, therefore, hold that there was no dispute in 1828 regarding Mardan's adoption by Brijlal and Exhibit P-1 is admissible in evidence.

With regard to the evidential value of this document it is urged for the appellant that Mardan was interested in making out a close relationship between himself and Brijlal and, therefore, may have lied as to the real nature of the relationship. On the other hand, he must have realised that his allegation might be put to the test of inquiry and he did in fact mention two persons (Kammal and Umrao) as able to corroborate him with regard to the adoption. There is more force in the point that before the Settlement Officer in May 1863 Janki made a statement (Exhibit P-4) in which he showed Mardan as the son of Gangju and referred to Brijlal as his paternal uncle. Janki's statement should be read in the light of Karanju's (Exhibit P-3) made a year later in which the latter described half of Mauza Pamakheri as belonging to him with his brother Bisram and the other half to Janki. This statement is not intelligible except on the assumption that Janki had passed out of the family so that, to use his own expression, Gangju's share was not in his possession and Karanju had no share in his (Janki's) share. In the mutation proceedings which took place in June 1849 immediately after Mardan's death we find Janki referred to as owning an entire one third of the village: see Exhibit P 6. A further indication that Mardan was adopted by Brijlal appears from Exhibit P-7 which is a statement of graden lands in Mauza Pamakheri forming part of the settlement Misl of 1864. In this Karanju is shown as occupying two gardens, both planted by his father Gangju. The third graden figures in the name of Janki and is described as planted by Brijlal, Janki's grandfather. In these circumstances I am not prepared to treat Exhibit P-1 as without value.

In connection with Mardan's statement that he was adopted when only 4 or 5 years old it is urged for the appellant that Brijlal would not be likely to take in adoption so young a child. It appears, however, from passage 22, section IV, Dattaka-Mimansa, though the authenticity of the quotation therein given is doubtful, that 5 was once the maximum limit of age for the adoptee. According to the late learned Sastri Golapchandra it is desirable that a boy should be adopted at a tender age so that he may be thoroughly assimilated to the family into which he is adopted and being bred up from his infancy amidst its members may be looked upon as a natural relation: see "the Hindu Law of Adoption", page 359, (second edition).

Turning to Exhibit P-2 I find from the original settlement record of Mauza Pamakheri, which I obtained at the request of the parties, that this pedigree was prepared by the Extra Assistant Commissioner in charge of this Settlement in 1863-64 from the statements made by the claimants whom he examined. He mentioned in his order of the 7th June 1864 that all the signatories admitted the details in the table to be correct. The signatories whose signatures are legible in the original are Ramdayal,

(1) 32 C. 84 at p. 94; 9 C. W. N. 161, 31 I. A. 160; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 708 (P. C.).

Daryao, Ramlalju and Nirpat. It appears that the three sets of claimants recognised as owners were treated as representing respectively the three sons of Kirparam, the first holder of the village. Those three sons were Bhimsen, Gopinath and Dalsa. Janki was the sole representative of Bhimsen's line, Karanju and Bisaram's widow admitting that they had no claim. The representative of Dalsa's line was Rai Singh, while Ramdayal took as descendant of Gopinath. The pedigree shows Mardan as adopted by Brijlal and it is clear from the orders of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, which I have perused in original, that no dispute as to the adoption was raised. There can be no doubt that Janki described his father Mardan as having been adopted by Brijlal and the reference in his statement of the 11th May 1863 (Exhibit P-4) to Gangju as his grandfather must, therefore, be read as in no way inconsistent with such a claim. The pedigree thus undoubtedly represents the views of the descendants of Kirparam at a time when the real position of Mardan in the family might well have been known to many. I have no doubt that it is admissible in evidence under section 32 (5), Indian Evidence Act, and deserves to have great weight attached to it. These considerations suffice for the disposal of all the first three grounds of appeal.

In the fourth ground of appeal it is said that Exhibit P 7, to which reference has already been made, is inadmissible and should not have been relied upon. In argument, however, the appellant's learned Counsel admitted the admissibility of this document and asked the Court to compare the copy filed with the original in the Settlement Record. I have made this comparison and find the copy to be perfectly correct. The word used for grandson is "Nathi," and Brijlal who was only one degree nearer their ancestor Kalyan could not possibly be described as Janki's grandfather.

The fifth ground of appeal complains that Janki is incorrectly referred to in the 12th paragraph of the lower Court's judgment as having inherited Brijlal's share. It is urged that in Exhibit P 4 Janki did not in fact describe himself as having inherited any share from Brijlal. What Janki actually said was that he was in possession of Brijlal's share. It appears from the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner's order of the 7th June 1864 that Janki was the sole descendant of Kirparam's son, Bhimsen, who put in a serious claim to the share which would ordinarily go to that line. Karanju appeared before the Settlement Officer as is shown by Exhibit P-3 and explained that as he had long been out of possession, having failed many years back to pay the land revenue, he could not set up any title to a share. There is nothing in all this one way or the other to assist us in deciding whether Mardan had been adopted by Brijlal or not. The history of the village as given in the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner's Order of the 12th May 1863 (Exhibit P 5) shows that Brijlal was one of the holders for some years from 1796 A. D. This order refers more than once to the genealogical table (Exhibit P-2) which the Extra Assistant Commissioner himself prepared, as already stated, and the history of the village becomes perfectly intelligible if it be held that Mardan took Brijlal's place as he would do, if adopted, and was in turn succeeded by his natural son Janki.

The sixth ground of appeal relates to Exhibit 1 D 5 which is a copy of the statement made by one Nandkishor before the Assistant Commissioner, Saugor, on the 16th September 1861, at an early stage of the inquiry made at the Settlement with the object of determining who should be recognised as proprietors of Mauza Pamakheri. This Nandkishor was acting in the matter as agent of the plaintiff Fadali's father, Loke, and described Janki as son of Loke's uncle. The lower Court, relying on Sangram Singh v. Rajan Bahi (3), held Nandkishor's statement to be inadmissible in evidence, inasmuch as he was merely an agent and not proved to have special means of knowledge of the relationship in question. It is urged that the plaintiff Fadali should be regarded as having derived his interest from his father Loke and that the statement made by Loke's agent amounts to an admission under section 18, Indian Evidence Act, and is, therefore, relevant. Such statements, however, must have been made during the continuance of the interest of the person making the statements and it appears from the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner's order that Loke's father Udet who died in 1847 when Loke was a minor, had already lost all rights in the village. Further, section 18, Indian Evidence Act, does not by itself make the admissions therein mentioned relevant. One reversioner should not be regarded as deriving his interest from another in whom no interest ever vested, even though that other was his own father : see Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (4) and Govinda Pillai v. Thayammal(5). Consequently, the primary rule in section 21 that an admission is relevant and may be proved as against the person who makes it or his representative-in-interest is not applicable here. Nandkishor's statement is certainly not relevant under section 32 (5), Indian Evidence Act, inasmuch as he is not shown to have had any special means of knowledge regarding the family of his client. This point is exactly covered by the Privy Council decision relied on by the lower Court. Even if it be conceded that the statement is relevant, I consider that it does not amount to a clear denial of Mardan's adoption by Brijlal. In the first place, it was made nearly three years before the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner who prepared the genealogical table (Exhibit P 2) after examining all the claimants to the village. Secondly, in the loose parlance common among Hindus, Brijlal, no less than Mardar, might have been referred to as the uncle of Loke's father Udet.

The seventh ground of appeal relates to Janki's description of Karanju's son Ganu as his "chachazad bahi" (paternal uncle's son) in Exhibit D 1, the deed of gift, executed by Janki in Ganu's favour on the 3rd July 1891. It is urged that if Mardan had really been adopted by Brijlal, no special affection such as must have prompted the gift effected by Exhibit D-1 could have existed between Janki and Ganu and that Ganu could only be described as son of Janki's paternal uncle if Janki regarded his father Mardan as the full brother of Karanju. These contentions seem to me to lose much of their force when regarded in the light of the history of the village as given by the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner in Exhibit 1 D-2. Brijlal and Karanju occupied corresponding places in the table of descent from Kalyan and both in accordance with usage might have been referred to as Janki's uncle. As for the motive for the gift it appears from the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner's proceeding and Karanju's own statement in 1864 (Exhibit P-3) that Karanju was for some time a recognised Pattidar but lost his share because he was unable to pay the Government revenue. Janki's share in 1864 was declared to be 6 annas $4\frac{1}{2}$ pies or more than an exact one-third of the village by just about the share conveyed by Exhibit D 1. It appears from the plaintiff Fadali's statement as P.W. No. 10 that Gari Babu by whose name Exhibit D-1 describes the share given to Ganu was the widow of Janki's son Mahadeo. To infer from this gift that the statements made to the Settlement Extra Assistant Commissioner in 1864 by the then co-sharers regarding the adoption were incorrect would, in my opinion, be wholly unreasonable. I agree then with the lower Court that Exhibit D 1 does not weaken the plaintiffs' case.

The 8th ground of appeal is concerned with the evidence of the first four witnesses examined by the appellant. Gaya Prasad (D. W. No. 1.) is the appellant's Purohit and tenant and there seems to be considerable force in the lower Court's remark that this man is not likely to remember the names of the ancestors recited by Janki who died 20 years before the witness was examined. Bhagole, the second witness, heard Janki recite the names of his ancestors at a wedding which took place in 1868 when the witness was only 15 years old : the appellant and he had given evidence for each other on a previous occasion. Pyarelal (D. W. No. 3) likewise speaks of a single recital at a wedding which took place about the year 1878 when he was 22 years old. His sister's daughter is married to the appellant and he had given evidence for him. Ante (D. W. No. 4) is 80 years old and still hardly old enough to remember Mardan who died in 1849. It is true that all these four men reside in Pamakheri and so had opportunity of knowledge which outsiders could not obtain. On the other hand, their evidence carries little weight when compared with the statements made more than 50 years earlier by claimants to the village at a time when none had any particular interest in alleging an adoption which had really taken place.

The 9th ground of appeal relates to evidence given not by the defendants' witnesses but by the plaintiff Fadali as his own 10th witness and Barelal (P. W. No. 11). If Mardan, who, like Brijlal, was by birth third in descent from the common ancestor, Kalyan, was adopted by Brijlal, then Janki stood in the same degree as the plaintiff, Fadali. On the other hand, if Mardan remained throughout his life the son of Gangju, then Janki would be one degree nearer than Fadali to the common ancestor and so his senior. Now, Fadali admittedly shaved his moustache when Janki died and it was elicited from him in cross-examination that this mark of respect is only shown to seniors. Similarly, Barelal (P. W. No. 11) said in cross-examination :—

"Ganu Thakur had shaved his moustaches at the death of Janki. Amongst us the younger relations only shave their moustaches. I mean those who are younger in degree and if of the same degree those who are younger in age shave their moustaches."

Fadali is only 40 years old and so must have been considerably younger than Janki when the latter died and according to Barelal would properly shave at Janki's death. We have no indication of Ganu's age, and if Mardan was not adopted Ganu and Janki would as cousins stand in the same degree of descent from the common ancestor : in these circumstances I am not prepared to attach any special significance to Ganu's shaving which, as the lower Court has remarked, may have been due to respect for Janki. It must be remembered in this connection that Janki was the most influential member of Bhimsen's branch and had given Ganu a part of his share in the village.

In connection with the 10th ground of appeal stress is laid on the supposed improbability that Brijlal would adopt a cousin standing in the same degree as himself from the common ancestor. Reference is made for the appellant to Placita 29 and 30 in Section II of the Dattaka Mimansa which are thus translated in "Stokes' Hindu Law Books" at page 552. (edition of 1865):—

Placitum No. 29:—

"By the position that a brother's son only must be affiliated, it is meant, that the son of a whole brother only must be affiliated. Manu declares this: 'if one, among brothers of the whole blood (Ekajata), be possessed of male issue (Putravan), Manu pronounces that they all are fathers of the same, by means of that son."

Placitum No. 30:—

"In this text, the state of brothers, as adoptive fathers, being propounded, their incapacity to be the objects of adoption follows."

In the placitum next following Nanda Pandita infers from the text of Manu that a man cannot adopt his paternal uncle of the whole blood, or his full brother, or his full sister's son. I am also referred to Sriramulu v. Ramayya (6) in which it was explained by that learned Hindu lawyer Muttusami Ayyar, J., that the prohibition of the adoption of a half brother has nothing to do with the possibility of a legal marriage between the son and his step mother in her virgin state. There is nothing in the present case to indicate that Brijlal could not have married the woman who married Gangju and became the mother of Mardan. That Mardan was much younger than Brijlal appears from Mardan's statement in 1828 (Exhibit P. 1). So far as his age then is concerned, there is nothing incongurous in the adoption. It is also clear that the express prohibitions laid down by Nanda Pandita in Placitum 107, Section II, Dattaka Mimansa, do not, include the paternal great grandfather's great-grandson. On the other hand, there is direct authority in Yamnava Govind Appaji v. Laxuman Bhimrao Kulkarni (7) in favour of adopting the son of the mother's brother and Nanada Pandita was there held to have intended that anybody could be adopted, so long as he was not within the cases specified as prohibited. In Walbai v. Heerbai (8) the adoption of a father's brother's son was treated as clearly valid. I may also refer to Ramkrishna Gopal

(6) 3 M. 15; 1 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 566.
(8) 4 Ind Cas. 277; 34 B. 491; 11 Bom. L. R. 1172.

v. Chimnaji Vyankatesh (9)in which two Judges of the Bombay High Court, following Yamnava Govind Appaji v. Laxaman Bhimrao Kulkarni (7) (above cited), upheld the adoption of a father's sister's son. In Virayya v. Hanumanta (10), one of the cases relied upon by the lower Court, the adoption of a paternal uncle's son was upheld.

The law being in favour of Mardan's adoption and his age having been suitable, I am unable to see that there was any improbability in the case set up for the plaintiffs.

In the 11th ground of appeal objection is taken to the lower Court's conclusion from the behaviour of Gangju as described in Exhibit P.-1 that Mardan's adoption was acquiesced in by the members of the family. It is urged that acquiescence which can properly be treated as evidence of an adoption should be shown to have extended over a number of years. This argument is sufficiently met by the circumstances already set out in which the pedigree of the family was prepared at the Settlement of 1864. The alleged adoption had taken place between 60 and 70 years back and it was admitted by the members of the family who set up claims to be recognised as proprietors of the village. It is not to the point that Mardan's claim to hold 15 bighas of land free of revenue was rejected.

My conclusion then is that the adoption of Mardan by Brijlal is satisfactorily established.

It is unnecessary to consider the documents which the plaintiff respondent, Bhawani Prasad, moved this Court to admit and consider although they had been rejected by the lower Court as filed too late. I may, however, say that the respondent's affidavit shows that he knew of the existence of the originals before he brought to the notice of the lower Court the fact that they supported his case and that he wished to file copies.

It remains to deal with the allegation in the last ground of appeal that the schedule of costs as drawn up by the lower Court is not correct. The plaintiffs' claim included a half share in an ordinary holding and an occupancy holding and a half share in a large house. The claim to the share in the ordinary and occupancy holdings has been disallowed. The house is number 4 of the 5 in which a share was claimed and the appellant who was said to be in possession pleaded that the person actually in possession was Bala Prasad who was thereupon joined as the fourth defendant. On Bala Prasad's defence the fifth issue was framed on which the lower Court found that a portion only of that house belonged to Janki, the name of this portion being "Bhula." Accordidgly, the plaintiffs were given a decree against Bala Prasad for possession of one-half of "Bhula." The value of the entire house was found on a preliminary issue to be Rs 2,000, but the value of the portion called "Bhula" has not been separately ascertained.

The plaintiffs have been allowed all their costs except a sum of Rs. 20 for Court fees and Rs. 10-3 0 for Pleader's fee and it is impossible to understand how these figures have been reached.

It is clear that the decree does not correctly give effect to the order in the judgment that the defendants are to bear the plaintiffs' costs in proportion to the relief granted to the plaintiffs. The decree must be modified so as to disallow as much of the Court-fee and Pleader's fee scheduled for the plaintiffs as corresponds to the value of a half share in the ordinary and occupancy holdings and a half share in that part of the fourth house which is called "Bhula." What these values are will be ascertained by the lower Court which will then amend its decree accordingly.

The appeal is dismissed. The appellant having failed on the principal question and succeeded only on the trivial matter of costs he will pay the costs in this Court of the plaintiff-respondent, Bhawani Prasad.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara as interpreted in Berar—Power of undivided co-sharer to sell—Severance of estate how effected—Agreement to divide, effect of.

According to the law of Mitakshara, as interpreted in Berar, an undivided co-sharer can sell his share in joint family property without the consent of his co-owners [p. 574, col. 1.]

In the case of a joint Hindu family, subject to the law of Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately, even though no actual division takes place, and the commencement of a suit for partition is sufficient to effect a severance in interest even before decree. So also is a claim by one member of a co-parcenary for his share followed by an agreement under which all the members appoint an arbitrator to divide their property and agree to accept whatever partition he might make. Privy Council Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, reversing that of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal by the defendant in the suit against the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, reversing a decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, and giving judgment for the plaintiffs.

Nain Singh and the plaintiffs, who were the issues of his brother Khannu Singh, formed at one time a joint Hindu family, resident in Berar and subject to the law of the Mitakshara as there interpreted. Before the date of the deed next mentioned, Nain Singh and the plaintiffs had become separate in mess and residence, but not in estate.

By registered sale-deed, dated the 29th September 1902, Nain Singh sold his half share of the ancestral property of the family (with some moveable property) to Syed Kasam for Rs. 20,000 of which Rs. 15,000 were admitted by the vendor to have been received in advance, and the remaining Rs. 5,000 were paid to him in the presence of the Registering Officer. No partition was then effected, but the purchaser was allowed to hold and cultivate certain parts of the property corresponding in value to a half share. On the 4th December, 1905, all the members of the family signed a kararanama appointing one Ghasi Ram as arbitrator to partition the property and agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make The arbitrator divided the property into two lists, one (representing the remaining moiety in value) containing the property to be allotted to the plaintiffs. The latter list was apparently divided into three sub-lists one for each of the plaintiffs. These lists were handed to Nain Singh. The formal division was not at once carried out, as Nain Singh died on the 26th March 1906, but after his death the lists appear to have been acted upon by all the persons interested, as the purchaser was put into possession of the property allotted by the arbitrator to Nain Singh, and the plaintiffs from time to time dealt with various parts of the lands contained in heir lists.

On the 23rd July 1914 the plaintiffs brought the present suit against Syed Kasam claiming possession of the lands of which he had been so put into possession on the ground that the family had continued joint in estate down to the death of Nain Singh, and that on the death of Nain Singh's widow (which occurred on the 10th July 1910) the property had passed to them. They also alleged that the half share had been sold by Nain Singh to the defendant "for a bogus consideration of Rs. 20,000," an expression which has no legal signification, but which apparently meant that the consideration of Rs. 20,000 had not in fact been paid.

The suit was heard by the Additional District Judge, East Berar, who dismissed it, holding that there had been an effective agreement for partition, and that the Rs. 20,000 had been paid. On appeal, the Additional Judicial Commissioner held that there had been no partition, and that although Rs. 5,000, part of the purchase money, had been paid before the Registering Officer, the balance of Rs. 15,000 had not been paid, or, if paid, had been at once returned. He declined to admit the plea that the kararnama effected a severance of the joint tenancy on the ground that this had not been specifically pleaded. He, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and directed the defendant to put the plaintiffs in possession of the property in suit on payment by the plaintiffs of Rs. 5,000. Against this decree the present appeal was brought. The original appellant, Syed Kasam, has died pending the appeal, and is represented by the present appellants.

Two points are taken on behalf of the appellants: First, it is said that the law of the Mitakshara is to be interpreted in Berar in the same manner as in Bombay, and that, according to that law as so interpreted Nain Singh had power to sell his undivided share in the joint family property without the consent of his co-owners; and their Lordships do not doubt that this statement is correct. But to this point it was answered by the Judicial Commissioner that the sale by Nain Singh in 1902 only gave to the purchaser an equity to enforce a partition, and that such equity was displaced by the fact that the purchase money was not fully paid. In view of their Lordships' opinion on the second question, to be hereafter stated, and of the fact that the evidence on the question of the payment of Rs. 15,000 was not fully brought to their notice, they do not think it necessary to deal with this point; nor do they express any opinion on the question whether, even if it was proved that part only of the purchase-money was paid, the form of decree adopted by the Judicial Commissioner was appropriate to the case.

But, secondly, it is argued on behalf of the appellants that the transactions which took place in the year of 1905 effected a severance of the joint estate and accordingly the plaintiffs have no right to sue, and in their Lordships' opinion this argument should prevail.

It is settled law that in the case of a joint Hindu family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately, even though no actual division takes place, and the commencement of a suit for partition has been held to be sufficient to effect a severance in interest even before decree [see Apcovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (1), Joy Narain Giri v. Girish Chunder Myti (2), Gir.a Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (3), Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (4).]

In the present case it was proved by the evidence of one of the plaintiffs (Jorawar Singh) and of Ghasi Ram that Nain Singh claimed his half share of the ancestral property, and that after discussion all the joint holders signed the agreement of the 4th December 1905 appointing Ghasi Ram to partition the property and agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make; and this claim and agreement were quite sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of Nain Singh from passing by survivorship. It is true that the agreement was not specifically pleaded by the defendant Syed Kasam; but he pleaded that Nain Singh was separate in estate and relied in his written statement on the division of the property which resulted from the agreement, and their Lordships do not think that the agreement leading up to that division can be put out of account. The subsequent division of the property between the co-owners was accepted by all parties and is not said to have been unfair, and there appears to be no reason why it should be disturbed. In these circumstances the sale to Syed Kasam could not be set aside at the instance of the joint owners, but only (if at all) at that of the vendor or his representatives; and any proceedings for that purpose were Statute barred before the commencement of the suit. This is sufficient to dispose of the plaintiffs' claim.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside and the decree of the District Judge restored, and that the respondents should pay the costs in both the Courts below and the costs of the present appeal.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 10th July 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 3rd March 1920.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of dismissal made on an application for execution of a decree against a surety. The decree was made by this Court on the 23rd January 1917 in a first appeal in a suit valued at more than Rs. 5,000. It is plain that an appeal against an order in execution of such a decree lies not to the District Judge but to this Court. The order of the Subordinate Judge was made on the 3rd March 1920, and an appeal was presented to the District Court on the 1st April 1920. The District Judge dismissed the appeal on the 10th July 1920. Thereupon the present appeal was lodged in this Court on the 11th September 1920 against the order of the District Judge whereby he had affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge. No preliminary objection was taken to the appeal presented to the District Judge and nobody discovered that the appeal was incompetent. Indeed, in this Court also, the point was not mentioned till the respondent was called upon to answer the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant. It is plain that the order of the District Judge was made without jurisdiction and that this Court must now set aside that order and substitute therefor the order which should have been made by the District Judge, namely, an order that the memorandum of appeal presented to the District Judge be returned to the appellant for presentation to this Court. This is the course which was adopted in Ranjit Missir v. Ramudar Singh (1). There is this difference, however, between that case and the present, namely, that there the lower Appellate Court had modified the order of the primary Court, while here the lower Appellate Court has affirmed the order of the Court of first instance. This circumstance, however, does not affect the position, and the learned Vakil for the appellant has suggested that, as the memorandum of appeal presented in the Court of the District Judge is now in this Court, it may be taken to have been presented here after its return by an order of this Court. This, we think, is reasonable. The memorandum of appeal will, therefore, be taken to have been presented to this Court on this day and an endorsement to that effect will be made on the memorandum by the Registrar.

No question of Court-fees arises; but we have to consider the question of limitation. It is, we think, sufficiently obvious that this is a fit case for the exercise of our discretion under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. It has been ruled that in the exercise of that discretion in regard to an appeal, the Court may well be guided by the provisions of section 14, which does not in terms apply to appeals, because appeals are governed by section 5 which has a manifestly wider scope. This view was adopted by this Court in the cases of Ardha Chandra Roi v. Matangini Dassi(2) and Balaram Bhramaratar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra (3). A similar view was adopted by the Bombay High Court in Dadabhai Jamsetji v. Maneksha Sorabji (4), by the Madras High Court in Gopisetti Narainswami Naidu Garu v. Tallanraju Venkatasubbarayudu (5) and by the Allahabad High Court in Madhuban Das v. Narain Das (6) and Narain Singh v. Bikram Singh (7). If the period between the presentation of the appeal in the Court of the District Judge and the order for return made by this Court be deducted, the appeal now lodged in this Court is within time. The proper course to follow in these circumstances is that stated in Ranjit Missir v. Ramudar Singh (1), namely, to allow the appeal, to discharge the order of the District Judge, to record on the memorandum of appeal presented to that Court an order of return for presentation to the proper Court to be signed by the Registrar and finally to regard the memorandum as presented in this Court on this day. The memorandum will now be registered as an appeal from an original order against the order of the Subordinate Judge passed on the 3rd March 1920, and, in the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, we hold that the appeal so registered is in time. The paper-book will be prepared and the appeal heard in due course as a first appeal. We order accordingly.

As the objection to jurisdiction was not raised in the Court of the District Judge and as the point was not taken in this Court till a late stage of the argument, we direct each party to pay his own costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

The appellant will file a vakalatnama in support of the appeal now lodged in this Court.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, proviso—Person in joint possession with another—Declaratory suit that other person has lost his interest in property, whether maintainable.

A person in joint possession with another cannot sue for a mere declaration that the other person has lost his interest in the property and is not entitled to remain in possession because in such a case the plaintiff can and should sue for exclusive possession [p. 577, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 2nd November 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated 15th February 1917.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit giving rise to this appeal Jodha, son of Wazira, sought to obtain a declaration to the effect that, owing to her unchastity the defendant, Musammat Shankri, widow of Nawab, had lost her life estate in 187 kanals 2 marlas of land, and, therefore, was not entitled to retain possession thereof. The Courts below have held that the plaintiff being in joint possession was entitled to bring a declaratory suit. They also held that the defendant had become unchaste and the plaintiff was awarded a decree for the declaration prayed for.

Musammat Shankri has now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, and it has been contended that the appellant is in sole possession of about 23 kanals of the land in suit and in joint possession of the rest. On the authority of Abdul Ghafur v Mehr un nissa (1), Mr. Dev Raj contended that the suit for a declaration did not lie In this view we agree. The plaintiff who is in joint possession of a greater portion of this land could and should sue for exclusive possession if his allegations as to Musammat Shankri's unchastity are correct It is clear that the object of his suit is to dispossess Musammat Shankri of the land of which she is in sole possession and that of which she is in joint possession with him. Mr. Qureshi, on behalf of the respondent, urged that he should be allowed to amend his plaint at this stage As, however, this point was raised by the defendant from the very outset, we do not think we would be justified in allowing the amendment prayed for at this late stage of the proceedings. We would note that the judgment of the learned District Judge is unsatisfactory inasmuch as neither of the points raised before him have been discussed. He appears to have accepted the conclusions arrived at by the Trial Court without any independent examination of the evidence or the law.

KALIDASI DASI—RESPONDENT.

Parda-nashin lady, transactions with—Principles applicable—Persons standing in relation of personal confidence—Absolute strangers—Independent and competent advice, what is—Family settlement—Consideration—Pleading Fraud—Variance between pleading and proof—Plaintiff, position of.

All transactions with parda-nashin ladies fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of the transaction is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where such person was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted: in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. The fairness of the bargain is the crucial test [p. 581, col. 1; p. 582, col. .]

The Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a parda-nashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do: secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered: and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. [p. 580, col. 2; p. 581, col. 1.]

Mariam Bibee v. Muhammad Ibrahim, 48 Ind. Cas 561; 28 C. L. J. 303 at p. 367, referred to.

(Case-law considered.)

The circumstances under which a parda-nashin woman agrees to transfer property in which she is interested must be carefully examined in order to ascertain that she had independent advice and that the lady had sufficient intelligence to understand the relevant and important matters, that she did understand them as they were explained to her, that nothing was concealed, and that there was no undue influence or misrepesentation. [p. 582, col. 2.]

It is not necessary to insist upon a test which depends upon a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in legal technicalities; it is sufficient that the general result of the transaction should be understood and that people disinterested and competent to give advice should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise the lady. [p. 588, col. 1.]

Independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval; it simply means that the advice should be removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere, and that from the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interest, the party acting should know precisely the nature and consequences of the transaction. [p. 587, col. 2.]

The absence of advice would not by itself necessarily vitiate a transaction, if it is otherwise established to be righteous, that is, such as a right-minded person might be expected to do. [p. 588, col. 2.]

The Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself. [p. 582, col. 2.]

The above are only general principles. There is a great fear of failure of justice, if they are moulded into inelastic formulas or crystallised into inflexible rules and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special facts and surrounding circumstances of the concrete case requiring adjudication. [p 583, col. 1.]

Whenever any person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, overreaching, undue influence or unconscionable advantage. [p. 583, col. 2.]

If a confidence is reposed and that confidence is abused, Courts of Equity will grant relief .Equity demands in such circumstances the most abundant good faith uberrima fides) in the transaction between the parties. There need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed; if there is any concealment of a material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, equity will interpose and pronounce the transaction void and, as far as possible, restore the parties to their original right. [p. 583, col. 2.]

Although in a deed of family settlement the Court should not scan with much nicety the quantum of consideration, yet to make the compromise of any value the parties must be at arm's length, on equal terms, with equal knowledge and with sufficient advice and protection. [p. 589, cols. 1 & 2.]

A family arrangement to be operative must be without fraud it would not be supported if founded on mistake of either party to which the opposite party was an accessory, or if either party has been misled by the concealment of material things, for the essence of the matter is mutual communication of all relevant circumstances. [p. 589, col. 2.]

(Case-law considered.)

The determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made [p 592, col 2.]

Every variance between pleadings and proof is not fatal: the Court must carefully consider whether the objection is one of form or of substance. [p. 590, col. 2; p 591, col. 1.]

When a plaintiff impeaches a transaction on the ground of fraud, the facts which constitute the alleged fraud must be distinctly, specifically and accurately stated; for, it is only fair play between man and man that the defendant should know what is charged against him. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it. [p 590, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Buckland, J.—In a case of fraud, it will not suffice to find fraud otherwise than as alleged on behalf of the plaintiff, and even should the Court find that fraud was practised, if such fraud is other than the fraud alleged, the defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed. This is a proposition which may be applicable in cases between man and man or where a parda-nashin lady is not concerned But where a parda-nashin lady is involved, other rules have to be applied and conformity with them has to be established. [p. 592, col. 2; p. 593, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 15th July 1919.

Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons (Advocate-General), Babu Jogendra Nath Mookerjee, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Tarak Nath Mookerjee, for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, Babus Manindra Nath Banerjee, Narendra Krishna Bosu and Rama Prosad Mookerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in the present appeal is an estate of considerable value left by one Kedar Nath Ghose who died intestate on the 7th October 1905. The foundation of the fortune of the family was laid by his father, Govinda Chandra Ghosh, who executed a Will on the 21st August 1905 which was registered, but was not probated after his death on the 9th November 1913. The relationship of the members of the joint family composed of the descendants of

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH v. KALIDASI DASI.

Govinda Chandra Ghose will appear from the following genealogical table:

Govinda Chandra Ghosh had four sons, Ambika Charan and Moti Lal who died in his lifetime, and Kedar Nath and Satis Chandra who survived him. When Kedar Nath died, he left him surviving his brother, Satis Chandra, his widow Kalidasi, his widowed daughters Nalinibala and Chinabala, and two granddaughters, Radharani and Umasasi. The widow, Kalidasi, had two brothers Kamini and Rajkumar, and was the daughter of a family of Deotis whose genealogical table is set out below:

KEDAR NATH DEOTI.

Kamini.	Kalidasi, plaintiff.	Rajkumar.

Shortly after the death of Kedar Nath Ghose, a partition deed was executed on the 4th November 1915 between his brother Satis Chandra and his widow Kalidasi, and the document was registered on the 8th December 1915. On the 28th June 1916 the widow instituted the present suit for cancellation of the partition deed on the ground of fraud and unfairness, for declaration of exclusive title to a hardware business, its assets and the properties acquired from its income, for declaration of joint title to other properties, for partition and accounts, and for incidental reliefs. The defendant denied all the material allegations in the plaint, repelled the imputation that the partition deed had not been fairly obtained, asserted that the properties claimed as exclusively owned by the husband of the plaintiff really formed part of the joint family estate, and repudiated all liability to render accounts. On these pleadings, the following issues were framed and set down for trial:

1. Has the plaintiff any cause of action?
2. Can the suit proceed without ad valorem Court fees being paid on the value of the entire properties in suit?
3. Is the suit bad for non-joinder of parties?
4. Was the deed dated the 4th November 1915 read over and explained to the plaintiff and was it understood by her? Was it executed by her with free will and consent? Or was it obtained from her by fraud as alleged in the plaint?
5. Was Kedar Nath Ghose the sole owner of the Karbar at 78, Clive Street, Calcutta? Or, did it belong to his father Govinda Chandra Ghose, and was inherited, on his death by his two sons Kedar and Satis? Was it their joint property?
6. Was the house at Benares the joint property of Kedar and Satis? What is the plaintiff's share in it?
7. Did the plaintiff's husband purchase the garden at North Bantra from the widow of Bellilios in benami of the defendant?
8. Is the suit barred by the principles of estoppel, acquiescense and waiver?
9. Was the manufactory at Bantra an independent Karbar? Or, did it form one Karbar with the Karbar at 78, Clive Street?
10. Is the defendant liable to render accounts of the Karbar at Bantra and of the Karbar at 78, Clive Street? If so, for what period.

After a protracted trial, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part. He held on the fourth and eighth issues that the deed had been executed by the plaintiff under circumstances which made it inoperative against her as an illiterate parda nashin lady, and that there was no question of estoppel, acquiescence or waiver. He also held, upon the fifth, sixth, seventh and ninth issues, that the hardware business at 78, Olive Street which stood in the name of Kedar Nath Ghose was an ancestral joint family concern, that the smithy and manufactory in the family dwelling house at South Bantra in the District of Howrah was not an independent business, that the lands and houses in Calcutta and Benares had been acquired with joint funds and formed part of the family estate, and that the garden at North Bantra purchased from Bellilios must be included in the same category. He further held, on the tenth issue, that the defendant, who was in charge of the business at 78, Clive Street and at South Bantra, was bound to render accounts from the date of the death of Kedar Nath Ghose. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge has set aside the partition deed, declared that all the properties in suit were jointly owned and possessed in equal shares by Kedar Nath Ghose and Satis Chandra Ghosh, and directed partition and accounts; he has also ordered the parties to bear their respective costs. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant is satisfied with this decision, as the latter has appealed and the former has preferred a memorandum of cross-objections. The substantial question argued on the appeal relates to the validity of the partition deed; the principal point raised in the memorandum of cross-objections refers to the true character of the properties claimed by the plaintiff as the separate acquisitions of her husband. Neither the memorandum of appeal nor the memorandum of cross objections bore adequate Court-fees, and the Court was called upon to decide the point during the course of the arguments. Each memorandum bore a Court fee of Re. 10 only; this was plainly inadequate. The defendant-appellant had obviously anticipated the objection and had made a note on his memorandum at the time of presentation to the following effect: "The suit was valued at Rs. 1,21,360. The appeal is for a declaration." This note must have been recorded in view of clause 17 (iii) of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, which provides that the plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed must bear a Court-fee of Rs. 10. But the plaint in the present case was unquestionably not a plaint in a suit of this description and bore a Court-fee of Rs 1,187-8-0. The memorandum of appeal also could not be treated as a memorandum in a suit of that nature; indeed, the appeal itself was not in essence for a pure declaration. The Trial Court had cancelled the partition deed, had determined the question of title to the properties, had directed partition of all the properties in suit, and had rendered the defendant liable for accounts. An appeal directed against a decree so comprehensive in scope, can, by no stretch of language or recourse to legal fiction, be described as an appeal for a declaration, even if we were to assume that an appeal, which really seeks nothing beyond a declaration, in a suit other than a suit for a pure declaratory decree without consequential relief, was ever intended to be included within clause 17 (iii) of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870. Similar remarks were applicable to the memorandum of cross-objections. The appellant and respondent were consequently called upon to value the reliefs sought in the appeal and by way of cross objections, respectively. It is not necessary to set out the details of the calculations made for the purpose of valuation; suffice to state that, as a result of this investigation, it was found that the appellant and respondent were liable to pay Rs. 1,105 and Rs. 25 respectively, as deficit Court fees on the memorandum of appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections. It was also found that the fee paid ad valorem on the plaint in the Court below was insufficient and that an additional sum of Rs. 145 was leviable on that account from the plaintiff respondent. The appellant duly paid the deficit Court-fee and thus regularised the memorandum of appeal. The plaintiff-respondent paid the additional sum leviable on the plaint but not the deficit Court-fees required to validate the memorandum of cross objections. There is consequently, no valid cross-objection which may be considered by the Court, and the memorandum must be rejected. The arguments on both sides have thus centered round what is the root question in this case, namely, the validity of the partition deed taken by the appellant from the respondent. Before, however, we investigate the circumstances which led up to the execution of the deed, we may usefully re-call the well-established cardinal principles now recognised as applicable to a case of this description, where the Court is called upon to throw a protective cloak upon a parda nashin woman who is unable to protect herself.

It is well-settled that the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a parda-nashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorized by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. The leading judicial decisions which recognise these principales are collected in the judgment of this Court in Mariam Bibee v. Muhammad Ibrahim (1), and on examination they will be found to fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. This is a fundamental distinction which does not appear to have been always kept in view, with the result that observations made in the one class of cases have been applied without scrutiny to the other class of cases. Illustrations of the confusion which has resulted from this failure to discriminate between the two classes of cases, are furnished by the decisions in Ranee Usmut Koowar v. Tayler (2), Tayler v. Ranee Asmedh Koonwar (3), Soondur Koomaree v. Kishoree Lal (4), Ram Pershad v. Ranee Phoolputtee(5), Kanai Lal v. Kanini Debi (6), Manohar Das v. Bhagbati Dasi (7), Asmutoonissa Bebee v. Alla Hafiz (8), Roop Narain Singh v. Gugadhur Pershad Narain(9), annalal seal v. Srimati Bamsundari Dasi(10), Dooles Chand v. Oomda Khanum(11), Bibee Rukhun v. Shaikh Ahmed Hossein (12), Khas Mehal v. Administrator-General of Bengal (13); Nistarini Dasi v. Nundo Lall(14), Keshab Lal v. Radha Raman (15), Badiatannessa Bibi v. Ambica Charan Ghose (16), Bhuban Mohini Dasi v. Gajalakshmi Debi (17), Behari Lal v. Habiba Bibi (18), Achhan Kuar v. Thakur Das (19), Hakim Muhammad v. Nanbin (20), Sumsuddin Goolam Husein v. Abdul Husein (21), Tamarasherri Sivithri v. Maranat Vasudevan (22), Mahadevi v. Neelamani (23), Latchemy v Lewcock (24), Ohellummal v. Garrow 25), Narsummall v. Lutchmana (26). Reference may also be made in this connection to the two decisions of the Judicial Committee in Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (27) and Geresh Chunder Lahoree v. Musammat Bhuggobutty Debia (28). In the former case, where the transaction was between a husband and a wife, their Lordships observed that the burden of proving the reality and bona fides of the purchases pleaded by her husband was properly thrown on him. In the latter case, which was one of a death-bed gift in favour of the donor's brothers in their wives' names to the exclusion of her husband's adopted son, their Lordships pointed out that the Judicial Committee and the Courts in India had always been careful to see that deeds taken from parda women had been fairly taken and that the party executing them had been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The substance of the matter then is that the fairness of the bargain is the crucial test. This principle runs through the later decisions of the Judicial Committee, though the rule is more specially enforced in cases where a fiduciary relation involving trust and confidence is shown to exist; Syud Fuzzul Hossein v. Amjud Ali Khan (29), Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum (30), on appeal from Delroos Banoo Begum v. Nawab Syud Ashgar Ally Khan (3), Azeezunnissa v. Baqur Khan (32), Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Nowab Syed Ali Horsein Khan (33), Sudisht Lal v. Musammat Sheobarat Koer (34), Mohomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseni Bibi (35), Amarnath Sah v. Achan Kuar (36), Deo Kuar v. Man Kuar (37), Hakim Muhammad v. Najiban (20), Annoda Mohan Rai v. Bhuban Mohini Debi (38), Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi (39), Ismail Moosajee Mookerdam v. Hafiz Boo (40), Kishori Lal v. Ohuni Lal (41), Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (42), Sajjad Husain v. Abid Husain Khan (43), Kali Bokhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (44), Mahabir Prasad v. Taj Begam (45), Azima Bibi v. Shamalanand (46), Mohammad Ali v. Ramzan Ali (47), Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi (48), Mati Lal Das v. Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. Limited (49). The essence of the matter was tersely put by Lord Buckmaster in Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi (48) when he stated that the circumstances under which a parda-nashin woman agrees to transfer property in which she is interested must be carefully examined, in order to ascertain that she had independent advice and that the lady had sufficient intelligence to understand the relevant and important matters, that she did understand them as they were explained to her, that nothing was concealed and that there was no undue influence or misrepresentation. The principle thus enunciated was adopted as the basis of the judgment pronounced by Sir John Edge in Mati Lal Das v. Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. Limited (49). It will be observed that the Court must thus have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself; Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi (48), Mati Lal Das v. Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. Limited (49), Mohammad Ali v. Ramzan Ali

These, however, are only general principles, and it cannot be too strongly emphasised that there is a grave risk of failure of justice, if they are moulded into inelastic formulas or crystallised into inflexible rules, and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special facts and surrounding circumstances of the concrete case which requires adjudication.

The case before us belongs to the first class mentioned above, where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stands towards her in a relation of personal confidence. Here, he is the younger brother of her husband. The two brothers had lived jointly in amity, and Kalidasi who was some years older than Satis, was on the best of terms with her brother-in-law On the death of her husband, Satis, though younger in age, became ipso facto the head of the joint family, she would thenceforth have to live under his care, look upon him as his natural protector and continue to repose confidence in him properly to safeguard her rights This position is in absolute conformity with the normal structure of a joint Hindu family and is recognised by ancient texts of Hindu Law, such as the text of Narada XIII, 28, 29 cited by Jimutavahana in his Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section 1, paragraph 64, which provides that when the husband is deceased, his kin is the guardian of his childless widow, and it is only when the husband's family becomes extinct or contains no male or is helpless that the kins of her own father are entitled to be her guardians. This is not archaic and obsolete law, but has been recognised in modern decisions: Khudiram Mookerjee v. Bonwari Lal Roy (53). In such circumstances, the principle formulated in section 111 of the Indian Evidence Act applies, viz., that where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. It is an elementary principle that whenever any person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, overreaching, undue influence, or unconscionable advantage (Story on Equity Jurisprudence, section 308-323, referred to in Taylor on Evidence, section. 151). As Story puts it, Courts of Equity do not arrest or set aside an act or contract merely because a man of more honour would not have entered into it; there must be some relation between the parties which compels the one to make a full discovery to the other or to abstain from all selfish projects. But when such a relation does exist, Courts of Equity, acting upon this superinduced ground, in aid of general morals, will not suffer one party, standing in a situation of which he can avail himself against the other, to derive advantage from that circumstance, for it is founded in a breach of confidence. The general principle which governs in all cases of this sort is that if a confidence is reposed and that confidence is abused, Courts of Equity will grant relief. Equity demands in such circumstances the most abundant good faith (uberrima fides) in the transaction between the parties. There need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed; if there is any concealment of a material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, equity will interpose and pronounce the transaction void and as far as possible restore the parties to their original right. Baker v. Bradley (54), Bank of Montreal v. Stuart (55),

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH V. KALIDASI DASI.

Coomber, In re, Coomber v. Coomber (56). We must not lose sight, however, of the fact that the question is one of substance and not merely one of burden of proof, and where, as in the present case, evidence has been addduced by both the contestants in support of their respective cases and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof is immaterial, and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; see the observations of Viscount Haldane in Kundan Lal v. Begam-un nisa (57) and of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Gounden (58). We must now determine, how the case before us stands when tested in the light of these principles.

Kedar Nath Ghose, as previously stated, died on the 7th October 1915. The partition deed now in controversy was executed on the 4th November 1915, that is, as the Subordinate Judge points out, twenty-seven days after the death of Kedar Nath Ghose and three days before his Sradh ceremony had been performed; but the deed was based on a draft which had been prepared ten days earlier, on the 25th October, when the parties were about the middle of the period of mourning. The provisions of the partition deed have been correctly summarised by the Subordinate Judge. The document recites that the hardware business at 78, Civil Street as well as the house at Benares belonged jointly to Kedar Nath and Satis Chandra in equal shares and that the widow gave up her claim to those properties as also to the remainder of the joint estate, in consideration of the benefits granted to her, which may be enumerated as follows: (a) Kalidasi would become absolute owner of the house at Benares as also the house at Howrah, No. 8, Kaliprasad Chakrabarti Lane; (b) that Satis would pay to Kalidasi Rs. 20,000 by annual instalments of Rs. 2,000 each, the entire sum to be charged on the ancestral dwelling house at 3 and 4 Kaliprasad Chakrabarti Lane; (c) that Satis would pay, within three months from the date of execution of the deed, Rs. 2,000, to Nalinibala and Rs. 4,000 to Chinabala; (d) that Satis would pay Rs. 2,500 on the occasion of the marriage of each of the two daughters of Chinabala, named Radharani and Umasasi; and (e) that Satis would maintain Kalidasi, her two daughters and the granddaughter, in the family dwelling house, and if Kalidasi should live apart Satis would pay her Rs. 10 per month for her maintenance and after her death Rs. 10 per month for the maintenance of her two daughters Nalinibala, and Chinabala. The deed recites on the face of it that this distribution of the family estate gave effect to the intentions of Kedar Nath Ghose as expressed immediately before his death. The case for the plaintiff is that this allegation, which goes to the root of the entire transaction, is unfounded. It is, consequently, necessary to investigate the incidents which actually happened before the death of Kedar Nath Ghose. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that Kedar Nath Ghose did intend to make a testamentary disposition of his properties during his last illness. He gave instructions for the preparation of a draft Will, which was drawn up by one Aghor Nath Maiti. A fair copy was then made by one Akshay Kumar Goosa. The intended Will was, however, never executed; for when the document was taken to Kedar Nath Ghose for signature, it was found that he had lost consciousness. He never regained consciousness and the end came immediately afterwards. While he was on his death-bed, thus lying unconscious, a discussion took place among the persons present as to what steps might be taken to carry out the projected disposition of the estate. One Badal Chandra Ghose, a Pleader, suggested that after the death of Kedar Nath Ghose, a deed of family arrangement might be executed between Satis Chandra Ghose and Kalidasi, and he forthwith prepared a draft for such a deed. No further steps appear to have been taken for some days after the death of Kedar Nath Ghose, but on the 25th October 1915, the draft of a partition deed was drawn up by one Nilmani Bose and was executed as well by

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH v. KALIDASI DASI.

Kalidasi as by Satis Chandra Ghose. On the basis of this draft, a fair copy was subsequently prepared, and the partition deed in its final form, which is the subject matter of this litigation, was executed on the 4th November 1915. It may be stated here that as Kalidasi was illiterate, her name was at the request of Satis, signed on the draft as well as on the final deed by her daughter Chinabala who, as the evidence shows, is a half crazy girl and herself writes Bengali very imperfectly, as may be seen from an inspection of the original signatures on the record. The draft of the intended Will made by Aghor Nath Maiti, the draft of the partition deed made by Nilmoni Bose, and the partition deed as executed and registered, have been produced; but the fair copy of the intended Will and the draft of the deed of family arrangement prepared by Badal Chandra Ghosh have not been produced; there can be little doubt, as will presently be seen, that they have been designedly withheld by the defendant, because that would have materially weakened his case. The draft of the Will is full of alterations and interlineations; these were not indicated in the paper book placed before the Court, and the hearing had to be adjourned, so that the Court might be supplied with a fresh translation of the deed indicating the draft in its original form as also the various alterations and interlineations. An inspection of the draft in this form makes manifest the vital changes introduced into the deed. This inevitably raises the question, whether the draft in its original form, or the draft as altered, corresponded to the actual instructions given by Kedar Nath Ghose. The Subordinate Judge has held that the draft in its original form contained the instructions given by Kedar Nath Ghose before his death, and that the changes introduced into the draft did not form part of those instructions. I feel no doubt that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct. It is needless to determine, how far the instructions given by Kedar Nath Ghose were voluntary, or how far, in the precarious state of his health, he acted under the influence of his brother. The fact remains that to some at any rate of the persons present the terms seemed ungenerous, and one of them, Asutosh Banerjee, pressed for liberal treatment of his wife and children. Let it be assumed, however, for our present purpose, that the instructions were voluntarily given; these were correctly represented by the contents of the draft as drawn up by Aghor Nath Maiti. The changes in the draft were, in my opinion, no part of the instructions; indeed, it has not been definitely disclosed by the defendant when and by whom the changes were made. It was rather doubtfully suggested that they were in the handwriting of Asutosh Banerjee, who was present in Court at one stage but was not examined. If, now, we compare the draft Will in its original form, as representing the last wishes of Kedar Nath Ghose, with the partition deed in its final form which purports to give effect to those intentions, what is the result? In the original draft Will, we find that Rs 20,000 was to be paid to Kalidasi, in one instalment; in the partition deed, we find that the payment was to be spread over ten years; this accords with the interlineation. Again, according to the original draft Will, Kalidasi was to take an absolute right in the two houses at Benares and Howrah; by the partition deed, a life estate is conferred on Kalidasi and her two daughters; this also accords with the interlineation. There is another significant alteration which cannot be overlooked; wherever in the draft Will, the singular word amar (my) occurred, it has been altered into the plural amader (our). In my opinion there is ample indication that the draft Will was so altered, after the death of Kedar Nath Ghose, that it might serve as a draft for a partition deed to be executed by two persons, namely, Kalidasi and Satis Chandra Ghose. This also explains why the fair copy of the Will made by Akshay Kumar Ghose and the draft deed of family arrangement made in accordance therewith by the Pleader, Badal Chandra Ghosh, have both been withheld; those two documents were in agreement with the draft Will in its original form and if they had been produced, they would have completely demolished the theory that the draft Will with alterations represented the last intentions of Kedar Nath Ghose. This fits in further with the significant circumstance, emphasised by the Subordinate Judge, that the intended Will of Kedar Nath Ghose was never shown to the plaintiff. We may also observe that the partition deed in its final form departs, in at least one particular, from its draft which also contains alterations and interlineations, namely, that the maintenance for Kalidasi and her two daughters at Rs. 20 per month is reduced to Rs. 10 for herself and nothing for her daughters until her death. There is no explanation on whose authority, the alteration in the draft deed of partition was made by Nilmoni Bose who has not been examined on the plea of absence at Waltair. In my view, there is no escape from the conclusion that the partition deed, as executed, departs in very material particulars from the true intentions of Kedar Nath Ghose as expressed shortly before his death, and that as the assent of Kalidasi thereto was secured on the untrue representation that its provisions carried out the last wishes of her husband the deed was in essence obtained from her by false pretences and must on this ground alone be set aside. But there are other grounds equally weighty, which destroy the operative character of the deed.

The schedule to the partition deed sets out the values of the properties. The Subordinate Judge has held it conclusively proved, by local investigation and the other evidence adduced in the case, that the properties reserved for Satis were grossly undervalued, while the two houses given to the plaintiff were overruled. This conclusion of the Subordinate Judge is amply sustained by the evidence, and he is undoubtedly right in his view that the properties taken by Satis are the cream of the estate while those assigned to the plaintiff are the worst of all. It is farther important to note that inasmuch as Satis takes under the deed the entire joint estate, with the exception of what is expressly given to Kalidasi, it is an obviously damaging circumstance that some valuable properties are not mentioned at all in this deed of partition. Upon the question of undervaluation, the most flagrant instance is the value of the stock-in-trade of the hardware business and the workshop appurtenant thereto, which is stated in the schedule to the deed to be only Rs. 31,000, but is now shown to be at least Rs. 60,442. Another instance, equally striking, is that of premises 10 and 12, Reja Woodmunt Street and 77-2 Olive Street which are described as worth Rs. 1,001 only; this ignores what was well known to Satis, namely, that the price had been fixed at Rs. 20,000 and that Kedar had paid Rs. 15,000 in part payment to the vendor to satisfy a mortgage on the property. A third instance, in no way less impressive, is that of the ancestral dwelling house which was valued Rs. 21,000, but has now been found to be worth Rs. 35,746. It is significant that all these instances of undervaluation relate to properties taken by Satis; on the other hand, the value of what has been assigned to Kalidasi has been demonstrated to be in fact much less than the estimated amount. As an instance of total omission, mention may be made of an incident which is by no means creditable to Satis. It appears, that after the death of Kedar, he signed the name of Kedar and on the 18th October 1915 withdrew from the National Bank of India, a sum of Rs. 11,200 which stood in the name of Kedar, and deposited the sum in his own name in the Mercantile Bank of India. No mention was made of this amount in the partition deed. In the face of these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that the defendant observed that "utmost degree of good faith" which his sister in-law was entitled to expect from him in his dealings with her, on well-recognised equitable principles. This by itself would manifestly justify the cancellation of the deed.

But it has been strenuously argued by the defendant that the lady had the benefit of independent advice and cannot consequently impeach the transaction. In my opinion, there is no solid foundation for this contention. There is no satisfactory evidence to show that Rajkumar Dasti, the brother of Kalidasi, did in fact advise her in this matter, or was able and willing to give her the requisite assistance. To enable us to appreciate the situation of the parties at the time, the successive events may be conveniently set out in chronological order:

7th October 1915—Kedar Nath Ghose died.

25th October 1915—Draft partition deed signed.

4th November 1915—Partition deed executed.

6th November 1915—Sradh ceremony of Kedar Nath Ghose performed.

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH v. KALIDASI DASI.

22nd November 1915—Rajkumar borrowed Rs. 1,001 from Satis.

8th December 1915—Partition deed registered.

23rd January 1916—Rajkumar took certified copy of partition deed from Registration Office.

26th January 1916—Rajkumar borrowed Rs. 2,000, from Satis.

31st January 1916—Kalidasi applied for Succession Certificate in respect of Insurance Policy on life of her husband (not included in partition deed).

23rd February 1916—Kalidasi applied to include in Succession Certificate G. P. Notes for Rs. 7,500 (not mentioned in partition deed).

11th March 1916—Proposed supplementary deed of family settlement drawn up by Satis.

8th April 1916—Satis objected to grant of certificate to Kalidasi for G. P. Notes.

10th April 1916—Satis applied for certificate for G. P. Notes.

12th May 1916—Satis sued Rajkumar to recover the sums advanced to him (Suit No. 103 of 1916).

13th May 1916—Properties of Rajkumar attached before judgment at the instance of Satis.

16th May 1916—Rajkumar obtained power-of-attorney from Kalidasi.

20th May 1916—Applications for Succession Certificate made by Satis and Kalidasi heard. Satis produced partition deed. Satis granted certificate for G. P. Notes; Kalidasi granted certificate for Life Insurance Policy.

28th June 1916—Kalidasi instituted present suit.

12th July 1916—Satis appointed Receiver of hardware business.

11th July 1917—Order for grant of certificate to Satis in respect of G. P. Notes set aside on appeal.

It is by no means clear from the evidence on the record that Kalidasi acted under the advice of her brother. Rajkumar was one of the executors named in the Will intended to be executed by Kedar Nath Ghose. He was, no doubt, aware of the terms of the Will, and it is improbable that he should have been a party to variations therefrom to the prejudice of his sister. This is confirmed by the significant fact that as early as 23rd January 1916, Rajkumar took a certified copy of the partition deed from the Registration Office, evidently with a view to take steps to secure to his sister her full rights in the estate left by her husband. It is further remarkable, if Rajkumar was really present throughout and advised his sister, that he should not have read over the deed and explained it to her, become an attesting witness thereto, or even identified her before the Registering Officer. Nor can we overlook the fact that Kamini Kumar, the eldest brother of Kalidasi and Rajkumar, is conspicuous by his absence from the scene. It has, moreover, been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff that Rajkumar was perhaps more anxious to improve his own prospects than to safeguard the interest of his sister. There is no direct evidence to prove this phypothesis; though it must be conceded that the circumstance that Rajkumar was able to borrow Rs. 3,000 from Satis shortly afterwards, is calculated to excite suspicion. On the other hand, it has been suggested on behalf of the defendant that the present suit has been engineered by Rajkumar to wreak his vengeance on Satis who had enforced his claim for recovery of the loan. This theory is not improbable; but even if true, it does not justify the inference that Kalidasi has made an unfounded claim against Satis, who might perhaps have postponed the evil day for a while, if he had been diplomatic enough to keep Rajkumar under obligation for a longer period. I am not unmindful that, as observed by Fletcher Moulton, L. J. in Coomber, In re, Coomber v. Coomber(56), independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval; it simply means that the advice shall be removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and that from the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interest, the party acting should know precisely the nature and consequences of the transaction. I see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that Kalidasi had not the benefit of such independent advice from Rajkumar or any other person. It is, I think, also clear that even if Rajkumar be assumed to have been entirely beyond the sphere of influence of Satis, he was really not able to give the requisite advise. To secure a fair transaction, a full appreciation by the lady of the value and nature of her rights was essential. No doubt, as pointed out by Lord Buckmaster in Sunitabala Debi v Dhara Sundari Debi(48), it is not necessary to insist in such cases upon a test which depends upon a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in legal technicalities; it is sufficient that the general result of the compromise should be understood and that people disinterested and competent to give advise should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise the lady that the deed should be executed. Tested from this point of view, the evidence does not show that Rajkumar himself was fully acquainted with the facts, duly appreciated the effect of the transaction and was able to advise his sister. To mention one aspect only: the deed as executed might well raise the point whether the transaction was a device for division of the estate between a limited owner and a reversioner and whether Satis could validly transfer to Kalidasi, as he did, his reversionary interest in two of the properties, indeed, the question involved was precisely such as required consideration by a lawyer, in view of the recent pronouncements of the Judicial Committee in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (59), Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (60), Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (61), Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshrani Misrain (62), and other cases reviewed in Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (63). Although it may be conceded that, as pointed out in Buchi Ramayya v. Jagapathi (64), the presence of a professional adviser cannot be deemed necessary in every case, the Subordinate Judge has properly commented on the fact that while a Pleader was called to witness the execution of the intended Will of Kedar Nath Ghose and two Pleaders were called to witness the registration of the partition deed, not a single Pleader, not even a competent disinterested person, was called to advise Kalidasi in a matter of such vital moment to her, either at the time when her assent was obtained to the draft partition deed or at the time when the deed was executed. No doubt, as pointed out by Jenkins, C. J. in Keshab Lal v. Radha Raman (15), the absence of advise would not have by itself necessarily vitiated the transaction, if it had been otherwise established to be righteous, that is, such as a right-minded person might be expected to do. All the indications in the present case, however, point to a contrary conclusion; and from this point of view, much weight cannot be attached to the evidence which shows that the draft partition deed was read over and explained to Kalidasi by one Fakir Chand Ghosh, who himself, as is clear from his testimony, did not fully appreciate the nature and effect of the transaction. On the other hand, there is abundant indication that full advantage was taken by Satis of the deeply distressed condition of his sister-in-law, who had shortly before lost both her sons-in law, and had hardly recovered from the shock, when she lost her husband. Before the period of mourning was over, her brother-in law expedited the execution of the deed with what cannot but be characterised as indecent haste. During this period of mourning, arrangements had to be made for the performance of the prescribed ceremonies on a suitable scale. The lady was anxious that the poor of the locality and the adjoining villages should be fed in a proper style. This request, somewhat insistently made, was utilised to put pressure upon her and to make her agree to terms which her brother-in law considered advantageous to himself. This furnishes an illustration of what is felicitously described by Lord Macnaghten in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseni Bibi

(35), as "a subtle form of undue influence." There can be little doubt that Satis himself must have realised that the deed had been taken by him from his sister-in-law under circumstances which made it open to successful attack; this alone affords a plausible explanation of his conduct in the Succession Certificate cases, where he did not set up the partition deed till a very late stage of the proceedings. But weightier than all these circumstances put together, we have the outstanding fact that Satis, on his own initiative, took steps to prepare, at his expense, a supplemental deed of family settlement to rectify to some extent the unfairness of the partition deed he had taken from his sister in law; the attempt, however, came too late. It is difficult to conceive what more convincing proof could have been brought forward to establish the true character of the deed challenged by the plaintiff.

It has finally been urged on the merits that the partition deed was in essence a deed of family settlement and should consequently be supported, even though there were no rights actually in dispute at the time of making it; in such cases as was said in Upendra Nath Bose v. Bindeshri Prosad (65) and Mariam Bibee v Muhammad Ibrahim (1) the Court should not scan with much nicety the quantum of consideration. The principle invoked may be conceded and is, as pointed out in Helan Dasi v. Durga Das Munsal (66) and Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kirpal Banerjee (67), supported not only by the authority of Williams v. Williams (68) and Lucy's case (69) but also by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sri Gajapathi Radhika Patta Maha Devi Garu v. Sri Gajapathi Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (70), Mantappa Madgowda v. Basawantrao Nadgowda (71), Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (72), Greender Chunder Ghose v. Troyluckho Nath Ghose (73), Muhammad Imam Ali Khan v. Husain Khan (74), Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (59). But it is equally well-settled that, as James, L. J., puts it in Moxon v. Payne (75), to make a compromise of any value the parties must be at arm's length, on equal terms, with equal knowledge and with sufficient advice and protection; one side must not know more about the matter than the other, unless what he knows could not possibly have affected the other party's decision: Gilbert v. Endean (76), Maynard v Eaton (77). This accords with the rule enunciated in Gordon v. Gordon (78), which was repeatedly argued before Lord Eldon, namely, that a family arrangement to be operative must be without fraud; it would not be supported if founded on mistake of either party to which the opposite party was an accessory; or if either party has been misled by the concealment of material things, for the essence of the matter is mutual communication of all relevant circumstances. To the same effect are the decisions in Hoghton v. Hoghton (79), Lawton v. Compton (80), Bentley v. Mackey (81), which show that a Court of Equity will not permit a family arrangement to bind the parties when the transaction has been unfair and founded upon falsehood or misrepresentation. Tested in the light of these principles, the position of the defendant is full of insoluble difficulties from which no ingenuity on the part of the most skilful legal adviser can extricate him.

As a last resort, it has been contended on behalf of the defendant that no relief should be granted to the plaintiff in the present suit as framed, inasmuch as the plaintiff who alleged fraud can succeed only on proof of the fraud specified in the plaint, and no variation between pleading and proof can be allowed. In support of this position, reference has been made to the following passage from the judgment in Bansiram v. Secretary of State (82): "Two principles, it is well settled, are applicable in these circumstances. In the first place, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (83), where reliance was placed upon the observations of Selborne, L. C. in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (84) when a plaintiff impeaches a transaction on the ground of fraud, the facts which constitute the alleged fraud must be distinctly, specifically and accurately stated: Gibert v. Lewis (85) for, in the language of Fry, J., in Ked grave v. Hurd (86), it is only fair play between man and man that the defendant should know what is charged against him: Clydesdale Bank v. Paton (87), and Laurance v. Norreys (88). In the second place, a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it: Abdul Hossein v. Charles Agnew Turner (89); the rule that the Court will grant only such relief as the plaintiff is entitled to upon the case made by his pleadings, is strictly enforced when the plaintiff relies upon fraud: Wilde v. Gibson (90) and Hickson v. Lombard (91). But there is plainly no real substance in the contention in the circumstances of the present ligitation. The essence of the case for the plaintiff is that the defendant, who was her trusted brother-in-law, took advantages of her helpless situation as an illiterate parda-nashin Hindu widow and obtained her assent to a deed, the true effect whereof was not appreciated by her as she had no competent independent advise. It cannot thus be seriously maintained that there has been an infringement of the rule formulated by Lord Westbury in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (92), by Sir Barnes Peacock in Mylapore Iyasawny Vyapoory Mudaliar v. Yeo Ray (93) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Malraju Lakshmi Venkayyamma Row v. Venkatadri Appa Row (94), that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made, nor can it be suggested that there has been any violation of the elementary rule of procedure laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in Abdul Hossein v. Charles Agnew Turner (89), and by Lord Shaw in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit (95) that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, so that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it. We must further bear in mind that every variance between pleading and proof is not fatal: the Court must carefully consider whether, in the words of the Judicial Committee in Radha Mohun v. Jadoomonee Dossee (96) the objection is one of form or of substance. The rule that the allegation and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, namely, first, to apprise the defendant distinctly and specifically of the case he is called upon to answer, so that he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise, and, secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations Tested from these points of view, the objection urged by the defendant proves to be groundless. There is no room for doubt that the contending parties fully appreciated the real points in issue and have adduced all the material evidence The fundamental point in controversy was really of a very simple character, namely, what were the circumstances under which the partition deed was executed? Each side had full opportunity to give in minute detail its own version of the incidents, and the Court was called upon to determine the true state of things from the conflicting narratives. There is plainly no question of surprise; but if it were necessary to adhere to matters of form with the strictest accuracy, the plaint could well have been amended to enable the Court to do that substantial justice between the parties for which alone Courts exist: Muhammad Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (97), Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi (48), Charan Das v. Amir Khan (98) and Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Ho Hnaung (99). In this connection, a well-known passage from the judgment of James, L. J. in Maxon v. Payne (75) may be usefully re called: "A great part of the argument which was addressed to us on behalf of the defendant Payne was, that the case alleged against him by the bill was one of gross and premeditated fraud, and that unless the actual fraud as alleged was proved, the bill must fail. It was contended that the plaintiffs were bound to make out, and had failed to make out, the case alleged in the tenth paragraph of the bill. It is true that when a case is based on fraud, the fraud must be proved, and no relief could be given in this suit on any different ground. But the obtaining of property, or of any benefit, through the undue and unconscientious abuse of influence by a person in whom trust and confidence are placed, has always been treated as a fraud of the gravest character; and if such frauds are alleged and proved, the allegation that they were parts of a scheme very early conceived and deliberately carried out is, whether it be made out or not, of no material consequence in such a suit. It is at most a rhetorical exaggeration, which a person who commits the fraud, has no right to complain of. If a man robs his fellow traveller, and is indicted for so doing, the allegation that he became the companion of his victim with a pre conceived design to rob him is wholly immaterial. Much the same line of defence was taken in the case of Huguenin v. Baseley (100), and it may be worth while to quote what Lord Eldon said in that case: 'I agree, further, that the relief must proceed upon what is alleged and proved by the persons complaining, that their complaints must be treated as effectual or ineffectual according to what they have, not what they could have, represented ...I have, therefore, looked through this bill with reference to the frame of it, and I have no doubt this case might have been more clearly reached if the situation of the parties had enabled them to go through all the difficulties as to amendment; also that many circumstances might have been brought forward on behalf of the defendants, which I am bound not to look at. But, taking the case as it stands, though there is in this bill much foul allegation, which, if not true, ought not to be there, and a great deal of which is denied and clearly disproved, there is enough upon the bill and in evidence to show that this deed cannot stand, if the whole transaction taken together cannot stand.'"

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH v. KALIDASI DASI.

In my judgment, the Subordinate Judge was unquestionably right in his conclusion that the defendant obtained the partition deed from the plaintiff by an untrue representation that its terms were in conformity with the last wishes of her husband, as well as by a concealment of the true extent of the assets of the family business and the value of the family properties; he also took advantage of her distressed condition during the period of mourning immediately after she had lost her husband; she had further no competent independent advice as to the nature, value and extent of her rights in the estate left by the deceased and the true effect of the deed upon her position as his heiress. In these circumstances, she was entitled substantially to the reliefs granted by the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The result is that the decree of the Trial Court must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The memorandum of cross-objections is rejected without costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—This appeal is against the judgment and decree in a suit brought by one Srimaty Kalidasi Dasi to have it declared that a deed described in the plaint as a partition deed, executed by her on the 4th November 1915 in favour of the appellant, Satis Chandra Ghose is fraudulent and void and to have it cancelled and for partition of the immoveable property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint and to recover a hardware business in Calcutta to which she alleges she is entitled as widow of her deceased husband. One Gobinda Chandra Ghose who died in November 1913 left two sons—Kedar Nath Ghose and Satis Chandra Ghose. The latter is the appellant. Kedar Nath was the husband of the plaintiff and by her he had two daughters—Chinabala and Nalinibala. The plaintiff has two brothers called Kamini Kumar and Raj Kumar and this completes the list of the relatives of the parties whose names have been introduced into the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the hardware business was the property of Gobinda Ghose on whose death his two sons inherited it jointly. The respondent who claimed the whole of this business has abandoned his cross-objections on this point and it is not necessary further to consider the question.

The respondent's case is that shortly after the death of her husband Kedar Nath Ghose, which took place on the 7th October 1915, the appellant came to her and asked her to entrust him with the management of the hardware business. To this she says that she agreed. The deed of the 4th November 1915 was prepared; it was signed by the respondent by the pen of her daughter Chinabala; no explanation of its terms was given, nor was the deed read over to her. On the 8th December it was registered, again without explanation. After registration the respondent disclosed the existence of the deed to her brother Raj Kumar who took her to task and said that he would obtain a copy of it and see her about the matter. This Raj Kumar did and told her that Satis had defrauded her of everything. Subsequently, on the 28th June 1916 she filed this suit. This is the broad outline of the respondent's story as told by her and her witnesses. It is not necessary to analyse this case in detail because the Subordinate Judge himself has paid very little attention to it. It is not possible to say from his judgment what view he takes of it, for he deals exclusively with the case made by the appellant. He has refused to accept the appellant's case in all its details, but he has treated it as representing more or less what took place and he finds in language admitting of no ambiguity that taking the case made by the appellant substantially to represent what occurred, fraud was practised on the respondent in whose favour he has made a decree setting aside the deed of the 4th November 1915.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the appellant that in a case of fraud, it will not suffice to find fraud otherwise than as alleged on behalf of the plaintiff, and that even should the Court find that fraud was practised, if such fraud is other than the fraud alleged the defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed. This is a proposition which may be applicable in cases between man and man, or, stated more appropriately to this case, where a pardanashin lady is not concerned. But where a pardanashin lady is involved, other and equally well-known rules have to be applied and conformity with them has to be established. As I read the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is according to these rules that he has found that the appellant fails even assuming his case to be true. I propose, therefore, to state the history of the matter and examine it from this point of view.

For some years before his death Kedar Nath Ghose had been an invalid and at the time of his death he was bed-ridden. He had spoken to his wife some two or three days before his death about a Will, and on or about the 28th or 30th September a draft Will was prepared for him. The materiality of the Will which Kedar Nath intended to execute arises from the circumstance that the case put forward by the appellant in his written statement and in the evidence is that it was in order to give effect by deed to the wishes of her deceased husband, which the intervention of death prevented him from carrying out by Will, the respondent executed the instrument which is the occasion of these proceedings. The draftsman of the Will was Aghore Nath Maiti, a man who describes himself as a trader, dealing in building materials and also with deeds, who has been called as a witness for the appellant: Aghore Maiti's evidence is that he was summoned by one Ashutosh Banerjee to write out the Will: that Kedar Babu stated his intentions at some of which Ashutosh Banerjee protested and after discussion with Asutosh Banerjee he wrote out the terms. This draft has been produced. It contains a number of alterations but it has not been proved by whom these alterations were made. Aghore Maiti did not make them, though he says they were made on the same day as the draft was written, but he cannot say by whom. The suggestion is that the alterations were made by Asutosh Banerjee who, however, has not been called by either side though present at the trial of the suit. The importance of these alterations will appear later. The Will was fair copied on the 6th October. This appears from the evidence of the appellant, and of a witness named Boloram Ganguly, an attesting witness to the deed in suit. This man says that on the day preseding the death of Kedar he went to Kedar's house where he saw Akhoy Ghose, Jotin Ghose, Shyama Charan Bhaduri, Asutosh Banerjee and Raj Kumar Deoti. The document was being dictated by Akhoy Ghose to his son Jotin who was writing a fair copy. This fair copy has not been produced and no explanation of the omission to produce it is forthcoming. On the 7th October Kedar Nath Ghose died without having executed the Will, though on the morning of that day the several persons whom I have named, a Pleader called Badal Chandra Ghose, the Doctor Sarat Chandra Das, and a person of the name of Pulin Behary Mondal, had collected, most of them for the purpose of being present at the execution of the document. But nothing could be done as Kedar had become unconscious. Kedar died and died so intestate. The appellant and also Asutosh Banerjee and Jaharilal Bhaduri then asked what was to be done. Whereupon a suggestion was made by Badal Chandra Ghose that as the Will could not be executed, a deed which in his evidence he called a deed of family arrangement might be executed in its terms. This suggestion was made in the absence, it is to be observed, of the respondent. All of this is most significant: it suggests the thought that the death of Kedar Nath Ghose intestate was regarded by these persons as a catastrophe, so far as he could do aught to remedy it. Badal Chandra Ghose lost no time and he then and there, as he says, dictated a draft to Akhoy Ghose's son Jotindra. This draft too is not forthcoming nor is its absence explained. Some few days later the appellant suggested to the respondent that a deed should be executed. He made the suggestion at a time when expenses to be incurred for the Sradh of Kedar Nath Ghose were under discussion. The respondent was most anxious that a feeding of the poor should take plase. This appears to have afforded to the appellant the opportunity which he desired. For he demurred and said he would consent if the respondent would execute what he called a family arrangement. A number of persons whom it is unnecessary to specify, their names recur throughout the evidence at each stage of the incidents leading up to the final conclusion, also met and discussed the matter with the appellant and respondent. As regards this discussion, suffice it to say that it related to arrangements regarding the immoveable property, and that according to the witness, Fakir Chandra Ghose the respondent intimated that if the Sradh would only cost Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 6,000, she would execute a deed in accordance with the terms of the Will which her husband had proposed to execute. There appears to have been more than one such interview with the respondent as the appellant says that terms were discussed in his presence while Fakir Chandra Ghose says: "We came back and told Satis that Kalidasi had agreed." It is not a simple matter to disentangle the evidence as to these several interviews, but on each occasion the appellant's adherents were present and the impression on my mind, whether or no she was alive to her own interests, or advised as to them, a point I shall deal with hereafter, is that the respondent was being importuned in the interests of the appellant to put her hand to the document which he was anxious to obtain. The appellant says that the respondent agreed to certain terms and, accordingly, in furtherance of the project, on the following day a draft of the Will of Kedar and the draft deed prepared by Badal Babu and "perhaps also the fair copy of the Will" were made over to an individual of the name of Nilmony Bose to prepare a "partition deed" in the terms arranged. Nilmony Bose has not been called as a witness and the explanation given for his absence from the witness-box, that he was travelling to Waltair, is wholly insufficient. His evidence might have thrown some light upon the failure to produce the draft prepared by Badal Chandra Ghose and the fair copy of the Will. The importance of the omission to produce these papers lies in the fact that, as already stated, it is the appellant's case that, subject to such alterations as were agreed upon between him and the respondent, the object of the deed was merely to give effect to the wishes of Kedar Nath Ghose which the deceased had not been able to carry out before his death. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the alterations in the draft of the Will were interpolated subsequently in order to bring the Will into conformity with the partition deed. The alterations in the draft in various respects are not such as one would expect to find in a Will but are such as might well find a place there if the draft Will had been used as a rough draft for the purpose of engrafting upon it the deed of partition. This does not improve the position for the appellant and it is not necessary to come to any definite conclusion one way or the other. But the appellant's case being what it is, that the draft Will as altered and the deed in suit represent the testamentary wishes of the deceased, the omission to produce the fair copy of the Will and the draft prepared by Badal Chandra Ghose suggests the inference that were they produced they would show that neither the fair copy of the Will nor the draft partition deed were in accordance with the Will which Kedar Nath Ghose intended to execute. This omission and the failure fully to explain their non-production throw the gravest suspicion on the appellant's case.

About the time when Nilmoni Bose has been told to prepare a draft, in particular on the 19th October, the appellant, who had charge of the hardware business in Calcutta drew from the National Bank of India practically the whole of the cash balance of the business which stood in Kedar's name amounting to Rs. 11,000 and transferred it to an account in his own name at the Mercantile Bank of India. At that time, of course, the respondent knew nothing about this. It came to light in circumstances to which I shall presently refer. Four or five days after receiving instructions Nilmoni produced a draft which according to the appellant was read over and explained to the respondent on the 25th October 1915 in the presence of some ten persons by Fakir Chandra Ghose, who also explained it. The draft was approved and executed by the respondent through her daughter Chinabala. Fakir again lent his services in the same manner some days later when the fair copy was executed by the parties in similar fashion as regards the respondent. That took place on the 4th November 1915. On the 8th December the deed was registered. A Vakil of the name of Bhupendra Nath Bose has been called to support this part of the case and he produced a diary in which he had made a note as to his presence on the occasion and the reading over of the document to the respondent by one Shyama Charan Bhaduri. There is nothing in the note to show that the document was explained to the respondent on that occasion in the manner in which that should have been done and this witness's evidence does not carry the case for the appellant very far.

Raj Kumar having been informed by his sister of what had occurred, obtained a copy of the deed, which he says he procured on the 22nd or 23rd January 1916. On the 26th January he borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,000 from the appellant the significance of which will have to be considered in dealing with his connection with this affair. On the 31st January, the respondent made an application to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a Succession Certificate to enable her to realise a sum of Rs. 2,825 for which her late husband had been insured in the Phoenix Insurance Company Ltd. On the 23rd February she filed a further petition asking that Government Promissory Notes of the total approximate value of Rs. 7,500 should be included in the application. Raj Kumar Deoti signed this application on behalf of the respondent The need for the application, according to Raj Kumar, was that his sister was going to bring a suit to set the deed aside which would cost a good deal of money, and in order to raise funds he made enquiries and from those made at the Bank, it came to his knowledge that the appellant had withdrawn Rs. 11,000 and was about to withdraw the Government Promissory Notes. From the Insurance Co, he learnt that a Succession Certificate would be necessary before the money could be paid. While this application was pending events took a singular turn, for Raj Kumar, who professes to have been interested in securing for his sister her just rights, entered into negotiations with the appellant for the preparation and execution by the respondent of a deed to supplement the partition deed by making provision as regards items of property not comprised in it; in particular the items which were the subject of the application for the Succession Certificate. Raj Kumar says he asked Satis to make a draft but at no time did he consult his sister in the matter. The appellant's evidence as to this is that Raj Kumar asked him whether a supplemental deed should be executed with regard to the Government Promissory Notes and the life policy which had been omitted from the partition deed. A draft was accordingly prepared and made over to Raj Kumar. Then, according to the appellant, Raj Kumar told him that if he would discharge him from a debt of Rs. 3,500 which Raj Kumar owed him he would allow the respondent to execute it, otherwise he would prevent her from so doing. The statement, considered in the light of all the evidence, has the ring of truth about it. But, as will be seen when I discuss Raj Kumar's position in relation to his sister and the deed in suit, so far from helping the appellant it militates against his success. Our attention has been drawn at some length to the details of the supplemental deed and errors in and omissions from the original deed which an examination of the supplemental deed discloses. For instance the valuation of the hardware business in Calcutta is given in the deed of the 4th November as Rs. 31,000, while from the supplemental deed the net value appears to be 56,851 rupees. It is admitted by the supplemental deed that mistakes have been made in incorporating certain matters in the deed of the 4th November; and in his evidence the appellant admitted the incorrectness of the valuation of the properties mentioned in the first deed. The supplemental deed was never executed. On the 8th April 1916 the appellant objected to the respondent obtaining a Succession Certificate and himself filed a petition to the Subordinate Judge for a Succession Certificate in respect of the Government Promissory Notes. In that petition he stated that he was the reversionary heir and claimed the sums in question as such, making no mention either of the partition deed or of the agreement only recently entered into for a supplemental deed. On the 16th May, the appellant filed a suit against Raj Kumar Deoti to recover Rs. 3,668-4-0 borrowed by him which sum included the Rs. 2,000 borrowed on the 26th January 1916. On the 18th of May, according to the appellant's deposition in the proceedings for a Succession Certificate, the respondent executed the am-mukhtearnama in favour of Raj Kumar. On the 20th May the applications for Succession Certificates were disposed of and the Court ordered that a Succession Certificate should issue to the appellant as regards the Government Promissory Notes and as regards the insurance money to the widow. On the 28th June of the same year the suit which has resulted in this appeal was filed. This is the case which the Subordinate Judge has considered and which he says is a fraud on the respondent.

The rules laid down by a long series of decisions for the protection of pardanashin ladies are well-established and it is unnecessary that I should repeat them. It is with their application that we are concerned, and we have to consider whether or not those rules were observed in the circumstances in which the deed in question was executed. In my opinion, they were not. I have already indicated what the course of events suggests to my mind with reference to the Will. That the appellant was aware of the contents of the proposed Will I have no doubt, nor that his disappointment that it had not been executed was intense. But there was no need for the execution of a deed such as this immediately after the death of the husband of the respondent. There was no dispute and no "family arrangement" was necessary. But immediately her husband had died the respondent was importuned by the appellant and his adherents to execute this deed. That he saw his opportunity when she wanted a considerable sum to be spent in feeding the poor I feel convinced. The business which was the source of her income was in his hands. The Sradh ceremony had to be performed. Whatever her rights may have been money had to be forthcoming at once for the purpose. Accordingly, she agreed to the proposal, thinking that she was but giving effect to her husband's wishes. That she was doing so is extremely doubtful, either on the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the draft Will, or in the view to which I incline. But in any event she was entitled to be held by the appellant at arm's length and to receive independent advice and this is the point upon our view as to which the decision of the appeal must depend. There is nothing to show that the respondent ever had independent advice. That a pardanashin lady must have independent legal advice is not necessary as an inflexible rule. But what I conceive to be the effect of the decisions is that, excluding those rare cases where the experience and attainments of the lady or the circumstances of the case render advice superfluous, a parda-nashin lady must have advice, that the advisor should have no adverse interest, and should be such a person as is capable of explaining to her fully her rights in general and in particular under the document which she intends to sign, if necessary, contrasting them with her rights should the intended document not be executed by her: if the circumstances are such that unless he has a knowledge of law he is not competent to advise her, then and in that case independent legal advice is essential. Considerable argument has been addressed to us on behalf of both parties as to the need for independent legal advice in this case. I am not prepared to say that it was not necessary. But inasmuch as I am of opinion that the lady had no independent advice at all, it is unnecessary to consider that aspect of the matter. All that has been proved, assuming the evidence to be true, is that the document was read to her, for I cannot give any weight to bald assertions that the document was explained without details of what such explanation consisted of. It has not been proved that she was aware what her rights were apart from the document, or that she was giving up any rights for what she obtained. It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General that she knew her rights, and that the discussions with her prior to the execution of the draft establish this. But this I do not think is the case. She was undoubtedly aware that the source of her income was the hardware business in Calcutta, but it has not been established that she knew what her rights were as a Hindu widow either with reference to the business or with reference to the immoveables; or that she knew what she was giving up or what she was to obtain in return or the legal consequences of what she was doing. Yet these were matters of which she was entitled to be and ought to have been made fully cognisant. Who would naturally have been the people to explain matters to the respondent? The document which she was executing was for the benefit of her husband's brother. Ordinarily he would be the person whose duty it would be to protect her interests. In the circumstances she would turn to her own nearest male relatives. These are Kamini and Raj Kumar. But Kamini hardly comes into the case. It has not been suggested that he took the slightest interest in his sister's affairs and he may be ignored. What was Raj Kumar's position in the matter? He says that he heard about the deed from his sister. He obtained a copy of it from the Registration Office. He says that he brought it and told her that she had been defrauded. Taking those statements as an index to his state of mind in January, how is it to be explained that in March he was entering into negotiations with the appellant for the execution by the respondent of a supplemental deed with reference to which he never consulted his sister at any time? He was a man who, it must be borne in mind, was in debt to the appellant. It would have been a matter for surprise had he advised his sister to execute the supplemental deed. At the same time as he was thus negotiating he was lending his sister his support in her application for a Succession Certificate. His attitude with regard to the supplemental deed and the Succession Certificate cannot be reconciled with his conduct with reference to the deed as soon as he had obtained a copy of it. In May the appellant filed a suit against Raj Kumar respondent who by obtaining an am-muktearnama from his sister for the purpose of filing this suit. From that time onwards Raj Kumar sided with the respondent. It is quite impossible to regard Raj Kumar as a disinterested person. So far from being disinterested, I think that it is abundantly clear that throughout the whole period till the 18th May he was actuated solely by self-interest. Raj Kumar is stated by the appellant and his witness to have been present on the various occasions when the matter was discussed with the respondent. In the view that I take of Raj Kumar's connection with and attitude towards this matter, it is quite possible that he was there. But that he was advising his sister and acting in her interests, I do not think is in the least degree probable. So far from that being the case I think that the inference which may very fairly be drawn from the facts and circumstances is that he was furthering the interests of the appellant for his own advantage in the first instance and that he eventually sided with his sister when the institution of the suit for Rs 3,668-4-0 showed him that the appellant was not prepared to treat him favourably. It is impossile, on a view of the evidence most favourable to the appellant, to take the view that Raj Kumar Deoti is a person who can be regarded as an independent adviser of the respondent.

I concur in the order to be made.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 75 OF 1922.

June 22, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Prideaux, A. J. C.

MAHADEO—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

KISANLAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Undue influence—Indebtedness, effect of.

The mere fact that a person at the time of entering into a contract is indebted to the other party would not by itself be sufficient to establish undue influence. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, No. 1, Wardha, dated the 29th June 1921, in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1921.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. N. Khare, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who are Marwari money-lenders sued the minor defendant to recover Rs. 5,680 on account of money due by his father on a money-bond dated 7th June 1917 and subsequent advances. For the defence it was pleaded that though Daulat had dealings with the plaintiffs it is not known to what extent and the plaintiffs were put to proof that the money claimed by them was due. It was further contended that Daulat, the father, was an idiot and could not understand things. Plaintiffs were his creditors and were in a position to dominate his will and had made him execute certain bogus documents. Paragarph 3 of the written statement runs:—

MAHADEO v. KISANLAL.

"The defendant's father Daulat delivered towards the debt 10 Khandis 9 maunds 3 Pansaris of cotton at Rs. 115 per Khandi on 5th April 1917, amount comes to Rs. 1,195-15-3. After the death of Daulat Rao, his servant Tukaram delivered 21 Khandis of cotton at Rs. 212 per Khandi in the month of February 1920. The amount comes to Rs. 4,452."

Thus re-payments of Rs. 5,647-15-3 were claimed.

In reply it was stated that Daulat Rao was intelligent enough to manage his own affairs; it was admitted that 10 Khandis 9 maunds and 3 Pansaris of cotton at Rs. 115 per Khandi was given to plaintiffs on 5th April 1917 but that payment was made before the execution of the bond and was given credit for when the bond was executed. The amount of Rs. 825, the consideration of the bond, was as follows: Rs. 73-7-0 paid in cash; and Rs. 751-9-0 the balance due after deducting the price of cotton on account of Hawala of Rs. 2,031-14-0 of Makta money due from one Balwantrao, Hawala taken by Daulat. As regards the 21 Khandis said to have been given by Tukaram, plaintiffs admit receipt of 21 Khandis on three different dates on account of one Yadavrao, the sister's son of Daulatrao. Yadavrao deposited this cotton as a security for the payment of Rs. 2,550, the lease money for which Daulatrao stood security. The price of the cotton was not settled. It was denied that the bond sued on and the Kabulihisabs were vitiated by undue influence.

The case went to trial on the following issues:

"(1) Did Daulat execute the bond dated 7th June 1917 for Rs. 825?

"(2) If the execution of the said bond be proved, whether it was without consideration and vitiated by undue influence? Is it not binding on defendant for reasons stated by him?

"(3) Did plaintiffs advance the items of cash and cotton seed alleged in schedule 1 attached to the plaint, to Daulat?

"(4) Did Daulat take Hawala in respect of the following items mentioned in schedule 1 of the plaint.

and 2,440	5	0

"(5) Did Daulat agree to pay interest at one rupee per cent. per mensem on the items of cash, cotton seed and Hawala?

"(6) Did Daulat execute the Kabulihisabs dated 14th March 1918 and 6th June 1919? Are they vitiated by undue influence? Is the claim in respect of the items of 1917 within time?

"(7) Did Daulat's servant Tukaram deliver 21 Khandis cotton at Rs. 212 per Khandi to plaintiffs in February 1920, towards the debt sued for?

"(8) Is the defendant entitled to claim credit for the payment of 10 Khandis 9 maunds 3 Passeris cotton at Rs. 115 per Khandi as a re-payment towards the debt sued for?

"(9) What amount are the plaintiffs entitled to?"

The findings of the Trial Court may be summarised thus. It was proved that the bond of 7th June 1917 was executed by the deceased Daulat. It was not without consideration and was not vitiated by undue influence and was binding on the defendant. The third, fourth and fifth issues were found in the affirmative. Daulat was found to have executed the two Kabulihisabs in suit which are not vitiated by undue influence and the claim in respect of the items of 1917 is within time. Dealing with the subject matter of the 8th issue the Judge finds that it was taken into account in making up accounts prior to the execution of the bond sued on. With regard to the alleged payment of 21 Khandis of cotton the Judge holds that Yadavrao had executed a Kabuliyat in plaintiffs' favour for Rs. 2,550 for which Daulat stood surety. The Judge writes:—

"I am satisfied that Daulat was virtually plaintiffs' tenant when the land was ostensibly leased to Yadavrao, that Daulat himself cultivated the land, and not Yadorao that Daulat was responsible for payment of rent and that the lease was a benami (not nominal in the sense of sham) transaction, Yadorao being a mere benamidar, and Daulat being the real lessee."

It was Daulat's servant who gave the 21 Khandis cotton to the plaintiffs' servant. The cotton was found to have been delivered not as a re-payment towards the debt now sued for but as a payment towards rent for which Daulat stood surety and the price of cotton would, therefore, first go towards such rent and any balance for debts due by Daulat. The cotton was found to be of the value of Rs. 139 per Khandi coming to Rs. 2,919, thus exceeding the amount of rent by Rs 369. This amount, it was held, plaintiffs were bound to give credit for in the present suit, as it was in the nature of a deposit with them in Daulat's favour. They received this at the end of February 1920 and plaintiffs are liable to credit interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem up to 25th January 1921, the date of the institution of the suit, this amounts to Rs. 40-1-0. The suit resulted in a decree for Rs 5,270-15 0 being passed with proportionate costs. The present appeal is filed by the defendant.

The first ground in the memorandum of appeal to the effect that the contracts between Daulat and the plaintiffs were vitiated by fraud has not been seriously pressed, though it is argued that looking to the connection of the parties the onus of showing that the plaintiffs did not exercise undue influence over Daulat rests on them. Section 16 of the Contract Act Illustration (c) is appealed to. The terms of the contract in suit do not seem to be specially onerous. Daulat was unquestionably the plaintiffs' debtor but that fact alone would not establish undue influence. It is admitted that the case is more of suspicion than of undue influence. Though there is some evidence to show that Daulat used opium, I am not prepared to place reliance in the defence evidence that he was always drugged. Yadavrao (D. W. No. 2) who states this admits that Daulat was able to give orders to his servants and to see that they were carried out. Ramkrishna (D. W. No. 3) who was in Daulat's service states that his late master was eccentric but he explains this by saying that he meant that Daulat lived as he liked and was not influenced by others. Deosa (D. W. No. 4) who was a servant of Daulat for six years speaks to his late master being addicted to opium and being eccentric. I no not think that it has been shown that Daulat was not able to manage his own affairs and there is no force in this contention of undue influence.

The second point raised in appeal is as regards the 10 Khandis of cotton given before the execution of the bond. Hawala for Rs 2,050 is admitted and there is no evidence to rebut the plaintiffs' story that the value of this cotton was taken into account at the time of the execution of the bond. The evidence of Gopal (P. W. No. 2) shows that Daulat admitted the Hawala account, and Ramkisan (P. W. No. 4) who manages the plaintiffs' shop at Urvi speaks to this account also. There seems no reasonable doubt that this Hawala account was acknowledged by Daulat and gone into before the execution of the bond. This would naturally be done before the bond was executed. In my opinion, the finding of the first Court on this point is correct.

The third and last point raised in appeal is with regard to 21 Khandis of cotton. It is contended that the value of this cotton should have been credited to Daulat's personal account and not to the Hawala or surety debt. The evidence shows that this cotton was given to plaintiffs not by Daulat himself but by Yadavrao, his relative and the ostensible lessee of certain fields from the plaintiffs. There is no force in the argument that because Daulat did not specify to which debt this money was to be appropriated and because the plaintiffs also did not expressly appropriate the money to any certain debt it should go towards the older debts, namely, Daulat's own debts. There is no reasonable doubt that the cotton was deposited, as the evidence shows, with the plaintiffs by Yadavrao on account of the lease money due by him, lease money for which Daulat also had made himself responsible. The lower Court has criticised at some length the evidence which led it to believe that Daulat was in truth the real lessee of the land for the rental of which these 21 Khandis of cotton were deposited with the plaintiffs. I have considered that evidence and find myself unable to differ from the Judge of the Court below on this point. The rate of that cotton had not been settled; but that it was expressly put with the plaintiffs to satisfy their claim for lease money due really by Daulat the circumstances of the case fully show. The balance after satisfying the lease money has been given by the Court below to defendant's account. Interest has been allowed by the Court on the value of the 21 Khandis of cotton and thus there is no force in the 5th ground of the memorandum of appeal.

Taking the case as a whole I see no reason to differ from the results arrived at by the Sub Judge. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's' costs.

Costs—Question of principle—Second appeal.

When the question is one of principle a second appeal lies to the High Court on the question of costs only. [p. 601, col. 1.]

Bunwari Lall v. Chowdhry Drup Nath Singh, 12 C. 179; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 122.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Chitagong, dated the 29th January 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Patiya, dated the 7th September 1918.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are as follows: The appeal arises out of orders passed in execution proceedings. On the 23rd of February 1918 the Munsif before whom the application was pending passed an order directing a Commissioner to be appointed and further directing that the costs of the application would be borne by the decree-holder. Then, on the 4th of May 1918, after the Commissioner had delivered possession, an order was passed on the following terms: "case disposed of with costs to the decree-holder." Against this order an application for review was made which was disposed of by Order No. 25, dated the 7th of September 1918. By that order, another Munsif who succeeded the one who had passed the former orders held that Order No. 16, dated the 4th of May 1918, above referred to, had been passed through oversight. He granted the review and directed that the portion of the said Order No. 16 dated the 4th May 1918, relating to costs should stand cancelled. Against this order, an appeal was preferred to the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge treated it as an appeal against an order disallowing costs to the decree-holder and held on the merits that the decree-holder was entitled to his costs. He accordingly decreed the appeal and directed that the order disallowing costs should be reversed and the decree holder should get the costs amounting to Rs. 60.

The first question that has to be considered is whether a second appeal lies to this Court. The first contention is that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was an appeal against an order granting an application for review and that, consequently, under O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (w), Civil Procedure Code, an appeal lay to Subordinate Judge, but under section 104 of the Code, no appeal lay from that appellate order. But the Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal did not deal with it as an appeal from an order passed on review but as an appeal from an order made after the review was granted. The order of the Munsif of the 7th of September 1918 really consists of two separate orders. He first grants a review of Order No. 16 dated the 4th May 1918 and then in reviewing that order he restores the Order No. 6 dated the 23rd of February, 1918. The second of these orders must be held to have been passed under section 47 of the Code and was, therefore, appealable as a decree. It is contended that the order must be held to have been passed under section 35 and not under section 47. Section 35 gives directions as to the ordering of costs, but we think that the award of costs depends finally on section 47 and that the provisions of section 35 are supplementary. It has been held by this Court that when the question is one of principle, as in the present case, a second appeal lies to the High Court on the question of costs only: Bunwari Lall v. Chowdhry Drup Nath Singh (1) and we accordingly hold that this appeal is competent.

On the merits, we think that the appeal must succeed. The learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with the matter has gone into the question not as to the correctness of the order appealed against but as to the correctness of the Original Order No. 6 which was passed on the 23rd of February 1918. As we read the order appealed form, the Munsif held that that order, No. 16 dated the 4th of May 1918, was passed by indavertence, and there, we think, he was right. Had the Munsif at the time of passing this order intended to override his previous order, he would have certainly referred to it and given his reasons for so doing. He would not have passed this order in this form unless his previous order had been overlooked. Once the Order No. 16 dated the 4th of May 1918 was set aside, the question as to costs was a matter of res judicata which had been decided by Order No. 6 and as long as that order stood, the Munsif was bound to give effect to it and refuse the decree-holder his costs in accordance with that order. When the case came up to the Subordinate Judge on appeal, that Order No. 6 dated the 23rd of February 1918 was still in force and until that was set aside, the decree-holder could not recover his costs. We accordingly hold that the order of the lower Appellate Court was wrong. We decree this appeal, set aside the order the of lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will get his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. In this Court we assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

WALI MOHAMMAD—RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Widow in possession of husband's property in lieu of dower-debt—Right to transfer lien apart from dower-debt—Construction of sale-deed—Transfer of dower-debt.

A Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of her unsatisfied dower cannot transfer the lien on the property without also transferring her dower-debt as the lien is not an interest in property which can be severed from the right to dower and transferred as a separate interest. [p. 603, col. 1.]

The widow may, however, as long as she does not transfer the dower-debt or that debt remains undischarged, transfer for her lifetime, the possession of the property the proceeds of which belong to her until the debt is paid off. The possession of the transferee in such a case might constructively be regarded as the possession of the widow. [p. 603, col. 1.]

A sale-deed executed by a Muhammadan widow after reciting that the widow was in possession of the property of her deceased husband, "by virtue of inheritance and in lieu of dower" purported to transfer to the vendee, "the whole and entire property owned and possessed by me together with all rights and appurtenances;" It further added, "In short, the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have under this sale-deed been transferred from me and become extinguished in so far as I am concerned and have devolved on and vested in the said purchaser and his heirs and representatives":

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent on behalf of Sheikh Abdur Rahman, the second defendant in the suit, against a decision of Mr. Justice Bucknill, dated the 14th December last.* The plaintiff, Sheikh Wali Mahommed, and the first defendant, Sheikh Ezid Baksh, are brothers and the appellant, the second defendant, is the son of Sheikh Ezid Baksh. The suit was instituted before the Munsif of Sassaram in January 1918 claiming possession of a 6 annas share in the estate of his deceased brother, Sajjad Hussain, to which he was entitled as one of his deceased brother's heirs subject to the widow's right to retain possession as security for her unpaid dower. Sajjad Hussain, the elder brother of the plaintiff and the first defendant, died in 1899 leaving surviving him his widow, Musammat Kabiran, and his two brothers. His widow whose unpaid dower debt is said to amount to Rs. 4,000 was left in possession of the estate of her deceased husband holding it in lieu of dower, as she was admittedly entitled to do, until, out of the profits of the estate, her dower-debt had been discharged. The estate was a small one and we are not told what the net annual profits arising therefrom amounted to. It is not suggested, however, that the debt, at the date of that lady's death in 1911, had been discharged. On the 15th October 1900 Musammat Kabiran transferred to the appellant the whole of her interest in her deceased husband's estate. As one of his heirs she was entitled by inheritance to a quarter share in that estate and this she could undoubtedly transfer. The document, however, purports to transfer, in one place at all events, the whole of the interest which had come into her possession from her deceased husband and sets out in detail the properties, which, it is agreed, included the whole of her husband's estate. It recites that the donor has been in possession of the estate by virtue of inheritance and in lieu of dower-debt, and that she wishes to give away all her properties in her lifetime to the donee, subject to her right of maintenance during her lifetime, which she reserves at the rate of Rs. 60 per annum which is to be a charge on the property. It then purports to sell without reserving the right of cancellation "the whole and entire property owned and possessed by me together with all rights and appurtenances, for a consideration of a monthly allowance of Rs. 5, amounting to Rs. 60 per annum, with effect from to-day up to my death. I have, by making over this deed of sale to the vendee, put him in possession of the vended property as absolute proprietor in my place." It subsequently adds: "In short, the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have under this sale-deed been transferred from me and become extinguished in so far as I am concerned and have devolved on and vested in the said purchaser and his heirs and representatives." It is not absolutely clear from this document whether the vendor intended merely to transfer her own interest in the property, that is, the quarter share which she acquired by inheritance, or whether she intended to transfer the whole of the interest of her husband of which she was then in possession. But, whatever her intentions may have been, it is clear, and cannot be disputed, that she had no power of disposition over the property beyond the quarter share to which she was entitled by inheritance and to this extent alone could the transfer of the property be valid.

Both the learned Munsif and the learned Subordinate Judge, before whom the case came on appeal, took the view that the widow had no right to transfer the property beyond the extent of her own vested interest, viz., a quarter share and that, although she was in possession of the remainder in lieu of dower, she could not transfer the remainder or even the possession thereof so as to be binding after her lifetime without also transferring her right to dower. The learned Munsif, however, considered that the plaintiff's right to sue accrued in 1900 when the deed was executed and the donee was put in possession, and that, therefore, the suit which was instituted more than 12 years after that date was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge, on the other hand, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's right to sue for possession did not arise until the widow's death in 1911, and that the suit having been brought within 12 years of that date was not barred.

On appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Bucknill took the same view as the learned Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal.

It does not appear to have been argued, either in the Trial Court or before the Subordinate Judge on appeal, that the conveyance by the widow transferred to the appellant her dower debt. It was, however, argued before Mr. Justice Bucknill and the argument has been repeated before us in this appeal, that, on a proper construction of the document, the dower-debt must be taken to have been transferred. It was also contended that, even if the dower-debt was not in fact transferred, the widow had a lien or charge upon the property as security for the enforcement of the debt which she could transfer not only during her lifetime but even so as to enure for the benefit of the transferee after her death. The learned Judge, whose judgment is now under appeal, carefully considered these questions and decided them against the appellant. In my opinion, his decision was right. Although the instrument of transfer recites that the widow is in possession both by virtue of inheritance and in lieu of dower-debt, it purports only to transfer the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which the vendor had in the vended properties. There is not a word, from first to last, relating to any transfer of her dower-debt and I am unable to construe the document as purporting to transfer the dower-debt. Nor, in my opinion, was it possible for her to transfer the lien on the property so as to be binding after her lifetime without transferring also the dower debt. The lien on the property which gives the widow the right to possession until the debt has been discharged is not, in my opinion, an interest in property which can be severed from the right to dower and transferred as a separate interest. It is a right to the possession of the property by the person entitled to be paid the dower as long as the debt is not discharged either by the income from the property or by payment by the heirs or others interested in discharging the debt. It certainly gives the widow the right to possession and it may be assumed, I think, that, as long as she does not transfer her dower debt and that debt remains undischarged, she may transfer, for her lifetime possession of the property the proceeds of which belong to her until the debt is paid off. The position of the transferee in such a case might be regarded as constructively her possession, and, in this sense, it would not be severed from the dower debt. Just as she could dispose of the proceeds in any way she chose during her lifetime and until the debt was discharged, so also I apprehend she could transfer possession of the property in the same circumstances, the transferee being entitled to the usufruct. But if she should transfer the dower-debt or if she should die and her estate devolve upon her heirs or assignees, the transferee's right to possession would be extinguished, as the debt and the security cannot be severed, thereby converting the security into a separate interest in the property. It would appear, therefore, that even if the instrument in question purported to transfer to the appellant possession of the property forming the security for the debt this would not enure to the benefit of the transferee after the widow's death when the dower-debt passed to her heirs. The possession of the donee, in such a case, must, I think, be regarded as constructive possession of the widow. It is not an interest in property which is capable of absolute transfer. In any view of the case, therefore, in my opinion, the decision under appeal, upon this point, cannot be assailed.

It remains to consider the question of limitation. It is found as a fact, and cannot now be disputed, that the appellant was in actual possession of the whole of the property. He contends that from the moment he obtained possession, in the year 1900, his possession was adverse to that of the plaintiff who cannot, after more than 12 years had elapsed, be held to assert his right to the property. The plaintiff, no doubt, knew that the defendant was in possession but he was not entitled to possession himself as long as the widow was alive and the debt remained undischarged. It is not suggested that the debt was discharged during the widow's lifetime. Had the plaintiff sued for possession before 1911, when the widow died, the appellant would have had a complete answer to such a suit. He was in possession of the property with the consent of Musammat Kabiran, the only person at the time entitled to possession and the cause of action, which the plaintiff now seeks to enforce, had not at that time arisen and did not arise until after her death in 1911.

A further point, however, was taken by the appellant which must be considered. On the assumption that the widow retained her dower debt and did not transfer it to the appellant, he argued that the right to the dower debt does not belong to the plaintiff but to Musammat Kabiran's heirs. It is not shown, however, that Musammat Kabiran left any heirs and, in the absence of such, the plaintiff, as the heir of her deceased husband, has a better title to his 6-annas share in the property than the appellant who has no title at all.

A further point which does not appear to have been suggested before was that in any case the Crown would be the ultimate heir to Musammat Kabiran. It is not shown, however, in this case that the Crown, even if the point is one which is sustainable, had any better title than the present plaintiff and in these circumstances it seems to me that there is no force in this argument. In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—In my opinion there are only two points of any substance in this appeal. The first is the construction of the deed of transfer by Musammat Kabiran in favour of Abdul Rahman. Both Courts below have found that the document was a deed of sale for consideration, and that what the widow transferred was neither her dower debt nor the right to retain possession of the estate of her deceased husband as security for that debt but her interest in the property as proprietor of that estate which admittedly includes the three-eighths share claimed by the plaintiff.

Now, it is admitted that it is the plaintiff who is the sole proprietor of that three eighths share by right of inheritance and that Musammat Kabiran had no proprietary interest in it, and that if she did not sell her dower debt together with the right to possession of the property as security, then the plaintiff has a good title against her transferee.

The Munsif, however, found that the transferee came into possession in 1900 immediately upon the sale and was in adverse possession as against the plaintiff from that date. The Munsif has accordingly dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit has not been brought within 12 years of the date from which possession became adverse.

The Subordinate Judge agrees with the Munsif as to the construction of the document but not as to the question of the limitation. He is of opinion that as the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the transferee during the lifetime of the widow, the possession of the latter could not have been adverse to him and that, therefore, limitation began to run only from the date of the widow's death which took place in 1911. He finds that the suit having been instituted in 1918, it was within time and he has given a decree to the plaintiff in respect of the disputed share.

That judgment was affirmed by Mr. Justice Bucknill and there can be no doubt that his construction of the deed of sale is correct. Except in the preamble, which states that Musammat Kabiran is in possession of her husband's estate by right of inheritance and in lieu of dower debt, there is no mention in the document of the dower debt. Throughout the transferor purports to transfer her proprietary interest in the whole and entire estate of her husband together with all rights and appurtenances. She sums up the effect of her dispositions in the following words :—"In short the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have under this sale deed been transferred."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the words of transfer are perfectly general and must be construed as meaning that it was intended to include not only a proprietary interest in the land in suit, which she thought she possessed but which it is now admitted she did not, but also the dower-debt and the right to retain possession till it was paid. In my opinion, this contention cannot be accepted. In Maina Bibi v. Wasi Ahmad (1) their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court had to construe a deed of gift of which the terms were very similar, and it was argued in that case that the greater right includes the lesser and that if the transferor had no right of ownership in the property, she at least had the right to retain possession of it and she should be taken to have transferred that right. The recital in that deed stated that the widow was in possession by virtue of two separate titles: the first was in lieu of dower and the second by virtue of a former decree under which, the heirs of her deceased husband having failed to pay her dower debt within the time appointed by the Court, she claimed to have become absolute owner. Their Lordships declined to accede to the contention that because she transferred the whole property believing herself to be the owner of it, she should, in the absence of clear and definite words, be taken to have transferred also her dower debt and her right to retain possession.

In the present case the conditions are similar and I, think, it will be wrong without express words indicating an intention to transfer the dower debt to assume that the debt was also transferred.

The right of a Muhammadan widow to retain the possession of her husband's estate in lieu of dower has been sometimes described as a lien and sometimes as a charge. Strictly speaking, it is neither, but it is agreed that she has a right to transfer the debt coupled with the security and that the transfer will be binding upon her co-heirs till they discharge the debt. She may also during her lifetime transfer the right of possession apart from the debt, but that is a matter between herself and her transferee and the transfer will not be binding upon the co-heirs after her death. That is the meaning of the proposition that a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of unsatisfied dower cannot alienate the estate. This view of the law is in accord with the decision of the Full Bench in Beeju Bee v. Syed Moorthiya Sahib (2) and in my opinion the defendants in the present suit have no answer to the plaintiff's claim.

The second point in the case relates to the question of limitation. Now, the onus of proving adverse possession for more than 12 years is clearly upon the defendants; the plaintiff was obviously not entitled to take possession during the widow's lifetime and there is no evidence that when the transferee took possession in 1900 the plaintiff had any notice that he was claiming to hold adversely to him.

The Munsif finds that possession became adverse from the moment of the transfer but that finding has been set aside by the Subordinate Judge and in second appeal upon the facts found no case of adverse possession arises.

It was finally contended that the widow's heirs, and, perhaps remotely, the Crown may have a right to resist the plaintiff's possession, but such a case was not made in the Courts below and cannot be inquired into at this stage. On the findings there is nothing to show that any one has at present a better right than the plaintiff.

The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed.

BALAJI—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

SUKAMIYA—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Penalty, nature of—Damages for breach of contract stated in agreement—Damages, award of.

A penalty clause in a contract providing for the payment of a fixed sum of money by the person committing a breach of the same should not be looked upon as a mere brutum fulmen, an agreement that neither party had any intention of enforcing at all to any extent. The object of such a clause is to fix a maximum for damages which would be difficult to estimate in money. Therefore, even if a Court is not disposed to enforce such a clause this would not deprive the aggrieved party of his right to damages that he has actually suffered. [p. 606, cols. 1 & 2.]

Ballabhdas v. Paikaji, 38 Ind. Cas. 915; 12 N. L. R. 177, referred to.

Application for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated 8th December 1921, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 1724 of 1921.

Messrs. P. B. Lobo and S. C. Dutt Chowdhary, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. R. Mangrulkar, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant promised to sell his absolute occupancy land to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,900 by 15th March 1921 and paid Rs. 400 by way of earnest money. He agreed that if he made default he would re-pay the Rs. 400 and also would pay Rs. 500 by way of damages. He failed to complete the sale, though the plaintiff was both ready and willing to carry out his part of it, and eventually did buy the land on 12th August 1921 for Rs. 2,000 at a Court sale in execution of his own decree. In this suit he claimed Rs. 900 by way of damages for the breach of contract. He has been given a decree for Rs. 400 with interest for the time that amount has been with the defendant, but refused anything more, on the ground that the sum of Rs. 500 which the defendant agreed to pay was a penalty. The idea is very common that what is called a "penalty clause" in a contract is a mere brutum fulmen, an agreement that neither party has any intention of enforcing at all to any extent. Such an agreement would certainly not be mentioned in the Contract Act, and in fact would not be agreement at all. A penalty clause merely fixes a maximum for damages which would be difficult to estimate in terms of money, and anyhow does not deprive the aggrieved party of his right to damages that can be so estimated.

(2) In this case, the plaintiff has clearly proved that he has suffered a loss of Rs. 100 in having to pay Rs. 2,000 for the property instead of Rs. 1,900 and a loss of the value of the kotha which was included in the property to be sold for Rs. 1,900 but not in that sold for Rs. 2,000. In this Court the defendant himself admitted the value of that kotha to be twenty-five or thirty rupees and, in the circumstances, that can be taken as a very clear indication that its value is at least Rs. 100 even if it is not worth Rs. 250 as the plaintiff says it is. There is also the twenty annas that the plaintiff had to pay in order to get a refund of the value of the twenty-rupee stamp he bought for the sale-deed. The actual value of the land may well be over Rs. 2,000 as the full price is seldom obtained at a forced sale, and the Collector seems to have fixed the fair price at Rs. 2,000 mainly if not entirely on the statement made by the plaintiff that he had agreed to buy it for Rs. 1,900. Anyhow special and actual damage to the extent of over Rs. 130 has been proved, and it is obviously impossible to deprive the plaintiff of that merely because he agreed that the liquidated damages should not exceed Rs. 500.

(3) But it seems to me to have been too lightly assumed that the payment of Rs. 500 as damages to which the defendant agreed was by way of a penalty, that is to say, that the parties agreed that that sum should be the maximum payable as damages, and did not agree that it was to be paid in full without further question if the defendant broke the contract. There is a very strong indication of the intention of the parties in regard to the damages recoverable by the plaintiff in case of breach of the contract by the defendant, in what is agreed on all sides to have been their intention in regard to the damages to be recoverable by the defendant in case of breach by the plaintiff. It has throughout been accepted by everybody that if the plaintiff broke the contract the defendant would be entitled to retain the Rs. 400 paid to him as earnest money, and section 74 of the Contract Act applies to the agreement in regard to the earnest money as much as to the agreement in regard to the Rs. 500 as was held in Ballabhdas v. Paikaji (1). If it really was the intention of the parties that the damages payable to the defendant in cases of breach by the plaintiff were to be Rs. 400 without further question as to the amount, then the inference would be inevitable that the parties also agreed that the damages payable to the plaintiff in case of breach by the defendant were to be Rs. 500 and no more and no less.

(4) But I do not accept the defendant's contention that on breach of the contract by the plaintiff he would have been entitled to retain the whole of the Rs. 400 without further question as to the amount of damages he had suffered. He would clearly have been entitled to retain only so much of it as would give him reasonable compensation. So also the plaintiff can claim reasonable compensation up to a limit of Rs. 500 for any loss he has suffered, and in the circumstances it appears that the whole of the Rs. 500 would be more than reasonable, as he did get nearly all the property he wanted not many months later. But, as has already been shown, he suffered an actual demonstrable loss of not less than Rs. 131-4-0 by the default of the defendant, and in view of the practical certainty that the defendant's admission of the value of the kotha in this Court is a hopeless understatement it can fairly be said that he has proved actual damage to the extent of Rs. 200.

(5) But he has undoubtedly suffered further loss of which the exact extent cannot possibly be proved, and it is just this kind of damage that the agreement to pay Rs. 500, or some reasonable sum not greater than Rs. 500, is meant to cover. This from its nature can only be assessed in a round sum, and I consider, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, that the payment of a sum of Rs. 300, which includes the extra price he had to pay for the land and also the value of the kotha, would be reasonable compensation to the plaintiff for the loss caused to him by the default of the defendant.

(6) There seems no particular reason for allowing any interest on this sum for the short period between the breash and the filing of the suit, but interest at the rate allowed on the Rs. 400 should certainly be paid on the whole amount decreed from the date of suit till actual payment is made. The decree of the lower Court is, therefore, modified by the substitution of Rs. 713-5-4 for Rs. 413-5-4 as the amount the defendant is to pay to the plaintiff and the addition of an order that the defendant shall pay interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem on Rs. 713-5-4 from 25th June 1921, the date on which the suit was instituted, till payment is actually made. The defendant will also pay the whole of the costs of the suit and also those of these proceedings, in which Rs. 15 will be allowed as Pleader's fee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXV, r. 3—Suit for dissolution of partnership, for accounts and for recovery of plaintiff's stridhan property, if suit for payment of money.

A suit for dissolution of partnership, for accounts and for recovery of the plaintiff's stridhan property is not a suit for payment of money within the provisions of O. XXV, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, Fifth Court, Dacca.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Petitioner.

—The plaintiff is the petitioner. The plaintiff brought a suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts and also for the recovery of the stridhan properties as heiress to her deceased husband. The partnership firm deals in the purchase and sale of rice on wholesale scale and its assests consist in both moveable and immoveable properties. The suit was filed in the Court of the Fourth Subordinate Judge in September 1920. In October 1920 the defendants filed an application praying for an order calling upon the plaintiff to furnish security for costs but did not press it. In the meantime the parties cited witnesses, filed their documents, issues were settled and when the suit became ripe for hearing it was transferred to the file of the Fifth Subordinate Judge. Thereafter by a fresh affidavit in July 1921 they pressed their application for security. And on the 30th July 1921 the learned Subordinate Judge directed the plaintiff to furnish security for costs of the defendant. It is against that order that the present Rule is directed. My submission is that the application for security of costs is mala fide as it is quite obvious from their attitude. They had made a previous application soon after the institution of the suit. But they did not press it which they should have done if they really had any bona fide grounds or that application. My next and the principal contention is that the suit not being a suit for money the Court below had no jurisdiction to order for security for costs under O. XXV, r. 1 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. My suit is not one for money. It is a bona fide one for my own benefit and not for the benefit of anybody else. I submit the section is clear. The properties consist of both moveable and immoveable properties. I submit O. XXV, r. 1 (3), Civil Procedure Code, does not apply. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is bad in law and he had no jurisdiction to make it.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Nabadwip Chandra Saha), for the Opposite Parties—I submit the present suit clearly falls within the scope of O. XXV, r. 1 (3), Civil Procedure Code. In the prayer clause of the plaint, the plaintiff inter alia asked for (a) ascertaining the amount due to the respective parties after adjustment of accounts and passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the sum thus due to her, (b) passing a decree for the stridhan and moveable properties described in schedules 3 and 4 on value thereof by way of damages amounting to Rs. 2,694, and (c) a decree for the money due after taking account of the loan business. From the reliefs she thus prays for it is quite clear that the suit is for the payment of money. Hence it comes under the purview of O. XXV, r. 1 (3), Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Sonabai v. Tribhowandas Narotamdas (1). That case is on all fours with the present case. There all the authorities on the point have been discussed. Then as regards the other point that our application is mala fide and ought to have been pressed earlier, I submit under O. XXV, r. 1 the application may be made at any stage of the suit. Merely because we fail to press it earlier would not make our application a mala fide one. Refers to Debendra Narain Singh (Sinha) v. Narendra Narain Singh (Sinha) (2).

Babu Gopal Chandra Das replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was granted at the instance of the plaintiff, who is a widow, to vacate the order of the Subordinate Judge directing her to give security for costs in a sum of Rs. 500. The suit is for dissolution of partnership, for accounts and for recovery of the plaintiff's stridhan property. The only question that arises for our consideration in this Rule is whether this is a suit for payment of money within the provisions of O. XXV, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. Apart from the partnership, properties consist of immoveable properties. On behalf of the opposite party it is stated that any decree that results in the plaintiff's favour must be a decree for money and that, consequently, the suit must be deemed to be one for payment of money within O. XXV, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. There is no doubt that in this Court a suit for ornaments has been held to be a suit for money within the meaning of O. XXV, r. 3. We have also been referred to the case of Sonabai v. Tribhowandas Narotamdas (1) where it was held that a suit by a widow claiming to be a reversionary heir was a suit for money within the sub-section even though some portion, a smaller portion of the claim, was in respect of moveables. Now, we have looked into the other decision which was referred to in the judgment of the First Court in that case and Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in delivering the judgment of the suit, stated that the suits before him were not exclusively for money but would, each, result in a decree for money on the relief sought. But even so, we do not think that the present suit falls within the sub-section, which involves the taking of partnership accounts, dissolution of partnership and so on. I can quite understand where the main claim is one for money and other relief is only incidentally sought that a Court may come to the conclusion that the suit is one for money within the meaning of the sub-section. But speaking for myself, I am not inclined to extend the sub-section so as to cover a suit of the nature of the present suit. In the result, we think that the suit does not fall within O. XXV, r. 3 and that it is not a suit for payment of money. The order of the Subordinate Judge is, accordingly, discharged with costs—hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435—District Magistrate as Court of Appeal, whether inferior to Sessions Judge.

A District Magistrate sitting as a Court of Appeal is an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Court for the purposes of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 611, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 796 of 9th May 1921.

GROUNDS.—This is a petition for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Karnal, sitting as a Court of Appeal.

I entertain some doubt whether a Sessions Judge is competent to entertain such a petition. The question is whether the District Magistrate sitting as a Court of Appeal is an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Court.

Page 906 of Sohni's Criminal Procedure Code, 9th Edition, contains a note in the following terms:—

"A Sessions Judge has no power to refer to the High Court the judgment of a District Magistrate given in the exercise of his appellate jurisdiction, as he is not then an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Judge within the meaning of section 435—Khamir Sheikh v. Emperor (1)." The ruling relied upon is not accessible to me. On the other hand, the petitioner's Vakil cited Shib Das v. Emperor (2) where a revision of a District Magistrate's appellate order was accepted on the recommendation of the Sessions Judge without this point of law being raised. He also referred to Jalloo v. Emperor (3), Queen-Empress v. Karamdi (4) and some other ruling not relevant. I have also referred to Opendro Nath Ghose v. Dukhini Bewa (5) and Queen-Empress v. Laskari (6). Opendro Nath Ghose v. Dukhini Bewa (5) says that a Sessions Court is superior to all other local Criminal Courts; while in Queen-Empress v. Laskari (6), Straight, J., held that the District Magistrate was undoubtedly inferior to the Court of Session and suggested that inferior was substituted for subordinate in the corresponding section of the earlier Code, as it has been held that the District Magistrate was not subordinate to the Sessions Court. None of these rulings, however, specifically deals with the case of a District Magistrate sitting as a Court of Appeal and I would welcome a pronouncement by the Lahore High Court on this point.

Coming to the facts, the present petitioner was convicted by Lala Lachhu Mal, Magistrate, Second Class, under section 403, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 50 fine. This sentence was upheld on appeal by the District Magistrate. It was found by Lala Lachhu Mal that the complainant Banarsi Das owned a mare which disappeared while grazing. The following day he was told by Munshi that he had seen Sardar Ali riding the mare, and Kallu, the petitioner, walking alongside. After some time he took a panchayat to Kallu's village and Kallu promised to return the mare. At a second panchayat Kallu demanded and received Rs. 50 as bhunga. Ultimately he defaulted, and about a month and-a-half after the mare disappeared the complainant reported the matter to the Police and the same day lodged a petition.

The trying Magistrate discharged Sardar Ali, who is the son of Zaildar, and in his order of discharge he said that the evidence of Munshi was unreliable. Yet both he and the District Magistrate have relied upon Munshi against Kallu.

This witness Munshi was not mentioned in the report the complainant made to the Police or in his complaint or in his statement under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. In my opinion Munshi's evidence must be entirely rejected.

Hence the only remaining evidence against Kallu is that of four witnesses who narrate what took place at the panchayat in Kallu's village. Two of them also testify against Sardar Ali, but the trying Magistrate rejected their testimony against him. One of the witnesses, Nizam Khan, deposed that Kallu under pressure said ath roz bad akar jaisa kaisa hoga waisa kar dunga. The other three witnesses (of whom Suraj is a remote relative of the complainant) say that Kallu at first denied his guilt, then man liya. This is all.

In my opinion the evidence on the record is quite insufficient to justify conviction and I recommend that the conviction be set aside and Kallu who is on bail be discharged from security.

Mr. Raj Kishen, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—Under section 433, Criminal Procedure Code, the Sessions Judge of Karnal has referred to this Court two orders of the District Magistrate passed in the exercise of his appellate jurisdiction, and in the order of reference he has asked for a decision as to whether he has jurisdiction to do so and whether under the circumstances the words "any inferior Criminal Court" in section 435 include the Court of a District Magistrate. In Khamir Sheikh v. Emperor (1) a decision of a Division Bench is reported to the effect that the District Magistrate when exercising appellate jurisdiction is not an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Judge. The only published Punjab case on the subject appears to be Shib Das v. Emperor (2). In this the Sessions Judge reported an order passed by the District Magistrate, acting as a Court of Appeal, and the question of his right to do so was not raised nor discussed, but the Judge dealt with the report and passed orders on it. The word used in section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, was formerly "subordinate" and for this the word "inferior" was substituted, the reason being, as explained in Queen-Empress v. Laskari (6), that in some matters the District Magistrate is not subordinate to the Sessions Judge, and in consequence of this amendment there has never been any question of the power of the Sessions Judge under section 435 to deal with an order passed by the District Magistrate in the exercise of his ordinary original jurisdiction. The meaning of the word "inferior" has been discussed and explained in Jalloo v. Emperor (3) and in a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, Opendro Nath Ghose v. Dukhini Bewa (5). To quote from the Punjab ruling:

"Inferiority is different from subordination as laid down in section 17 of the Code, though, under section 195, the District Magistrate is in certain cases subordinate also to the Sessions Judge. It is true that under section 435 the District Magistrate has concurrent jurisdiction with the Sessions Judge in matters of revision, but the District Magistrate's powers are limited to Courts in subordination to him, whereas the Sessions Judge's jurisdiction may extend over more than one district and over Assistant Sessions Judges, if there are any. The language of section 437 also shows that the District Magistrate may be ordered by Sessions Judge to make the further inquiry directed under that section. Thus there can be no question of the District Magistrate's Court being one inferior to that of the Sessions Judge except with reference to those special cases where their powers are declared equal by the Code."

The powers of the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge as Courts of Appeal are not, and have not been, declared to be equal.

In Opendro Nath Ghose v. Dukhini Bewa (5) the following passage occurs:

"If we take the ordinary meaning of the word, there can be no question but that all subordinates are inferior to the authority to which they are subordinate; although inferiors are not necessarily subordinates. So within the territorial jurisdiction of a High Court, all other Courts are inferior to it, in a Sessions Division: the Sessions Court is superior to all other local Criminal Courts, and all such other Courts are inferior to it; and in a district all other Magistrates are by section 17 of the Code subordinate to the Magistrate of the District, and, consequently, inferior to him: and inferior as much for the purpose of section 435 as in any other respect.

"The High Court can under that section call for the record of any proceeding before any Criminal Court within the local limits of its jurisdiction; a Court of Sessions, may do so as regards every other Criminal Court in the Sessions Division; and the Magistrate of the District can do the same as regards every other Magistrate's Court within his District."

This view hardly coincides with that taken in Khamir Sheikh v. Emperor (1) and it appears to me to give the natural and obvious interpretation to be placed on the word "inferior." The District Magistrate is in no possible sense of the word superior to the Sessions Judge and if authority be needed this has been very clearly explained in Queen-Empress v. Jahandi (7) and Queen-Empress v. Karamdi (4). He is certainly not a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction except with reference to those special cases where his powers are declared by the Code to be similar to, though more limited than, those of the Sessions Judge. The only possible conclusions, therefore, is that he is inferior. The opposite view is based on more or less the same reasoning as that which led the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Nobin Kristo Mookerjee v. Russick Lall Laha (8), to hold that a First Class Magistrate is not inferior to a District Magistrate, a finding which was considered and dissented from in the Full Bench ruling Opendro Nath Ghose v. Dukhini Bewa (5). The words "inferior" and "subordinate" have different meanings and the only possible reason for holding that the District Magistrate qua an Appellate Court is not inferior to the Sessions Judge is that he is not subordinate in that particular capacity. This reason is, I think, unsound and is based on a confusion of ideas leading to the treatment of both words as identical and interchangeable. Following, therefore, the procedure observed in Shib Das v. Emperor (2), I deal with the cases reported by the Sessions Judge.

The facts are clearly stated in the order of reference . . . . . The District Magistrate has upheld the conviction of one Kallu who was sent up for trial together with Sardar Ali in spite of the fact that the principal witness against Kallu was rejected by the Trial Magistrate when dealing with the case of the co-accused. Without the evidence of this witness the remaining evidence on the record is quite insufficient to justify a conviction. I, therefore, accept the application for revision and acquit Kallu accused.

the right or permission by which it is used. In this case there is no question of permissive right as suggested by the Sessions Judge. The Magistrate has found that the path in question is a public path used by the public as of right. Under these circumstances the foot-path must, in my opinion, be considered to be a place. The rulings referred to by the learned Judge regarding gambling in a grove are not applicable. Opium Act (I of 1878), ss. 3, 9—"Opium," whether includes morphia.

Though morphia is not a preparation or admixture of opium, yet it is an intoxicating drug prepared from the poppy and, as such, fulfills the requirements of the definition of "opium" contained in section 3 of the Opium Act. [p 618, col. 1.]

Sita Ram v. Emperor, 59 Ind. Cas. 40; 1 L. 443; 22 Cr. L. J. 8; 2 L. L. J. 711, dissented from.

Appeal from an order of the District Magistrate, Multan, dated the 27th January 1921.

FACTS appear from the following order of remand, dated the 27th May 1921, by Justice Sir Shadi Lal, C. J. and Mr. Justice Moti Sagar—

This is an appeal against an order of acquittal, and the sole question for determination is whether morphia comes within the definition of opium as contained in the Opium Act, I of 1878. Now, the third section of the aforesaid Act enacts that opium includes also poppy-heads, preparation or admixtures of opium and intoxicating drugs prepared from the poppy. In Sita Ram v. Emperor (1) Mr. Justice Martineau held that morphia is not included in that definition, because it is neither a preparation or admixture of opium nor a drug, prepared from the poppy. The appellant, however, impeaches the correctness of the rule laid down in that judgment, and invites us to consider the question de novo and pronounce an authoritative opinion thereon.

It is clear that the rules framed by Government regulating the possession, sale and transport of morphia proceed upon the assumption that morphia is included in the definition of opium as contained in the Act, and there can be no doubt that the question raised in this appeal is one of public importance.

It appears from Watt's Dictionary of Chemistry, Volume III, page 639, that morphia or morphine is one of the constituents of opium, and that its quantity varies from 3 to 15 per cent. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that morphia is a preparation or admixture of opium, and that the drug can be prepared also from the poppy. This contention is controverted by the learned Counsel for the respondent who argues that, though morphia may be prepared from opium, it cannot be described as a preparation or admixture of opium, nor is it prepared from the poppy. Upon the record there is no evidence to show how morphia is manufactured, nor is there any material to enable us to decide between the rival contentions.

In view of the importance of the issue we consider that it is necessary to order an enquiry into the question whether morphia is a preparation or admixture of opium or whether it is an intoxicating drug prepared from the poppy. We accordingly direct the District Magistrate to record evidence regarding the various methods in which morphia is or can be prepared, and to certify it to this Court. The inquiry should be an exhaustive one, and both the parties should be afforded a reasonable opportunity to produce expert evidence and such other evidence as may be relevant to the decision of the question formulated above.

Dewan Khilinda Ram, R. S., for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The order of remand made on the 27th of May, 1921, which sets out the relevant facts of the case, must be read as a part of this judgment. The evidence now recorded by the District Magistrate shows that opium is the inspissated juice obtained from the incised unripe capsules of the poppy, and that morphia is one of the alkaloids found in opium along with other constituents such as meconic acid, fatty matter, resin, gum, caoutchouc and mineral salts. There can be no doubt that morphia is one of the components of opium and cannot, therefore, be called a "preparation or admixture of opium." It is, however, clear that it is a drug prepared by a chemical process from opium which is merely the thickened juice of the poppy, and it can, therefore, be properly described as a drug prepared from the poppy. It is true that in the process of manufacturing morphia from the poppy an intermediate substance, namely, opium or inspissated juice of poppy, is prepared, but that circumstance does not furnish any ground for holding that morphia is not prepared from the poppy.

We must, therefore, hold that morphia is an alkaloid prepared from the poppy, and it is beyond doubt that it is an intoxicating drug. While accepting the view expressed in Sita Ram v. Emperor (1) that morphia is not a preparation or admixture of opium, we are unable to concur in the conclusion that it is not a drug prepared from the poppy.

Upon the evidence we are of opinion that morphia is an intoxicating drug prepared from the poppy, and that it fulfills the requirements of the definition of 'opium' contained in section 3 of the Opium Act, I of 1878.

We may point out that the Notification No. 954, dated the 16th October 1916, referred to in the aforesaid judgment, has since been cancelled and we do not think that it can affect the conclusion reached by us on the strength of the expert evidence.

The result is that we accept the appeal, and, setting aside the order of the lower Court, convict the respondent Robinson of an offence under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act. Having regard to the delay in the disposal of the case and to other circumstances, we do not consider it necessary to impose a sentence of imprisonment. We accordingly sentence him to a fine of Rs. 100. In default of payment of the fine he shall undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of three months.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), s. 13—"Public place," meaning of—Publicity of situation.

A public place must be a place which is either open to the public or is used by the public and the mere publicity of a situation does not make it a public place within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act. [p. 614, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is whether the accused persons were gambling in a public place within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act (III of 1867). The map prepared by the investigating officer shows that they were gambling under a tamarind tree in an open space of ground on two sides of which there are public roads. On a portion of that land stood a hut occupied by a prostitute. There are other houses too standing near that locality. The land is not fenced in any way from the adjoining roads. It is not apparently used by the public, for when the learned Sessions Judge inspected the locality he found a quantity of newly felled timber lying there. The land is situated on the outskirts of Sitapur and forms an angle between two roads, but it is in no sense a public place, though it is exposed to the public view.

In Reg. v. Wellard (1) Lord Coleridge laid down that a place was a public place where the public were in the habit of resorting to it and no one prevented them from so doing. In the same case Grove, J., dealing with a case of an indecent exposure, said that the public place was a place where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not. It is, however, obvious that what is a public place may vary from time to time, for a private place may be frequented by the public and may become a public place for the time it is so used. Where a place is in any way dedicated to the use of the public, it is of course a public place, but where it is owned privately and no such dedication has taken place the question whether it is a public place would seem to depend on the character of the place itself and the use actually made of it. In Hari Singh v. Jadu Nandan Singh (2) where a person was found playing a game of sham horse-racing in the compound of a press consisting of an open space of land, without any fence, situated one cubit from the Bazar it was held that the place was a public place because there was nothing to show that the owner ever gave or refused permission to any one to come to his compound or that any one asked his permission to do so and that any one was prevented from doing so. In Sukhnandan Singh v. Emperor (3) where gambling was going on in the area occupied by a large grove where a fair was in progress at the time and visitors to the fair had penetrated to all parts of the grove, it was held that though the grove was private property it was for the time being a public place and gambling at such a place at that time was punishable. In Emperor v. Lali (4) (Criminal Reference No. 2 of 1922, decided on the 26th January 1922) gambling in a grove where a foot-path was running was similarly held to be punishable.

On the other hand, in Queen-Empress v. Sri Lal (5) a chabutra, which was neither a place where the public had a right of access, nor a place to which the public were ever permitted to have access, was held not a public place within the meaning of section 159 of the Indian Penal Code, though it adjoined a public road. In Emperor v. Audhia Prasad (6) gambling in a Zomindar's grove was held to be not gambling in a public place though there was a foot-path running through it, which was commonly used by the tacit permission of the Zamindar. In Ahmad Ali v. Emperor (7) it was similarly held that a private grove was not necessarily a public place, though it might be open to the public view. In Moula v. Emperor (8) and Badr-un-din v. Emperor (9) the proximity of a place to a public road or Railway station was treated as insufficient to make a place a public place, if it was not in the use of the public or the public had a right of access to it.

A public place must be a place which is either open to the public or is used by the public and the publicity of its situation is not a necessary element of the offence any more than public ownership. The learned Sessions Judge inspected the locality and came to the conclusion that the place was not a public place and was not in the use

Where a Sessions Judge agreeing with the assessors simply makes an endorsement that the accused is acquitted and directs that he be set at liberty and writes the full text of his judgment assigning reasons for his order a few days later, he commits an irregularity under section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but such irregularity does not vitiate the proceedings. Where there is an appeal by a Public Prosecutor or the Crown from an acquittal, the High Court sets its face against revision. But when an aggrieved complainant moves the Government to appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Government refuses, he can move the High Court in revision, but the latter will exercise its jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. [p. 616, col. 2.]

Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri, 27 Ind. Cas. 186; 42 C. 612 at p. 616; 19 C. W. N. 184; 21 C. L. J. 53; 16 Cr. L. J. 122, followed.

A High Court has no power to grant costs to the successful party on a revision petition brought by a private prosecutor against an acquittal. [p. 617, col. 1.]

Where a Statute gives a Court power to grant costs in specific instances and the same Statute gives the Court its whole criminal jurisdiction, it excludes any other right of granting costs. The Code of Criminal Procedure excludes any such right except where it confers it specifically, viz., among others, under sections 148, 433, 488, 526 and 545. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.—Revision is not an inherent power of any Court, the whole machinery of revision is a creature of Statute and has to be found within the four walls of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and a Court cannot posit an inherent power to supplement that purely statutory machinery by assuming the power of supplementing it by the awarding of costs. Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Sessions of the Tinnevelly Division, in Sessions Case No. 70 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for Messrs. Richmond, Chidambaram and Marthandam, for the Petitioner.—The lower Court has not written a proper judgment when it acquitted the accused. On the day of acquittal his judgment only set forth the findings of assessors and the Judge's finding agreeing with assessors. That is not a sufficient compliance with sections 366 and 367, Criminal Procedure Code. The points for determination and the reasons for the decisions should have been set forth. No doubt a fuller judgment was written later but that does not cure the defect.

The High Court has power to entertain revision petitions against acquittals and in practice has interfered.

Messrs. Nugent Grant, T. Rangachariar, S. Srirangachari, for the Accused.—The petitioner has no locus standi to move High Court in revision against an order of acquittal. The Government declined to appeal. After a protracted trial both the Judge and the assessors found the accused not guilty. No public interest is at stake.

As to the judgment the Judge has complied with the terms of section 367 (4) Criminal Procedure Code. The offence has been set forth and there is a direction that accused be set at liberty. The Judge has written a full judgment later. Any way it is only an irregularity that does not render the proceedings void.

The respondents are entitled to their costs. The petition was frivolous. The High Court has inherent power to award costs. West Ham Union (Guardians of) v. Churchwardens & Co. (1), Bombay Civil Fund Act, 1882, In re, Pringle v. Secretary of State for India (2).

Mr. Menon, in reply.—The Code expressly limits the power of awarding costs to specified cases. That means that all other cases are excluded. There is no power conferred under sections 435 and 439.

ORDER.

SCHWABE, C. J.—This is a criminal revision petition against the acquittal of the accused on a charge of murder, in a case tried by the Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly. The ground and the only ground on which we are asked to order a re-trial is that the learned Judge did not deliver in Court his full reasons for acquitting the accused. At the end of a three weeks' trial he left certain specific questions to the assessors. The assessors agreed that the accused were not guilty and, in answer to a specific question, they agreed that certain witnesses for the prosecution who were the principal witnesses were not worthy of belief. The Acting Sessions Judge then wrote a document headed "judgment" setting forth the findings of the assessors and adding his own finding agreeing with the assessors that accused were not guilty and they were acquitted. At a later date he wrote and prefixed to that judgment a full reasoned judgment dealing with the various points raised, the classes of witnesses and the reasons he had for believing or disbelieving those witnesses. It is argued that that is not complying with the terms of sections 366 and 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under section 367 a judgment is to be written by the Judge containing the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision, and the same section, sub section (4) dealing with acquittals says, "If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty." Now, the judgment that was delivered in Court complied with section 367 (4), because it stated, by a reference back to the question to the assessors, the offence and directed that the accused be set at liberty. Whether that is a sufficient compliance with section 366 or 367 is a different question. There is a dictum in Queen-Empress v. Hargobind Singh (3) that it is not. The correctness of that dictum has certainly been questioned in Tilak Chandra Sarkar v. Baisagomoff (4). I do not think it is necessary in this case to express any view on that matter; because, under section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no finding of a Court is to be reversed on appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in various matters including a judgment. In my view, assuming that the method adopted by the learned Judge in this case is not a full compliance with sections 366 and 367, it is a mere irregularity, and, in my judgment, it is not open to us to set aside the acquittal on that ground alone. But this case gives rise to another interesting question, namely, the powers in revision of this Court of setting aside this acquittal. Where there is an appeal by the Public Prosecutor or the Crown from an acquittal, the Court sets its face against revision; but where a private prosecutor, having no powers of appeal, comes to the Court in revision, it is certainly open to the Court to hear him. But it has now been laid down in a long series of cases what on that sort of application should be the guiding principle to be acted upon by the Court and, I think, it is very clearly stated in Fazudar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (5) by Jenkins, C. J. There he reviewed the practice of all the High Courts in India on this point and summarised his conclusions in these words: "I am not prepared to say the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere on revision with an acquittal, but I hold it should ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly, and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. This view does not leave an aggrieved complainant without remedy: it would always be open to him to move the Government to appeal under section 417, and this appears to me the course that should be followed," that is to say, that the private prosecutor can, if he likes, move the Government to appeal. In this case the representative of the Government has told us that, having considered the matter, the Government would not appeal. But, if he cannot get redress that way, he can come before this Court on revision; but then the principle is that it is only to be granted "where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice." Applying that to this case, how can it be said that it is urgently necessary in the interests of public justice that this acquittal should be set aside? The case lasted three weeks; it was tried out fully; the assessors were unanimous; the Judge was satisfied with their finding and acquitted the accused with, no doubt, a desire to prevent either this charge being kept longer over the heads of persons who were in his view not guilty and he was going to acquit, or, perhaps in order to avoid the necessity of letting them out on bail, to come back again thereafter to hear their fate. He took the course which, on the face of it, seems an eminently reasonable one of telling the men that they were acquitted, and, in fact, he gave his full reasons for the acquittal at another time and it ended there. Now, how it can be suggested that his having done that can amount to an urgent demand in the interests of public justice that the acquittal should be set aside, I cannot see. On these grounds, I think this petition should be dismissed. As regards the question of costs the case will be adjourned to to-morrow.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—I agree and only wish to add this that I am satisfied that this is a case in which we have a discretion and we need not interfere unless we choose; and, speaking for myself, I cannot agree to the course suggested, namely, that people who have been tried for their lives for a month and acquitted should be made to undergo a re-trial at the instance of a private prosecutor when the Government would not come forward and urge such a case in the Court of Appeal.

SCHWABE, C. J.—We reserved this case for further consideration on the question whether there is power in this Court to grant costs on a revision petition brought not by the Crown but by a private prosecutor against an acquittal, which petition has failed. If there were power, it is a case in which I, speaking for myself, would gladly grant costs, because, as I have expressed in my judgment on the main point in this case, I think this is a petition which ought never to have been brought and it is undoubtedly hard that persons, who have been tried for their lives and acquitted, should be put to much further expense on frivolous grounds. However, we have to consider whether this Court has power or not, and we have listened to very interesting arguments on both sides on the question. A Court may have inherent power to grant costs. That is clear from a judgment in the House of Lords in West Ham Union (Guardians of) v. Churchwardens & Co. (1), where the House of Lords held that they had inherent power to grant costs, and in Bombay Civil Fund Act, 1882, In re, Pringle v. Secretary of State for India (2), where Cotton and Bowen, L. JJ., state clearly their view that they had an inherent power to grant costs in the matter which came before them, although there was no statutory provision enabling them to grant the costs. But, in my view, the exercise of that inherent power must be always restricted and limited to this that, if the power of granting costs by the Court in that kind of proceeding is provided for in some way by Statute, the Court cannot, by invoking its inherent powers, extend the powers which have been granted to it by the Statute. Now, in this matter we sit in revision in criminal cases, first, under the Letters Patent and being constituted under the Letters Patent have powers given to us as a Court to hear criminal appeals and revision petitions by the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. That Code does provide in several instances for the payment of costs. Unlike the Code of Civil Procedure, it has no general clause providing for costs in every case. The sections providing for costs are, among others, 148, 433, 488, 526 and 545. The one, and I think the only one, that it is necessary to look into carefully in section 433, because there in a particular form of proceeding before the High Court in criminal cases there is an express provision that the High Court may direct by whom the costs of a reference shall be paid. The other sections are specific instances where power to grant costs is given, such as, in maintenance proceedings by a wife and in proceedings to recover stolen property. Having got those instances in which specific power is given to grant costs, in my judgment, the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius applies. Where in specific instances a Statute gives a Court power to grant costs and the same Statute gives the Court its whole criminal jurisdiction, I think, the proper rule of interpretation is that expressed in the maxim I have just quoted, with the result that, as the Code gives a specific right of granting costs, it excludes any other right of granting costs. There is some authority to the same effect in the three cases which have been quoted to us Nallappa raju Venkataramaraju v. Madisetti Achayya (6), Mahomed Dustagir Sahib v. Mahomed Karimuddeen (7) and Queen-Empress v. Yamana Rao (8), all of these cases in which this Court has refused to grant costs on the ground that it had no power to do so in criminal cases and with those judgments I agree. It is true that the Privy Council has frequently exercised the power of granting costs in criminal cases, but the Privy Council was given that power by a Statute and so the fact that the Privy Council exercised that power under the Statute does not in any way help in the solution of the question whether this Court has inherent power or not. On these grounds, I think, this petition must be dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me perfectly clear that we have no express statutory authority to grant costs generally in criminal matters and, moreover, as my Lord has pointed out, where the Code intends to confer the power of granting costs, it does so in terms. But then it is said that, apart from any question of the Code, the Court has an inherent jurisdiction to put matters right as between those who seek its aid by the granting of costs. The Courts of Equity in England always asserted their possession of such jurisdiction and constantly used it as is pointed out in the judgment of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in Burford (Corporation of) v. Lenthall (9). The Common Law Courts did not attempt to assert their possession of such an inherent jurisdiction and it was often emphatically denied, at any rate, by equity lawyers, but the House of Lords in West Ham Union (Guardians of) v. Churchwardens & Co. (1) undoubtedly laid down that, as by virtue of its position as the highest Court in the land, and not by any devolution of powers from the Courts of Equity, they had jurisdiction to deal with costs in cases whether arising on the Equity or the Common Law side of the Court. But, I think, that the main reason why it is not possible for this Court to adopt that line of reasoning and take upon itself the awarding of costs in criminal cases is this: Revision is not an inherent power of this or any other Court; the whole machinery of revision is a creature of Statute and has to be found within the four walls of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and, as far as criminal cases are concerned, I do not see how we can posit an inherent power in ourselves to supplement that purely statutory machinery by assuming to ourselves the power of supplementing it by the awarding of costs. I, therefore, am of the opinion that we have no power to do what is asked. It is for the Legislature to consider whether the power of revision in cases of the kind that we have seen in these proceedings has not outlived its usefulness, or, at any rate, whether it should not be safeguarded by the arming of Courts with the power, at least in cases where revisional proceedings are taken by private prosecutors and not by the Crown, of muleting them in proper cases by the award of costs.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 65 OF 1922.

June 15, 1922.

Present:—Sir Lalubhai Shah, KT., Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.

In re KARIYAPPA NINGAPPA.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 137, 537—Conditional order under s 133—Enquiry referred to another Magistrate—Final order passed by First Magistrate—Illegality—Consent of parties, effect of.

It is open to a Magistrate making an order under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the party to appear before himself or before some other Magistrate of the First or Second Class at a certain time and place to be fixed by the Court. If, however, he orders the party to appear before himself, he cannot refer the matter for enquiry to some other Magistrate and then pass the final order on the report submitted by that Magistrate. It is incumbent upon him, under section 137 of the Code, to himself take evidence as in a summons case. [p. 619, col. 2.]

The failure to act according to the manner abovementioned vitiates the final order and even the consent of the parties cannot cure the illegality. [p. 619, col. 2.]

Per Shah, J.—The record of evidence by one Magistrate and decision thereon by another is opposed to the scheme and provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code bearing on the point. [p. 619, col. 2.]

Criminal application against an order passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate Dharwar.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for the Opponent.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C.J.—In this case a conditional order was made under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Third Division, Dharwar, on the 5th December 1921, whereby the present petitioner, Kariappa bin Ningappa Savadi, was required either to remove the wall by the 21st December 1921 or to appear before the said Magistrate to show cause against the order. After that the parties appeared before him and it appears from the proceedings that the papers were forwarded to the Second Class Magistrate, Navalgund, for inquiry and report, because the parties expressed their inability to attend the Court of the said Magistrate. Afterwards the Second Class Magistrate recorded evidence and made a report. On that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made his final order. We think that the procedure followed in this case is irregular and the order should be set aside on that ground.

It was open to the Magistrate to direct the party by the conditional order to appear before himself or before some other Magistrate of the First or Second Class at a certain time and place to be fixed by the Court. But he ordered that the party should appear before himself, and having done that, it seems to me that, under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, it was his duty to take the evidence in the matter as in a summons-case. The Code does not provide that evidence can be recorded in the manner in which it has been recorded in this case even with the consent of the parties. The result in the present case has been that the evidence has been recorded by one Magistrate and the decision thereon has been given by another Magistrate. That seems to me to be opposed to the scheme and provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code bearing on the point. After the conditional order was made in the terms already stated, it was incumbent upon the Magistrate under section 137 to take evidence as in a summons-case, if the final order was to be made by him.

It has been urged by the Government Pleader that this may be treated as an irregularity and as the parties consented to the procedure it may be condoned. I am, however, unable to accept that contention. I think that it is a matter of substance that the evidence should be recorded by the Magistrate who has to decide the case; and generally speaking it is difficult to say that the omission to do so does not occasion a failure of justice. I am of opinion that on this ground the order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 17th February 1922 should be set aside. This will be of course without prejudice to any fresh proceedings that may be taken with reference to the alleged obstruction in a proper way under this Chapter against the present petitioner.

CRUMP J.—I agree. I do not think that it is possible to uphold this order by invoking section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. For, as I apprehend the matter, there has been a complete disregard of the imperative provisions of section 137. The conditional order under section 133 was made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 5th December 1921, and, on the 17th February 1922, he made that order absolute. Now, if we refer to section 137, it is manifest that the materials on which the conditional order can be made absolute by the Magistrate who makes that order are described in the language of the section as evidence taken as in a summons-case. That imports the necessity of the Magistrate taking the evidence before himself and he cannot, even with the consent of the parties, refer the matter for inquiry and report to another Magistrate. I am not speaking now of those cases where parties are directed to appear before another Magistrate of the First or Second Class, as provided for in the last paragraph of section 133 (1), for that is not the case in the present matter. The order having thus been made absolute on materials which are not provided for by the section and in a manner contrary to the express provision of the section, no consent of the parties can possibly cure the illegality. I, therefore, agree that the proceedings must be set aside.

BAZ v. EMPEROR.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 361, Exp., 366—Guardianship, lawful, kidnapping from—Kidnapping minor while under temporary custody of servant or friend—Consent of custodian, whether material—"Include," meaning of.

The fact, that a mother allows her minor girl to be in the custody of a servant or friend for a limited purpose and for a limited time, does not determine the mother's rights as guardian or her legal possession for the purposes of the criminal law, and if an accused kidnaps her from the possession of such servant or friend and marries her without the consent of her mother, he is guilty of an offence under section 366 of the Penal Code. The consent of the servant or friend is immaterial. [p. 620, col. 2.]

The word "include" in the Explanation to section 361 of the Penal Code is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors but rather to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian" any person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of the minor. [p. 621, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 22nd December 1921, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Pind Dadan Khan, District Jhelum, dated the 16th November 1921.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge of Jhelum, dismissing the appeal of Baz and Mawaz, who were convicted of kidnapping Mussammat Sardar Bi, a minor girl, under section 366, Indian Penal Code. Musammat Sardar Bi has been held to be less than 16 years of age, and was living under the guardianship of her mother, Musammat Nekan. The latter sent her with Musammat Hussain Bi and Ahmad on a visit to her sister at Dalelpur, and while on the way there Baz and Mawaz are said to have kidnapped her. Baz and Mawaz, after taking her from the possession of Musammat Hussain Bi, took her to Chandna, their own village, and there she was married to Baz, without the consent of her mother.

The Judge in Chambers ordered that notice should issue, because the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge was not clear as to whether the girl was taken away without the consent of Musammat Hussain Bi. In my opinion, it is immaterial whether Musammat Hussain Bi gave her consent or not. The girl was only in her temporary charge and the guardianship of Musammat Nekan, her mother, still subsisted. As pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, Musammat Hussain Bi could not legally make her over to Baz and Mawaz. She had no authority to do so. The girl had been made over to her merely in order that she might take her to her sister at Dalelpur

JAFFAR AYUB KATCHI v. EMPEROR.

As pointed out in Jagannadha Rao v. Kamaraju (1), the word "include" in the Explanation to section 361 of the Indian Penal Code is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors, but rather to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian" any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant or friend for a limited purpose and for a limited time, does not determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purposes of the criminal law. Applying these remarks to the present case, I am quite clear that the mere fact that Musammat Nekan allowed Musammat Sardar Bi to be in the custody of Musammat Hussain Bi for a limited purpose and for a limited time only did not determine Musammat Nekan's rights as guardian or her legal possession of the minor for the purposes of the criminal law. I, therefore, see no reason to interfere on revision and reject the petition. The petitioners should surrender to their bail to the District Magistrate of Jhelum in order that they may be recommitted to jail.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Cheating—Dishonest intention.

In cases under section 420 of the Penal Code the evidence must establish the existence of a fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of the commission of the act in respect of which the cheating is alleged. [p. 623, col. 1.]

Revision of the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Akola, dated the 23rd May 1922, in Criminal Appeal No. 77 of 1920.

Messrs. W. A. Jinah, M. R. Dixit and A. V. Khare, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This Rule is directed against an order convicting the petitioner of an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment with fine. The imprisonment was reduced on appeal to one month simple imprisonment. The facts found are these.

By a Will dated 1st December 1902 one Mohomed Hasham Seth left his estate in charge of certain trustees. Moula Dina Ayub and Abdulla Ayub were two of the trustees. They are brothers of the accused Jaffer Ayub. The managing trustee is one Ayub Karim. Matters seem to be strained between accused and his brothers and the managing trustee. A house belonging to the trust estate had been rented to D. G. Deshmukh Pleader at the rental of Rs. 20 per mensem. His brother K. G. Deshmukh, Pleader, is now living in the house. The two brothers are joint. The house rent was not regularly paid but various payments were made at intervals. It is said that arrears of rent were due from the 1st October 1917. This was demanded and accounts were settled with K. G. Deshmukh, as sum of Rs. 704-4-0 being found due for the period 1st October 1917 to 31st December 1920. In this accounting a deduction of Rs. 50 was made as already paid to a former clerk of the trust and Rs. 25-12-0 were also deducted as the costs of repairs paid for by the tenant. A receipt was drawn up and signed by the managing trustee. It was shown to Mr. K. G. Deshmukh about the 25th of August. He approved of it and gave the complainant Abdul Karim, who is the present clerk of the trust, a letter adressed to the accused, who was the managing partner of the family firm going by the name of Moula, Dina, Abdula, directing the firm, who were his bankers, to pay. This letter was shown to the managing trustee and the clerk then took it with the receipt to accused's shop on the morning of the 29th of August 1921. The accused returned the receipt and the letter stating as his reason for doing so that there was a mistake in the receipt as regard K. G. Deshmukh's father's name. He wrote out the correct name of the father on a separate bit of paper and gave it to the clerk together with the receipt and Deshmukh's letter. The clerk was asked to come again in the evening to receive payment, it being stated that Jaffer's brother Moula Dina would by then have the money ready. In the evening Abdul Karim, the clerk, returned to Jaffer with the duly corrected receipt and the letter. Jaffer is said to have read both letter and receipt, then put them into his pocket and told the clerk that no payment would be made until the managing trustee passed a receipt for certain rents said to have been paid to the estate by Moula Dina and until three beams belonging to the accused's firm which were in one of the kothas of the estate were returned to them. The clerk tried to get the receipt back and argued that if the receipt was kept payment should be made. But Jaffer refused to do either. The clerk then returned to the managing trustee, Ayub Karim, and reported to him what had occurred. The managing trustee sent his son Abdus Satar with the complainant but Jaffer still refused to listen. Then one Wali Nur was sent with the complainant but he also failed to get Jaffer accused to either return the receipt or to pay the money. The same evening a report was made to the Police who referred the complainant to a Magistrate, and on 7th August 1921 on his complaint the present case was started.

The Magistrate and the lower Appellate Court find that Jaffer Ayub's action in obtaining and retaining the receipt amounted to an offence within the four corners of section 420, Indian Penal Code. Stress has been laid by the Courts below on the fact that Jaffer's returning the receipt and the letter and telling the complainant to bring again in the evening indicates that the accused intended to get the receipt back and retain it. But I am not disposed to attach much importance to this incident of the morning as indicating any criminal intention on the part of Jaffer. But I think that when Jaffer took the receeipt he had no intention of paying the money but intended to retain the receipt to bring pressure upon the managing trustee with regard to a receipt for rent said to have been paid and the return of three beams claimed. The question is whether Jaffer's inducing complainant to give him the letter and receipt and meaning to retain the latter amounts to an offense under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

It has been argued here that Jaffer had no intention of retaining the receipt when he obtained it that evening but that the intention was formulated later on when his brother Moula Dina Ayub stated that the receipt should be retained pending the obtaining of the receipt for rent from the managing trustee. In these cases the evidence must establish the existence of a fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of the commission of the Act in respect of which the cheating is alleged. Though Jaffer that morning may not have intended to eventually retain the receipt without making any payment, yet the fact of his telling the clerk that on the receipt being returned corrected his brother would arrange for the money would make the clerk believe that on presentation of the corrected receipt the money would be paid, and if Jaffer, knowing that his representations would engender this belief in the clerk's mind and make him give over the receipt when he took the receipt, did not intend to pay, it seems to me that the offence is complete. It is clear that if the clerk realised that he was not to get the money he would not have given up the receipt. That receipt was a valuable document; for its possession would enable Jaffer or his client who owed the rent, if dishonestly inclined, to produce the receipt as evidencing payment. It is further clear that until payment had been made the firm which Jaffer represents had no business to possess the receipt. Jaffer's intentions must be judged from his actions. There is evidence to show that immediately on possessing himself of the receipt and letter he at once stated that he would not pay until his other demands had been satisfied. The defence story that no letter had been given by K. G. Deshmukh to the clerk of the estate, Abdul Karim, is unquestionably false I think the applicant has been rightly convicted. He induced the clerk to deliver the receipt to him on the implied agreement to pay the money and such action was likely to cause harm to the clerk and the managing trustee. The conviction, as I have already said, is correct.

On the other hand, the offence is little more than technical. Jaffer's real object in obtaining the receipt was to bring pressure to bear on the managing trustee with regard to other matters and, looking at the case from this aspect, it does not seem to me that any severe term of imprisonment is called for. I think the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if his sentence is reduced to the period already undergone and the order of fine is confirmed. I direct accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 159—Police diary—Investigating Police Officer permitted to refer to, to refresh memory—Defence, right of, to inspect diary.

When an Investigating Police Officer appears as a witness for the prosecution, and is permitted by the Magistrate to refresh his memory in respect of a particular question by referring to the Police diary, the accused is entitled to an inspection of that portion of the diary only from which the witness refreshed his memory, and not to the whole diary.

Revision against an order passed by the Magistrate, Arrah.

Messrs. G. C. Pal and Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The ground on which this application for revision was admitted was an allegation that the Investigating Police Officer read over the whole of the Police diary for the purpose of refreshing his memory and that when an application for inspection of the diary was made it was refused.

On reading the explanation of the Magistrate and the orders which were passed by the Magistrate on the application made at the time, it appears that what occurred was that the investigation officer, when in the witness-box, was asked about a certain date and the names of certain persons and the Court directed him to give the date and the names from the Police diary. This the witness did. The defence thereupon asked for an inspection of the whole diary. This was not allowed; but the Magistrate offered an inspection of the date and the names in respect of which the witness had refreshed his memory from the diary. This, however, was refused. I can find nothing in the law which entitles the defence to an inspection of anything more than that portion of the diary from which the witness refreshed his memory, and, in my opinion, there was no illegality or irregularity in the procedure of the Magistrate.

I see no reason to interfere and I would dismiss this application.

Section 46 of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, does not require that service of a notice under it must be effected by the officer of the Court himself placing the notice in the hands of the person named therein: the section in no way excludes any of the other forms of service permitted by O. V of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and allows a notice to be sent by post.

Mr. G. R. Bapat, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—As the provisions of section 46 of Act VII of 1918 which have been so completely misinterpreted by the learned Sessions Judge have now been put in a slightly different form in section 63 of Act XI of 1922, there seems little chance of the same mistake being made again. I do not, therefore, consider it necessary to go at any length into the reasons for holding that section 46 of the earlier Act does not require that service of a notice must be by its being placed in the hands of the person named therein by the officer of the Court himself and does not exclude any of the other forms of service permitted by O. V of the Civil Procedure Code. It suffices to point out that so far from requiring greater certainty that the paper reaches the hands of the person himself than the Civil Procedure Code does, the Income Tax Act allows it to be sent to him by post. I may perhaps add that if tender or delivery to the person himself were the only form of service allowed by section 46, the reference to the Civil Procedure Code in the concluding words of the section would be entirely redundant and meaningless, as O. V nowhere prescribes the manner in which personal delivery or tender is to be made. I set aside the acquittal recorded on appeal in the Sessions Court and restore the finding and sentence of the Magistrate, that is to say, I find Ismail Bhai guilty of an offence punishable under section 39 (b) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, and sentence him to pay a fine of one hundred and ninety seven rupees.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (h), 199,—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Enticing married woman, charge of—Complaint to Police, if sufficient.

A "complaint" within the meaning of s. 4 (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code can only be made to a Magistrate. Therefore a complaint to the Police of an offence under section 498, Indian Penal Code, is not sufficient for the purposes of section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the District Magistrate, Chingleput, in Criminal Revision Case No. 17 of 1921, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Second Class Magistrate, Poonamallee, in Calendar Case No. 325 of 1921.

Mr. F. S. Vaj, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The order of the District Magistrate cannot be supported. His view that a "complaint" to the Police is sufficient under section 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is erroneous. He has evidently overlooked the definition of the word "complaint" in section 4, clause (h). It must be made to a Magistrate. There being no such complaint in this case the First Magistrate was right in rejecting the case sought to be made under section 498 of the Indian Penal Code.

The District Magistrate also suggests that on further enquiry an offence under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code may be made out. But no such charge was brought forward and there is no evidence on record to show that an offence under that section was committed. Further enquiry cannot be ordered on the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something on record to indicate that such an offence was committed or there must be something to show that further evidence is available, which has not been taken, and which would support a charge for that offence. In this case, neither position is made out.

The order of the District Magistrate is set aside.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The plaintiff who is the appellant is a co-sharer landlord. He instituted a suit under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, (making his co-sharers as defendants in this suit) on the following allegations in the plaint :—

(1) The collection of rent in respect of the plaintiff's share is separate from those of his other co-sharers. (2) Although the collection of the plaintiff is separate from that of the defendants, the plaintiff in order to obtain the single rent-decree enquired of the defendants Nos. 3—13 (the co-sharer landlords) regarding the arrears of rent payable to them by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the tenants). But neither they said what amount was due to them nor did they agree to join in this suit. The plaintiff believes that the proportionate arrears of rent payable to them has already been realised by them. Hence he institutes this suit treating the amount due to him as the entire arrears of rent.

The amount actually claimed happens to be what the plaintiff claims as his share of the entire area. The defendants raised all sorts of pleas such as plea of payment etc., and also urged that the suit was not maintainable under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Sub-Judge, who tried the suit, overruled all the pleas of the defendants except the last one. He held that the plaintiff's suit was defective and did not conform to the rules laid down under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The District Judge on appeal by the plaintiff agreed with the view taken by the Munsif that the suit was not maintainable under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff has come to this Court in second appeal. The learned District Judge does not seem to have considered the provisions of section 148A. He found that there were conflicting rulings of the Calcutta High Court and of this Court and he was of opinion that the facts of this case agreed more with the facts covered by the Calcutta decision in the case of Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1). On the other hand, the appellant relies upon the case in Brohmanand Nath Deb Sarkar v. Hem Chandra Mitra (2) decided by the same learned Judge, Mookerji, J., who decided the case in Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1). All these cases, however, seem to have been considered by this Court in the case of Ram Dhyan Singh v. Pardip Singh (3) Mannk, J., went elaborately into the genesis of the section. The decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (4) lays down the principles which should guide the Court, in determining whether a suit really comes under section 148A or not. His Lordship Mr. Justice Manuk held (1) that the essential principles underlying the section 148 A are that the suit should in form be for the whole rent and in substance for the separate share of rent in arrears; (2). that the whole body of landlords are impleaded with the allegation that the plaintiff has not been able to ascertain what, if any, rents are due to the former. In such cases the whole rent due must, in the nature of things, be always a matter of speculation for the plaintiff and he is entitled to assert that he believes that his share of the rent due is the entire rent due and ask the Court to decide on the accuracy of that belief; if and when the impleaded co sharers appear and claim any arrears as due to themselves. We entirely agree with the enunciation of the principles laid down by Manuke, J., and we think that the facts laid in the plaint and the relief sought conform to these principles.

It is, however, contended that the plaintiff in paragraph 5 alleged that his share of the rent collection is separate from those of the other co-sharers, whereas the Court below has held that the collections of the plaintiff and of all the co-sharers were joint and, therefore, the plaintiff's allegation in the plaint upon which the suit is founded is false and the suit must be dismissed for want of cause of action. I fail to appreciate the force of this contention, for it is conceded that if the plaintiff had alleged what the Court has held that the collection of the plaintiff and his co-sharers was joint the plaint was entertainable and the cause of action for rent was not at all against the principles of section 148 A.

Upon the facts found by the Courts below and the plain meaning of section 148A, which is the result of great deliberations in order to meet conflicting authorities at that time, the plaintiff's suit comes well within that section; and it is, therefore, held that the Court below was wrong in dismissing the suit upon the ground that it was not maintainable under section 148A. We set aside the decision of the Court below and remand the case for disposal by that Court on its merits.

This order will govern the analogous appeals Nos. 041—43 of 1920. The appeals are decreed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 102, 115—Suit for recovery of price of fish removed from tank after declaration of title to fish—Money suit - Appeal, second, competency of—Declaration of title to tank by Court—Revision.

No second appeal lies from a decree in a suit for declaration of right to and recovery of the price of fish alleged to have been removed from a tank by the defendant, when the value of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500. [p. 627, col. 1.]

Although in such a suit it is open to the Judge to decide the question of title to the tank incidentally in so far as it is necessary for the purpose of giving relief to the plaintiff, it is not within his jurisdiction to declare the plaintiff's title thereto, and it is open to the High Court, in second appeal, dealing with the question by way of revision to expunge so much of the decree of the lower Appellate Court as declares the plaintiff's title to the tank as being made without jurisdiction. [p. 627, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Faridpore, dated the 4th of November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court at Madaripur, dated the 25th of March 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Satindra Nath Ray Chaudhury, for the Respondents, took a preliminary objection that no second appeal lies. The suit was for the recovery of the price of fish removed by the defendant and was, therefore, of a Small Cause Court nature and, as the price claimed does not exceed Rs. 500; a second appeal is barred by section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Babus Suresh Chandra Talukdar, Jogesh Chandra Ray and Mukundi Lal Ray Chaudhury, for the Appellants.—No doubt the suit was for recovery of the price of fish but in giving a decree to the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court has decided the question of title to the tank which was beyond the scope of the suit. As there has been a decision on the question of title the appeal is perfectly competent. But if your Lordships are inclined to hold that in the present suit the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to decide the question of title, I would invite your Lordships to treat my memorandum of appeal as an application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Babu Satindra Nath Ray Chaudhury was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary objection has been taken that no second appeal lies. In support of that objection it has been pointed out that the suit was described as a suit for recovery of the price of fish after declaration of title in respect thereof. The plaintiffs also prayed that the Court might be pleased to establish the plaintiffs' right in respect of the fish and to pass a decree in their favour and against the defendants for recovery of the price thereof, namely, Rs. 500, i.e., the amount claimed with costs and future interest, and in support of their view as to the nature of the suit they rely upon the first ground of the memorandum of appeal, namely, that the Court of Appeal has erred in law in deciding the question of title to the tank which was beyond the scope of the suit and in declaring plaintiffs' title to the tank in the present suit which was merely a suit for damages after declaration of title to the fish and not to the tank. They contend, therefore, that the suit being a suit for money less than the sum of rupees five hundred no second appeal lies. We think this objection succeeds. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

But in deciding this preliminary objection we may observe that the Judge in declaring the plaintiffs' title to the tank has gone beyond the scope of the suit. It was open to the Judge to decide the question of title incidentally in so far as it was necessary for the purposes of giving relief to the plaintiffs, namely, their prayer for declaration of right to and recovery of the price of fish, but it was not within his jurisdiction at all to declare the plaintiffs' title to the tank in dispute as he has done. We are asked to deal with this matter by way of revision and we think that it is right for us to do so. We, therefore, expunge so much of the decree of the lower Appellate Court which declares the plaintiffs' title to the tank in suit which was not within the Judge's jurisdiction to declare. The rest of the decree of the lower Appellate Court will stand.

The wording of sub-r (2) of r. 50 of O. XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to cover the case of a deceased partner and under it leave can be given against his legal representative. [p. 629, col 1.]

Sub-r. (4) of r. 50, O. XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code was intended to make clear the implication of sub-r. (1), and it does not affect the provisions of sub-r. (2). [p. 628, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C. J.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. An ex parte decree was passed on February 24, 192-, against the firm of Raghunathdas Mulji. The only partner of the firm that was served was Vaghbaraj. A summons was taken out by the assignees of the original decree holder, Keshavji Ramji, against the executors of Raghunathdas Premji for leave to execute the decree against his estate on the ground that the deceased Raghunathdas Premji was a partner in the firm of Raghunathdas Mulji. Raghunathdas died on April 23rd 1919, leaving a Will dated February 7, 1919. The present appellant obtained Probate on October 24, 1921. It appears that no notice of the suit was given to partners other than Vaishbaraj.

It was contended before the learned Judge who heard the summons that the original decree holder, Keshavji, had knowledge of the death of Raghunathdas Premji, at the date of the suit, the suit having been filed in August 1919, and further that even if he had no such knowledge, under the provisions of r. 50 of O. XXI, the transferees of the original decree-holder could not execute the decree against that part of the estate of Raghunathdas Premji which did not form part of the partnership assets. The executor did not dispute that Raghunathdas Premji was one of the partners. The learned Judge found that the original decree-holder had no knowledge of the death of Raghunathdas Premji prior to the filing of the suit. He further held against the present appellant on the construction of r. 50 and accordingly granted leave for the execution of the decree against the estate of Raghunathdas Premji.

The first point argued in support of the appeal relates to the question of fact as to whether Keshavji had knowledge of the death of Raghunathdas Premji before the filing of the suit. This question of fact is important in view of the provisions of O. XXX, r. 3, as under the proviso to that rule it is clear that if the original plaintiff had knowledge of the dissolution of the partnership, before the institution of the suit, the summons should have been served upon each of the partners. We have to decide this question on affidavits. The material affidavits have been read to us. On the one hand we have the affidavits of Shamji Gillabhai and Jagjivandas Oodhavji of March 9, 1922. On the other hand, we have the affidavit of Keshavji, the original plaintiff, dated March 11, 1922. It appears that Raghunathdas Premji died at Sihor, a place in the Bhavnagar State in Kathiawar. It is quite possible, however, that as Raghunathdas Premji had his business in the market where the parties were carrying on business, the fact of his death would be known. But the case put forward by Keshavji is that he did not know at the date of the suit that Raghunathdas Premji was a partner in the firm of Raghunathdas Mulji. That is a question upon which there is a conflict of statements in the affidavits, and in that state of the evidence it is quite impossible to say that the view taken by the lower Court is wrong. It seems to me inconceivable that if Keshavji knew that Raghunathdas Premji, who apparently was a well-to-do merchant, was a partner and that he was dead, he would not take care to serve the summons on his legal representative. The present appeal must, therefore, be decided on the footing that the original plaintiff had no knowledge of the dissolution of the partnership, which was essential to invite the application of the proviso to r. 3 of O. XXX.

Two questions have been raised relating to the construction of r. 50 of O. XXI. First, it is urged that sub-r. (4) of r. 50 ought to be so read as to give practical immunity to any partner unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer. Sub-r. (4) is really intended to make clear the implication of sub-r. (1). It does not in any sense affect the provisions of sub-r. (2) of that rule. The meaning of sub-r. (4) is that a decree against a firm as such will not affect a partner who has not been served with a summons to appear and answer so far as his other property is concerned. If the contention of the appellant were accepted, it would have the effect of abrogating the provisions of sub-r. (2). I see no justification whatever for such a construction. This point, however, was not seriously pressed after this aspect of the question was realised by the learned Counsel for the appellant in the course of the argument.

But it has been argued by Mr. Desai that sub-r. (2) applies only to the case of a living partner, and that the provisions of that sub-rule could have no application when the partner is dead. I am, however, unable to accept this contention. It really means that in a case where the decree is passed against a firm the estate of a deceased partner other than the partnership assets would practically remain entirely exempt from the liability to satisfy the decretal debt unless, of course, the partner has been served with a summons of the suit. That is a position which does not appear to me to be just nor does it appear to have been contemplated by sub r. (2). I am slow to accept the construction suggested on behalf of the appellant which involves such a result. Further, I do not think that on the wording of sub-r. (2) that construction is proper. That sub-rule provides that where the decree-holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub-r. (1), clauses (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave to execute it. It seems to me that the wording of the rule is wide enough to cover the case of a deceased partner, and leave could be given as against the legal representatives of a deceased partner. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

An application under O. Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and Hurnarayan Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay, S. N. Ray, S. Dayal and Sambhu Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite party, having obtained two decrees against the petitioners, took out execution on the 9th December 1921, and at the sales in execution of the two decrees, bought a house belonging to the petitioner for Rs. 200 in each case, and on the 10th of December deposited the earnest money. On the 3rd of January 1922 the petitioner, judgment-debtor, filed two applications which differ in a certain degree and which are as follows. In the case which is covered by Civil Revision No. 27 before this Court the petition runs as follows:

"The petitioners' property has been sold at auction, therefore, the petitioners have brought the whole decretal money with costs and damages into Court. A chalan may be prepared in office and granted to the petitioners so that they may deposit the money into the Treasury. Be it known that the petitioners field a petition for setting off this decree which was disallowed. An appeal is being filed in the Court of the District Judge. Let this money be not given to the decree holder until the disposal of this appeal."

The other petition was similar except that after the words "so that they may deposit the money into the Treasury," the words "and the sale may be set aside" were added. The Court on these petitions ordered that the challans should be granted and that the prayer as to the withdrawal of the money by the decree holder would be heard later on. On the 6th of January the opposite party deposited the whole of the purchase money and on the same date the petitioner put in his challan for the whole of the decretal amount in respect of each decree and the Court passed an order that the decretal amount should be deposited and that the petition with regard to the withholding of the money should be put up in the presence of thePleaders On the 7th it was directed that the question should be heard in the presence of the Pleaders but no order was passed until the 10th of January 1922. On that date the learned Subordinate Judge remarked that it appeared from the petition of the judgment debtor that he had deposited the decretal amount and prayed for setting aside the sale. This remark was made in both the cases. He then proceeded to say that, if the prayer in the petition had been merely for setting aside the sale, there would have been no difficulty in granting it: but in the second paragraph of the petition the judgment-debtor had asked for the money to be withheld by the Court until the disposal of the appeal which he had lodged. The learned Subordinate Judge held that this prayer made the deposit a conditional one and, although on that date the Vakil for the judgment-debtor had asked to disassociate the prayer for withholding the money from the prayer for setting aside the sale after depositing the money made in the same petition, the petition must be read as a whole and one prayer must depend upon the other and could not be divided. He was, therefore, of opinion that the deposit made by the judgment-debtor could not be held to be valid so as to set aside the sale because it was not unconditional. He then confirmed the sale and refused the petition of the present petitioners.

This finding was upheld by the District Judge on appeal. He relied on the case of Shakoti v. Jotindra Mohan Tagore (1). It is clear, I think, that the learned District Judge had not his attention called to the case of Dulhin Mothura Koer v. Bansidhar Singh (2). That is a case which is exactly on all fours with the present one, and I think I might rely on the following passage from that case:

"It appears, however, that the deposit was accepted by the Court without any question and as soon as objection was taken by the decree-holder, the petitioner withdrew the condition, so that the money became available for payment to the decree-holder before he had made any attempt to withdraw the money from Court. Under such circumstances, we are not prepared to hold that the deposit was invalid and not sufficient for reversal of the sale. The position might have been different, if, upon objection taken by the decree-holder, the petitioner had persisted in her effort to annex a condition to the deposit. The decree-holder was not prejudiced in any manner by the insertion of the prayer in the application of the petitioner that the money should be retained in Court, and he was substantially in the same position in the end as if such prayer had never been made. We must consequently hold that there was substantially a valid deposit within the time limited by law, sufficient for reversal of the sale."

Now, in the present case the deposit was made within the time allowed by law, and as soon as the decree holder put in an objection, the Vakil for the present petitioner expressed his readiness and wish to disassociate, as the Subordinate Judge said, the prayer for setting aside the sale from the prayer for the withholding of the money pending the disposal of the appeal.

The learned Government Pleader on behalf of the opposite party distinguished this present case from that in Dulhin Mothura Koer v. Bansidhar Singh (2) in that in the latter case the Vakil for the judgment-debtor stated his wish to altogether withdraw the prayer for the retention of the money, while in the present case he does not withdraw the prayer but wishes to make it a separate prayer. I do not think that this distinction can really affect the case. What was meant was that the petitioner wished his prayer for setting aside the sale on receipt of the deposit to be considered absolutely separately and as a separate prayer. It would have been quite open to him to have put in a petition for setting aside the sale on receipt of the deposit and after he had been granted the application, to have put in a prayer that the money deposited should be retained. As I have said the payment was made within time, and though on the 10th when the application was heard, the thirty days had expired, it was no fault of the petitioner that the delay in hearing the application deprived the petitioner from depositing the money with an application merely praying for setting aside the sale. Had the application been heard at once and decided, it would have been open to him to put in a fresh application. It is thus through no fault of his own that he was deprived of the chance of saving his property.

It is next argued on behalf of the opposite party that in one of the petitions there was no specific prayer to set aside the sale; it merely asked that the money should be received in deposit. Now it is quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge took this as a prayer for setting aside the sale; and in fact it was quite certain that that was the purpose of the deposit. Two cases have been relied on in support of this objection, namely, the case of Raoji v. Bansilal Narayan Marwari (3) and the case of Rayapati Venkatasubba Rao v. Kalapatapu Narayana Rao (4). Those two cases, however, must be distinguished, because there no application was put in to the Court at all. The judgment debtor merely went to the Nazir of the Court and deposited the decretal amount and the Court without any knowledge of his deposit naturally confirmed the sale; and in the former of the two cases it was not until three years afterwards that objection was made that as the deposit had been made the sale should, therefore, be set aside. I do not think that the decisions in those two cases can affect the present case.

The next objection is that no question of jurisdiction arises and, therefore, this Court should not interfere, but with this I cannot agree If the deposit was a good deposit, the Subordinate Judge had absolutely no jurisdiction to refuse to set aside the sale; and I find that the deposit was a good deposit as soon as the Vakil expressed his willingness that the prayer for setting aside the sale after depositing the decretal money should be taken as a substantive prayer without any condition attached to it. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Courts should be set aside and the sale should be held to be invalid and set aside. Hearing fee three gold mohurs in both cases.

VAITHINATHA AIYAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

S. THEYAGARAJA AIYAR AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, who can sue under—Prayer of scheme—Enquiry as to properties belonging to charity—Hindu Law—Descendants of founder of charity, right of, to sue or nominate trustees—Interest, question of, how determined—Trustee not fit to hold office—Interference by Court—Administration of charity—Denial of existence of public trust bona fide—Disqualification for appointment as trustee—Gift—Gift of income, whether gift of property—Conveyance, forms of, in Mofassil.

The mere fact that a person suing under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is a Hindu and entitled to worship in a temple does not give him interest enough to maintain a suit under that section. But persons belonging to the family of the founder of a charity have an interest in the family charity and can, therefore, maintain a suit under the section. [p. 632, col. 2; p. 633, col. 1.]

The question whether a person instituting a suit under section 92 of the Code has an interest within the meaning of its provisions or not must be determined upon the facts of each case bearing on the relation of the plaintiff to the charity with reference to which the suit is brought. [p. 632, col. 2.]

Assuming that, under the Hindu Law, the surviving heir of the founder of a charity has a right to nominate a trustee in the absence of any provision to that effect in the deed of endowment, it is a right the exercise of which a Court is not bound to uphold if, in its opinion, the person nominated as trustee is not fit to hold the office. The interests of a trust are supreme and a Court must have regard to such interests in dealing with the question whether the persons appointed as trustees are persons who can be properly entrusted with the management of the institution. [p. 637, col 1.]

When there is a gift in favour of a charity, it is within the competence of a Court, in a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, to make a suitable provision for its administration in any scheme that is to be framed, especially where there exists no such provision already. [p. 636, col. 2.]

The mere denial by a person of the existence of a public trust, if bona fide, does not by itself disqualify him from being appointed or retained as trustee of the institution. [p. 637, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 90 of 1916.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and K. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises in a suit filed under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code with reference to a choultry and the properties alleged to be endowed for the use of that choultry. The two plaintiffs are relations of the founder and the two defendants allege to be the lawfully appointed trustees under the Will of one Suriyanarayana Aiyar, who, according to the plaintiffs, was the last surviving trustee of this charity. Suriyanarayana Aiyar was one of five brothers, the sons of one Kalyanarama Iyer. The other four brothers were Sivasubramaniyar Aiyar, Venkatararga Aiyar, Swaminatha Aiyar, and Sivarama Aiyar. Kaliyanarama Aiyar had also several daughters, one of them being the mother of Thiyagaraja Aiyar, the 1st plaintiff. Second plaintiff is the son of the adopted son of another daughter of Kaliyanarama Aiyar. One daughter of Kaliyanarama Aiyar named Subbuthayi Ammal is still alive, all the sons and the other daughters having died previous to the institution of the suit. The first question which has been argued before us by Mr. T. Rangachariar, the learned Vakil for the defendants, is whether the plaintiffs have an interest within the meaning of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code sufficient to enable them to maintain the suit. He relies strongly on the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbu (1) which lays down that a person suing under the provisions of this section must have a substantial interest and not merely a remote contingent or hypothetical interest in the charity in question. Since that decision a Bench of this Court have considered its effect in Appeal No. 196 of 1918, the facts of which have much resemblance to the facts of this case. Whether the plaintiffs instituting a suit of this character have an interest within the meaning of section 92 or not has to be determined upon the facts of each case bearing on the relation of the plaintiffs to the charity with reference to which the suit is brought. In this case the plaintiffs are, as stated, the descendants of the founder of the charity. The first plaintiff, on the death of Subbuthayi Ammal, in the absence of Kaliyanarama Aiyar's Dayadees, would be entitled to succeed to the family properties.

Mr. Rangachariar has argued that there is evidence to show that there are Dayadees of Kaliyanarama Aiyar in existence. That evidence is of an extremely vague character, and, in any case, it is not shown that they are taking any interest in the preservation of the charity or in any of the affairs of the family generally. With respect to Subbuthayi Ammal also it does not appear that she interests herself in the proper maintenance of the charity. The first plaintiff resides in Madras but he occasionally visits Perumandi village, the ancestral home where the choultry is situate. The second plaintiff is a Pleader practising in the Native State of Pudukotta. He has several houses in Kumbakonam and he often visits the ancestral family house. No doubt it has been laid down that the mere fact that the plaintiff suing under section 92, Civil Procedure Code is a Hindu and is entitled to worship in a temple would not give him interest enough to maintain a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. In applying the analogy of that case to this choultry we have to bear in mind the further facts that the plaintiffs belong to the family of the founder and that fact would naturally give them an interest in the family charity. It has been ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Boidyo Gauranga Sahu v. Sudevi Mata (2) that the heirs of the founder have considerable interest in the maintenance of the charity, and the Hindu Law gives them the right to nominate trustees in the case of a vacancy and in the absence of any provision in the deed of endowment for the appointment of trustees. In our opinion, therefore, the Full Bench decision of this Court above referred to does not preclude us from holding that the plaintiffs, having regard to the facts proved in the case, have an interest within the meaning of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, sufficient to enable them to maintain the suit.

The next question argued by Mr. Rangachariar is of a still more general character, namely, that this choultry is not a public trust, but is nothing more than a private guest house built by Kaliyanarama Aiyar, and to a suit in respect of it, therefore, the provisions of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, have no application. The appellant's contention is that a public trust of this character was created later on by the provisions of the Will of Suri Aiyar already referred to, and that until then it was private property of the family or at the most a private trust which the members of the family were entitled to put an end to in certain contingencies. At all events it is said there was no dedication to public uses except under the Will of Suri Aiyar.

The question really depends upon the inference to be drawn from the evidence in the case, mainly the documentary evidence ranging from 1864, as there was no deed executed by the founder with reference to this choultry when he built it. Some question is raised as to who the actual founder was, whether the choultry was built by Kaliyanarama Aiyar or by his father, Rajappa Iyer. But the plaintiffs in their plaint state that it was constructed by Kaliyanarama Aiyar. We think that we ought to proceed on that basis, though there is evidence, even of witnesses on the side of the defendants, to show that the choultry was sometime known as Rajappa Iyer's. The earliest document is of 1864, a deed of partition between the five brothers, Exhibit A. The document speaks of this choultry as "Perumandy Chatram which is the Dharmam and which is being conducted in the family from the beginning and it mentions the Panjah and Punjah and lands of other description which are attached to the Chatram of which some are in the Perumandi village, some in Alankurichio and some in Thennalur village. These are the lands which form the properties mentioned in the plaint B schedule, Items Nos. 1 to 17. Chatram itself and the lands surrounding it form the A schedule. Then it is provided that the five brothers shall manage the Chatram according to the order of seniority. The document speaks of these properties being given to the Chatram. It is important to note this fact that income yielding properties were attached to this Chatram and were set apart for its maintenance, and the brothers while partitioning the family properties did not think of dividing the Chatram properties. If it was merely a private guest house as argued on behalf of the appellants one would not expect any properties being set apart for its maintenance, nor would there have been a provision for its maintenance by each member of the family in turn. It was pointed out that there was no provision made for the appointment of trustees after the death of the five brothers. But that cannot make any difference. When we find that income yielding properties are set apart for the maintenance of the Chatram it might well have been within the contemplation of the brothers either that they would later on make a further provision with respect to its management or that its management should be carried on by the succeeding members of the family in succession to themselves. The next document of importance is the Will of Swaminatha Iyer, Exhibit C. The construction of this Will is one of the questions for decision in the appeal, which we shall deal with later on. It is sufficient to mention here that by this Will the executors appointed therein are directed to feed poor people "in our family choultry in Perumandi now under the management of K. Venkatranga Aiyar." That is not the sort of provision which would have been made if this Chatram were the private property of the original undivided family. The burden of the maintenance of the Chatram would in such cases fall on the surviving descendant of Kaliyanarama Aiyar. The Will of Swaminatha Aiyar clearly implies consciousness on his part that the Chatram is a public trust created by the ancestor of the family. Very soon afterwards, i.e., in 1892, a deed of surrender, Exhibit B, was executed by Sivasubrahmania Aiyar in which he says: "as I have already left the Chatram belonging to our family and situated in Agara Perumandi village and the Nanjah and Punjah lands, etc., all matters belonging to it to the management of Venkatranga Iyer because of my inability to manage the same." In another place he speaks of Nanjah and Punjah lands "belonging to the said Chatram." We may mention here that much stress was laid by Mr. Rangachariar on the use of the phrase "Chatram belonging to our family or 'family Chatram' and similar pharases of that character used in this and other documents. But, in our opinion, such expressions do not suggest any inference against the existence of public trust with respect to this Chatram; all that they mean is that it was founded and maintained by the family. Then there is the Will of Venkatranga Aiyar executed in 1894, Exhibit H and by that Will a contingent interest is given in his properties to the Chatram and provision is made for the administration of the choultry and its properties by the Government in case the contingency happens, and it describes the choultry in so many words as a charity choultry built by the ancestors of the testator. No explanation has been suggested as to why this choultry should have been described as charity choultry and why its maintenance and of the properties attached to it should have been provided for if it was not a public trust. It could not be suggested that Venkatranga Aiyar would have thought of dealing with this choultry as a public charitable trust if, as a matter of fact, it was a private property in which other members of the family were beneficially interested, nor would he have entrusted the management to the Government in certain events if it was not a public trust." Suri Aiyar was the last survivor of the five brothers. He was a District Munsif and afterwards Subordinate Judge. He died after retirement from service in 1913. As already mentioned, the appellants' case is that it was Suri Aiyar who for the first time created a public charitable trust of this choultry and of the properties belonging to it. The Will, however, shows that he did not want to change the character of this choultry; on the other hand, what he intended was to keep up its original character and to endow it with some more properties of his own. He speaks of the choultry as his family choultry and of the building and landed properties as belonging to it. It was pointed out that he states that they were in his possession and enjoyment. That does not necessarily mean that they were in his possession and enjoyment as a beneficial owner but he only means that he was in management of them, as he makes it clear in other parts of the Will, For instance in paragraph 11 he provides for the management of the choultry and of the entire properties attached thereto. There is another document, Exhibit D, which is a deed of relinquishment executed by Sivasubramania Iyer in 1892 in favour of Suri Iyer. There he speaks of the trusteeship of the Dharma Chatram found d by forefathers and gives up all claims with respect thereto for the consideration of an annuity of Rs 20 to be paid by Suri Aiyar. Mr. Rangachariar objected to the admission of this document on the ground that only a registration copy was produced and that it was not duly proved. No such objection was taken in the lower Court and even in the grounds of appeal before us. All that is stated is that the lower Court did not construe the document properly. Then it was argued that this deed of agreement suggests that Sivasubramania Aiyar laid claim to the Chatram and its properties. With respect to this it has to be borne in mind that Sivasubramania Aiyar managed to get rid of the ancestral properties that fell to his share at rather an early date, and that he was depending more or less upon the charities or Suri Aiyar. It is evident that this man was trying to get whatever he could get from Suri Aiyar. It would seem that Suri Aiyar in order to save himself further worry or trouble agreed to give him a small stipend and obtain from him a deed of relinquishment in his favour. On the other hand, the recital to which we have referred shows that the choultry was regarded as a charitable institution. All these documents, therefore, to which all or some of the members were parties strongly support the case of the plaintiffs that the choultry with properties attached to it is a charitable trust.

(2) 41 Ind. Cas. 589; 40 M. 612; 32 M. L. J. 597; (1917) M. W. N. 429 (F. B.).

Mr. Rangachariar has relied upon a number of lease deeds and muchilikas in which the properties in dispute are described as ancestral property and enjoyed by the executants of the deed, that is, by one of the five brothers who at the time was in management of this choultry. But we do not think that any valuable inference can be drawn from these documents. No doubt the correct thing for a trustee of a choultry demising the charity properties is to describe the properties as belonging to the charity and to state that he was making the demise in his character as trustee. In this country the forms of conveyance are not strictly observed, especially in the districts and we should not be justified in attaching any importance to casual expressions in documents like Exhibits II series, VI series, V series and VIII series. Special reference was made to the Inam title deed with respect to some lands in Thirumallur village, Exhibit IX. We are asked to draw an inference in the defendant's favour from the absence of any description in the title deed as to the grantee being a trustee of the choultry. But we do not think that this is a matter of any importance as the description stands on the same footing, as that in the lease deeds. Much reliance was placed on the fact that in 1878 some land in Thennur village was usufructuarily mortgaged. But then, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, it has been redeemed and included even in Suri Aiyar's Will as property belonging to the choultry.

The other piece of evidence on which the appellants place much reliance is with reference to the exchange of a piece of vacant land in Exhibit IIIA and included in schedule A. The superstructure on the land was subsequently made a gift of to another person and purchased by Suri Aiyar under Exhibit III. In this very document it is stated that the superstructure and the building belonged to the Dharma Chatram. The documentary evidence on the whole is strongly in support of the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the choultry was a charitable public trust.

As regards the evidence of the actual use of this choultry, there can be no doubt the wayfarers were used to be accommodated there and that the Brahmins also were fed in the choultry. Even one of the defence witnesses, D. W. No. 5, an old man whom the Judge has believed on this point, speaks of the Brahmins being fed in the choultry and wayfarers being lodged there. No doubt there is evidence to show that Suri Aiyar, the last trustee, did not think that the feeding of Brahmins was very much of a charitable act, though he himself provided for the feeding of Brahmins by his own Will. It was also pointed out by the learned Vakil for the appellants that Suri Aiyar sometimes when visiting the village put up in this choultry and that some family idols were kept there. These are small matters and cannot have much significance considering that the choultry was managed all along by the members of the family. We, therefore, agree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that this choultry was a public trust from the very beginning and, therefore, the suit with respect to it and its properties is maintainable under section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The next question argued was whether the properties in A and B schedules form part of the endowment. It appears that one of those properties was sold long ago and Mr. Rangachariar wanted to adduce in this Court as evidence a document purporting to be the deed of sale with reference to the transaction. The defendants had not taken the trouble of finding out the document and producing it in the lower Court. That property is not claimed in this suit and there is no evidence to show the circumstances in which the property came to be sold. It might be, as suggested by the Subordinate Judge, that it was sold for purposes binding on the Chatram. We have already dealt with the question relating to the lands which are the subject-matter of Exhibits III and III-A and of usufructuary mortgage, Exhibit II. We agree in the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge that the properties in A and B schedules attached to the plaint form part of the endowment of this choultry. As regards schedules C to F some properties have been alienated and the alienees are not parties to this suit. So far as those properties are concerned, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, any finding in this suit cannot bind the alienees. This question is dealt with by him under the 11th issue. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that it will be open to the trustees appointed under the scheme to sue the alienees in respect of the alienated properties.

As regards the construction of Exhibit C, the Will of Swaminatha Aiyar, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the choultry has a claim to 7/9th of the properties. It was contended by Mr. Rangachariar that we are not entitled in this suit to go into the question of the construction of Swaminatha Aiyar's Will. But we accept the contention of Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar that under section 92, Civil Prosedure Code, when we are asked to frame a scheme one of the essential enquiries to be made is what are the properties belonging to the charity. We are not directly concerned in this suit with the administration of the Will of Swaminatha Aiyar. But as the defendants who are in possession of the choultry and its properties deny that the choultry is entitled to any benefits under the provisions of Exhibit C as claimed by the plaintiff, it is open to us to go into the question. It was suggested that the gift in favour of the choultry is not to take effect until the executors appointed by the Will have paid the debts. The Will was in 1881. There is not an iota of evidence that any debts of Swaminatha Aiyar remain undischarged. The executors appointed under the Will are dead and we think we may safely conclude that there are not debts left to be paid and that the contingency upon which the charity was to get 1/3rd of the income has arisen.

As regards 2/3rds of the income of the properties given to the wife which the Will directs to be utilised for Dharmam on her death, it is argued that the reference there is not to this choultry but to charity generally. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the word 'Dharmam' refers to this choultry and we think he is right in that construction. In view of the Will the choultry becomes entitled under Exhibit C to 7/9ths of the income of the properties.

It is next argued that we must hold that there was a special endowment or Kattalai, as it is called, created by Swaminatha Aiyar, and such a special endowment should not be mixed up with the properties originally dedicated to the choultry. No doubt the provisions of Swaminatha Aiyar's Will are to be carried out by the executors, Venkataranga Aiyar and Suryanarayana Aiyer. Both of them are, however, dead. If there is a gift, as we hold there is, in favour of this charity it is within the competence of the Court in this suit to make a suitable provision for its administration in any scheme that is to be framed, especially as there is no provision in the Will for the administration of these properties after the death of Venkataranga Aiyer and Suryanarayan Iyer.

It was further argued that the gift of the income from the properties devised under Exhibit C does not amount to a gift of the properties themselves but only creates a charge in favour of the choultry. We do not think, however, that this is a sound proposition. The gift of the income of a property without any limitation is a gift of the property itself. See Southmolton v Attorney-General (3), also Mannox v. Greener (4).

The last important question to be determined relates to the effect of Suri Aiyar's Will. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that Suri Aiyar, being a descendant of the founder of this charity, Kalyanarama Aiyar, as last trustee was entitled to appoint the first and second defendants and also one Jaya Krishnachari as trustees. Two issues were raised with reference to this question. One was whether Suri Aiyar was competent to make the appointment and, if so, whether the appointment was bona fide. And the 15th issue raised the question that if the defendants were appointed they should be removed from office. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the appointment of these two persons was not bona fide and has also found facts which show that these persons cannot properly be trustees of these properties. He says that Suri Aiyar did not believe in the utility of feeding Brahmins in the choultry, that his conduct also shows that he was not really interested in maintaining the choultry but that he was more interested in providing for a woman whom he calls his foster daughter, namely, Rangathammal, that the first and second defendants are brothers and hangers-on of Suri Aiyar, and that the 1st defendant who worked for him as a sort of gumastah acquired a great deal of unwholesome influence over him, and that Suri Aiyar put these properties in their charge not so much for the benefit of the charity as for their personal benefit and for the benefit of Rangathammal. We shall assume that Suri Aiyar as the surviving descendant of the founder was entitled under the Hindu Law to nominate trustees and to make provisions for the management of the trust. But it is a right the exercise of which the Court is not bound to uphold if, in its opinion, the person nominated by the founder's heir as trustee is not fit to hold the office. As laid down by the Privy Council in the well-known case from Rangoon, Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Ahmed Mcolla Dawood (5), the interests of the trust are supreme and the Court must have regard to such interest in dealing with the question whether the persons appointed as trustees are persons who can be properly entrusted with the management of the institution. These two persons, the first and second defendants, are absolute strangers to the family, though they alleged certain relationship to the family which allegation is found to be false. The first defendant is not a man of any means, and the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit is not satisfied that the second defendant's career was not such as to inspire confidence. Besides, as pointed out by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyengar, the defendants have persistently contended that the choultry was not a public foundation at all and that the property claimed as public trust was the private property of the family. The Subordinate Judge has found that the fist defendant aided and abetted Suri Aiyar in his violations of the trust. The first defendant certainly must have known that the choultry was a public charitable trust. He must have known that the travellers used to be accommodated there, that Brahmins used to be fed there and that it was regarded by the family including his master, Suri Aiyar, as a charitable trust and not as the private property of the family. This Court has no doubt held that the mere denial of the existence of a public trust, if bona fide, does not by itself disqualify the man from being appointed or retained as trustee of the institution. We are convinced, as was the learned Subordinate Judge, that this is not such a case and that under the circumstances the appointment of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as trustees should not be upheld and they should be removed from the trusteeship of this foundation. The third trustee, Jaya Krishnamachari, is dead. It will, therefore, be open to the lower Court in framing the scheme to appoint proper trustees for the institution.

Mr. Rangachariar argued that some properties mentioned in F schedule which were disposed of by Suri Aiyar by his Will did not in fact belong to him, some of them being properties belonging to some temple at Nagarkudi, some of them being service Maniams and that they were in the possession of Suri Iyer on behalf of the temples and the service-holders. These properties are mentioned in paragraphs 9 and 9 (a) of the written statement and there is no finding of the Subordinate Judge with respect to them.

Items Nos. 172 to 179 were purchased by Suri Iyer in execution of a decree for rent obtained by himself in 1912 and portions of Items Nos. 91 and 92 claimed in the written statement and the whole of Item No. 170 were similarly purchased by him in 1903 in execution of another decree. Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar for the defendant claimed these properties as belonging to Suri Aiyar by right of his purchase. These items belong to Nagarkudi village and the case of the plaintiffs was set out in their plaint that the Nagarkudi village belonged to Swaminatha Aiyar and was disposed of by him in his Will and under that Will, as we have held, the choultry became entitled to 7/8th property. There is no evidence to show that Suri Aiyer was in possession of these items before Swaminatha Aiyer's death. Presumably he was in possession as an executor under Swaminatha Aiyer's Will. It is argued that he might have purchased the properties from his own funds, but then it must be borne in mind that he mixed up the trust property with his own and alienated a number of trust properties referred to in C, D and E schedules. The defendants did not produce accounts which, if their case was true, would have shown whether the properties were purchased by Suri Aiyar with his own money or with the moneys belonging to the trust for the choultry. Under these circumstances we must hold that these items belonged to the choultry.

As regards Item No. 171, called Illuppai Tope of which Suri Aiyer was in management on behalf of a certain temple called Kailasanatha Swami temple and a Manyam belonging to the same temple and another temple of Varadaraja Perumal, i.e., Items Nos. 189 and 183, Suri Aiyar was apparently in possession of these properties as Mirasidar of the village. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff that as the choultry owns considerable lands in Nagarkudi village the trustees whoever may be appointed for the choultry should have the management of these items as Mirasidar, but we cannot accept this contention as there must be other Mirasidars: it is the entire body of Mirasidars who could make arrangement for the management of these properties as they may choose. It may be open to them to make over charge of these items to the trustees of this choultry if they so choose. But we cannot hold that the trustees would be entitled as of right to have possession and management of these properties. Seventeen Kulis of Item No. 8, 21 Kulis of Item No 19 and the whole of Items Nos. 24 to 26 belonged to Sellathammal, the widow of Swaminatha Iyer. Suri Aiyar would be the reversionary heir of Sellathammal and there is really no evidence upon which we would be justified in holding that these items belong to the Chatram. The Manyams claimed by the defendant—service Maniyam's, barber's, washerman's, carpenter's and watchman's are Items Nos. 43, 60, 78 and 84. The Mirasidars of the village would be entitled to the management of these Maniyams for the reasons already given in respect of Items Nos. 171, 180 to 183. We cannot hold that the trustees of the choultry would, as a matter of right, be entitled to possession of these Maniyams. The result is that Items Nos. 171, 180 to 183, 17 Kulis of Item No. 8, 21 Kulis of Item No. 19, Items Nos. 24 to 26, and Items Nos. 43, 50 and 84 mentioned in schedule to the written statement at page 4 will be excluded from the decree. In all other respects, the lower Court's decree is confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs, the costs to be paid by the defendants personally, as we do not think that this is a proper case in which the costs of the appellant should come out of the trust estate.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyangar has asked for special Vakil's fee but we cannot say that the appeal involved any points of special difficulty. The usual fee will be allowed.

Appeal No. 330 of 1918 will be dismissed but as accounts will have to be taken, there must be a direction that the defendants do render accounts of the properties from the date of the death of Suri Aiyar. The Subordinate Judge will expedite the appointment of trustees, as there are properties in the hands of the alienees and it is apprehended that some suits might be barred if there be any further delay. The costs of both parties in this appeal will come out of the estate.

Maharaja Bahadur KESHO PRASAD SINGH—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Previous application against one judgment-debtor dismissed—Subsequent application against all judgment-debors, whether in continuation—Application for possession by purchaser, not step-in-aid of execution—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182.

Where a previous application for execution has been dismissed because of a successful application made under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, a subsequent application for execution is an application in continuation of the previous application. But where an application has been made against one of several judgment-debtors and has been dismissed for this reason, a subsequent application made against all the judgment-debtors cannot be treated as an application in continuation of the previous application [p. 640, col. 1.]

An application for possession made by a decree-holder auction-purchaser after the confirmation of sale, is not a step-in-aid of execution, inasmuch as as soon as a sale is confirmed, the property vests in the purchaser and any further step which it may be necessary for him to take in order to secure possession is not a step taken by a decree-holder, even if he happens to be the auction-purchaser but is an application by the auction-purchaser as such and has, consequently, nothing to do with the execution of the decree. JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution. Maharaja Bahadur Kesho Prasad Singh obtained a rent decree against one Ram Khelawan Singh on 29th October 1914. After the decree had been obtained Ram Khelawan died and on 7th April 1916 the decree holder took out execution against his three sons, Dwarika Singh, Kamal Nain Singh and Murli Singh. In the execution petition Kamal Nain Singh was described as a major and Murli Singh as a minor under the guardianship of his eldest brother Dwarika Singh. The properties of the three brothers were sold on 31st October 1916 and purchased by the decree holder, and on 5th December 1916 the sale was confirmed. On 7th September 1918 an application to set aside the sale was made by the three brothers on the ground that Kamal Nain Singh was a minor at the date of the sale and that Murli Singh was not properly represented by his brother Dwarika Singh. The application was successful and on 4th February 1920 the sale was set aside. On 9th October 1920 the decree-holder filed the application for execution with which we are now concerned. The execution was against Kamal Nain Singh, who was by this time admittedly major, Dwarika Singh, and Murli Singh minor represented by Dwarika Singh. Kamal Nain filed an objection on the ground that the application for execution was barred by limitation inasmuch as the first application made on the 7th April 1916 was not an application in accordance with law. The Executing Court overruled the objection finding that the application made on 9th October 1920 was an application in continuation of the first application of 7th April 1916, that Art. 181 of the Limitation Act applied and limitation accordingly ran from the date on which the sale was set aside, namely, the 4th February 1920. Against this decision the decree-holder appealed to the District Judge who has held that the application with which we are now concerned is an application in continuation of the previous application. He has, however, found that Art. 181 of the Limitation Act does not apply but that although Art. 182 applies limitation runs from the date on which the decree-holder applied for delivery of possession, as this was the last step taken in aid of execution and as this application was made on the 5th February 1918 the present application is not barred. The judgment-debtor has again appealed to this Court.

It is admitted by the learned Vakil for the appellant that if the present application is an application in continuation of the first application for execution limitation will run from the date of setting aside the sale and, consequently, the present application is within time. But he contends first that the present application cannot be treated as an application in continuation of the first application; and, secondly, that if this is so, the present application is barred because an application for delivery of possession is not a step-in-aid of execution and that limitation must run at latest from the date of the confirmation of the sale, namely, the 5th December 1916.

With regard to the first point, in my opinion, the present application for execution cannot be treated as an application made in continuation of the first application. It has been held that where a previous application for execution has been dismissed because of a successful application made under O. XXI, r. 90, a subsequent application for execution is an application in continuation of the previous application; but I can find no case in which, where an application has been made against one of several judgment-debtors and has been dismissed for this reason, a subsequent application made against the whole of the judgment-debtors has been treated as an application in continuation of the previous application. It seems to me that in the present case the first application for execution was ab initio a bad application and, consequently, the subsequent application cannot be an application made in continuation.

I now come to the second point and the sole question here is whether an application for possession after confirmation of sale made by a decree-holder auction-purchaser is a step-in aid of execution. There is much divergence of opinion in the different High Courts on this point. In Calcutta in the cases in which the question directly arose it has been decided that such an application is a step-in-aid. I may refer to the case of Sariatoolla Molla v. Raj Kumar Roy (1). In the Allahabad High Court the question has been directly considered in three cases, Moti Lal v. Makund Singh (2), Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (3) and the latest decision in the case of Babu Ram v. Pearey Lal (4). In the case of Moti Lal v. Makund Singh (2) it was held that such an application was a step in-aid. In the case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (3), which is a Full Bench decision, three Judges held that it was not a step-in-aid and two Judges that it was. But in the case of Babu Ram v. Pearey Lal (4) it has been held by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the question was not definitely before the Full Bench in the case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (3) and they have confirmed the decision arrived at in the case of Moti Lal v. Makund Singh (2). In Bombay and Madras the decisions appear to be that such an application is a step in-aid. So far as this Court is concerned, the point has never definitely been decided but the principle was considered in the case of Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (5), a Full Bench decision of this Court, and if we accept the principle of that decision, there can be no doubt that such an application is not a step-in-aid of execution. The question in that case was whether an appeal lay from an order under O. XXI, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code when the decree-holder was the auction purchaser, and, in that case, following the majority of decisions in the Calcutta High Court, this Court has held that an appeal does not lie. The reason for this is that the question is either one not relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree or because it is not a question arising between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder as such but between the judgment-debtor and the auction purchaser as such. If we apply this principle to the question of whether an application made by a decree-holder auction-purchaser for delivery of possession is a step-in-aid of execution the answer must, in my opinion, certainly be in the negative and this is exactly what we would except from the wording of the rule itself. Order XXI, rule 95, applies to an application made by the purchaser and an application made by the purchaser cannot, in my opinion, possibly be read as an application by a decree-holder to take some step-in-aid of execution, whether the purchaser be the decree-holder or an outsider. As soon as the sale is confirmed, the property vests in the purchaser and any further step which it may be necessary for him to take in order to secure possession is not a step taken by a decree holder even if he happens to be the auction purchaser but is an application by the auction-purchaser as such and has consequently nothing to do with the execution of the decree. I have not specifically referred to the cases in the Calcutta High Court because they have all been referred to in the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (5).

For the reasons I have given I would aside the order of the learned District Judge and that of the Subordinate Judge and would decree this appeal with costs.

Messrs. S. C. Mittra and S. K. Mitra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The land in dispute in the suit giving rise to this second appeal was originally the kasht land of the defendant, but in 1898 was sold in execution of rent decrees obtained by the 16 annas proprietor of the village, the Mohunt of Patepur, to Sheonandan Prasad Singh and Raghunandan Prasad Singh, who, on the 3rd January 1899, mortgaged the land under a simple mortgage-bond to the plaintiff In 1906 the plaintiff obtained a decree on his mortgage and at the sale in execution of his decree purchased the land, and a few days after delivery of possession, on the 29th January 1914, leased it to the Bahuara Opium Factory. When the Factory sought to take possession the defendant resisted, and there was a dispute which culminated in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code proceedings and an order declaring the Factory to be in possession on 18th July 1914. After that the Factory surrendered its lease to the plaintiff, who, however, owing to the resistance of the defendant, was unable to get possession. The plaintiff then brought this suit for a declaration of his title and for recovery of possession dating his dispossession from the 2nd November 1914. In the alternative he prayed that a fair rent might be fixed as payable by the defendant, and that he should be awarded a decree for arrears of rent from 1322 to 1325 Fasli.

The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation since the plaintiff had never held possession of the plaint lands. He denied that Raghunandan and Sheonandan had been in possession after purchase in a sale under a decree for rent; or that the plaintiff had bought the land and taken possession in execution of mortgage-decree. He claimed title by adverse possession.

The Munsif in a very short judgment, and for reasons which are quite unconvincing, found that the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain khas possession of the land, and, for some unexplainable reason, held that the plaintiff was entitled to rent from the defendant, as his tenant. He held that the defendant was not entitled to the land by adverse possession.

On appeal and cross-appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the defendant was admittedly an occupancy tenant originally and, if he remained in possession of the disputed land after the sale in execution of the rent-decree, he was a trespasser, and the plaintiff must come to Court within 12 years from the date of sale under the rent decree, unless he could prove possession within 12 years. He upheld the Munsif's finding that the writ of delivery of possession made to the plaintiff after his purchase in the mortgage-decree could not have any bearing upon the question of the defendant's actual possession, as the defendant was not a party to the mortgage-decree. He held also that the order passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, did not necessarily amount to an ouster of the defendant, and that an admission of the plaintiff in a title suit in 1919 showed that the defendant was in possession all along. He relied also on certain rent receipts granted by the Mohunt of Patepur to the defendant. He found that the defendant had been in possession of the land since 1898 as a trespasser, and that his possession was adverse to the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiff and to the plaintiff himself for more than 12 years. He decided that the plaintiff's suit was time-barred.

Now, it appears that the sale under the rent decree was in 1898, and the mortgage to the plaintiff was executed in 1899, so that, if in spite of the sale to Raghunandan and Sheonandan, the defendant remained in possession of land the commencement of his adverse possession as against the purchasers was prior to the mortgage to the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to be in error in thinking that, for the purposes of computing the duration of adverse possession against a mortgagee who has, under a simple mortgage-bond, brought the property to sale and purchased it himself, the duration of adverse possession held against the mortgagor before the sale can be tacked on to the duration of adverse possession against the mortgage after his purchase in execution of the mortgage-decree.

Mr. Mitter has cited the cases of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1), Viyapuri v. Sonamma Boi Ammani (2) and Priya Sakhi Debi v. Bireshwar Samanta (3). These cases clearly show that when, after a simple mortgage has been granted, a third person commences to acquire title by adverse possession against the mortgagor, the period of adverse possession against the mortgagor cannot operate against the mortgagee while he is not entitled to possession. Adverse possession operates against a mortgagee only when the mortgagee is entitled to possession and time runs against him from the date when he is entitled to enter upon the land.

A careful consideration of these cases shows, however, that the decisions do not relate to a case where adverse possession against the mortgagor has commenced prior to the execution of the simple mortgage, and in fact in the case of Priya Sakhi Debi v. Bireshwar Samanta (3), Sanderson, C. J., points out that, if in the case of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1) the possession by the Collector previous to the mortgage could have been treated as possession by the defendant who claimed adversely, the operation of adverse possession would not have been affected by the subsequent grant of the mortgage security.

The case of Nallamuttu Pillai v. Betha Naicken (4) was distinguished on this very ground. Mukerjee, J., in the same case points out that in the case of the grant of a mortgage by a person previously dispossessed "the adverse possession which had commenced to operate against the mortgagor would not, by the grant of the mortgage, be arrested, but would operate equally against the mortgagee, for in the words of Lord Kingsdown in Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (5), 'a cause of action is not prolonged by mere transfer of the title.'"

If, then, the defendant was not in possession as against Sheonandan and Raghunandan prior to the mortgage by them to the plaintiff in 1899, the period during which they were in possession up to 1913 or 1914, when the plaintiff executed his decree and obtained writ for delivery of possession, cannot be counted as against him in respect of adverse possession.

In 1914, the Factory, the lessee, was declared to be in possession, and, if the Factory was in possession as lessee, that possession would count as possession of the plaintiff.

Both the lower Courts have failed to appreciate the questions to be decided in the case, and have failed to come to a distinct finding necessary for the answer to these questions. It was necessary to find whether the defendants were in possession adverse to Raghunandan and Sheonandan prior to the mortgage. It is true that the learned Subordinate Judge has stated that the plaintiff admitted in a written statement in a suit instituted in 1919 that the defendant had been all along in possession, but the learned Subordinate Judge's statement is based on no evidence. What the plaintiff stated in his written statement was that defendant was in possession of the land at the time the written statement was drawn up, that is to say, in 1919. There is no statement there that the defendant had all along been in possession.

With regard to the order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a finding should be come to whether the Factory was in fact in possession, if such a finding is possible on the evidence.

It is clear to me that the Subordinate Judge has misconceived the points to be decided in the case, and I, therefore, set aside his decree and remand the case for a re-hearing of the appeal and disposal according to law.

The appeal is allowed, costs will abide the result.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 19th January 1921, in Civil Suit No. 13 of 1920.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants purchased certain village shares belonging to the second defendant from another person who had bought them at an auction sale held by the Collector in execution of a decree. They were obstructed in taking possession by the first defendant, whose title rested on a deed of lease, and they have, therefore, claimed possession in this suit. The plea in defence on which the suit was decided in both the lower Courts was that the execution proceedings were once dismissed in default by the Collector and his restoration of them to the file was without jurisdiction and did not restore the attachment, after it had been raised by the dismissal, so that the sale was of property not legally under attachment and, therefore, void.

It appears that when the execution case was transferred to the Collector, on the first date fixed for hearing the matter, which was 22nd October 1917, he passed the following order. "Decree-holder absent. He knew of the date. Judgment-debtor absent though served. Case be struck off in default and Civil Court informed." Later in the same day the Collector passed another order in these words: "Mr. Chorghade appears for the decree holder who is absent on account of illness. Case ex parte against judgment debtor. Valuation statement has not been sent. It be sent at once. Case for 15th November 1917."

Both the lower Courts considered themselves bound by a judgment delivered on 19th March 1918 by Findlay, A. J. C., in Dalchand v. Narayan (1) (Second Appeal

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 237.

No. 326 of 1917) which has not appeared in the Nagpur Law Reports but has been printed in an unofficial publication. That is to the effect that the passing of an order of dismissal in default by the Collector, though re-called on the same day and though known to no body in the world but the decree-holder's Pleader, in some occult way caused the attachment which did in fact continue to rest on the property and to have exactly the same practical and material effect on it as it had before, to lose some subtle but essential property of legality to such an extent that the sale duly held later was entirely void.

The appellants seek first to attack the judgment of the lower Appellate Court by contending that the Collector has no power to dismiss execution proceedings before him in default, and, therefore, the dismissal was of no effect, so that it does not matter whether the restoration was within his powers or not. It was not contended in the original memorandum of grounds of appeal that the order of restoration is right even if the Collector had power to dismiss the case in default, or that the illegality of the attachment or even the absence of an attachment is not such an irregularity as would vitiate the sale. These points were, however, taken in a supplementary memorandum filed at the hearing.

I have considered all these matters at considerable length in a judgment delivered on 19th March 1921, in Harlal Tewari v. Narayan (2). The following is a succinct statement of my conclusions:—

(i). In execution proceedings transferred to him by a Civil Court a Collector has power to dismiss the application under r. 57 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, and on such a dismissal the attachment ceases.

(ii). Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to execution proceedings, and a Court is not empowered thereby to restore to the file under O. IX an application in execution which has been dismissed in default. Manaki v. Surajmal (3) distinguished. Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (4) and Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (5) followed.

(5) 19 Ind. Cas. 688; 41 C. 1; 18 C. W. N. 343.

(iii). In a proper case, however, a Court has the inherent power mentioned in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to restore to the file an application for execution which has been dismissed in default, and if the attachment has not in fact been removed such a restoration will revive it.

Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6), Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mall (7), and Sonubai Baburao v. Shivajirao Krishnarao (8), followed.

(iv). When a sale has been duly held, without material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it, it cannot be considered a nullity merely by reason of a flaw in the attachment or the absence of an attachment. Munisppa Naik v. Subramania Ayyan (9), Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Muzaffar Hossein (10), Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (11), followed.

I have re-considered all these matters and can find no reason for taking any other view in regard to any one of them as applied to the present case, except possibly the applicability of the principle mentioned in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to the order of the Collector in this case restoring the execution case to the file. In Ritu Kuer v. Alakhdeo Narain Singh (12), it was held that an execution case ought not to be restored in that way, because the refusal to restore it would not lead to any injustice, as the decree-holder in most cases would merely have to file a fresh application for execution and make a fresh attachment to be restored to the position he was in before the dismissal due to his default. In Harlal Tewari's case (2), that was not so, as the original judgment-debtor had died after the attachment was made and the property could not have been attached again in the hands of his legal representatives. In the present case, however, I am by no means prepared to say that it would not have been unjust to force the decree-holder to go to all the trouble and expense of a fresh attachment and to take all the risks attending it on account of the very venial default of which he was guilty.

But even if the Collector's order of restoration was entirely wrong and ultra vires there are two very good reasons why that cannot affect the decision of the present suit. One is the applicability of the principle stated in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to the case itself as a whole. It would be not only allowing but aiding the defendant Manik Rao to misuse the process of the Court to his own unrighteous advantage to hold that the sale was void merely because for an hour or two at the most there was an order in existence dismissing the application, which made not one atom of difference to anybody in the world and was only known to the decree-holder. The other reason is that I still hold entirely to the view stated in Harlal Tewari's case (2) that a sale duly held, without material irregularity in publishing or conducting it, cannot be considered a nullity merely by reason of a flaw in the attachment or the absence of an attachment, so that in this case it really does not matter whether the Collector has power to dismiss the application in default or to restore it after dismissal or not.

The appeal having been decided on a preliminary point, and that decision having been set aside, the appeal must be remanded for a decision on the merits under r. 23 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court will presumably remand the case to the first Court under the same rule. All costs incurred by the appellants in this Court will be paid by the two respondents, each of whom will pay his own costs. There will be no certificate for the refund of Court-fees.

Witness—Summons—Wrong person summoned—Court's duty to re-summon right witness on application—Irregularity—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O XXI, r. 2, cls. (2), (3)—Judgment-debtor's application for enquiry as to payment out of Court—Order dismissing application—Appeal—Certificate of payment—Application of cls. (2), (3).

Where a summons is issued for the attendance as a witness of a person who is cognizant of the fact on which his testimony is required, and a person unable to give relevant evidence appears, it is the duty of the Court, on the application of the party at whose instance the summons was issued, to enforce the attendance of the right witness, and the refusal of the Court to do so amounts to a grave irregularity. [p. 647, col. 2]

An order dismissing a judgment-debtor's application made under r. 2 (2) of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, for certifying payment said to have been made to the decree-holder out of Court amounts to a decree passed in a proceeding under section 47 of the Code and is appealable as such. [p. 646, col. 2.]

A judgment-debtor's application under clause (2) of r. 2, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, inviting an enquiry as to the payment alleged to have been made by him to the decree-holder cannot be thrown out on the ground that the payment was not certified under clause 3 of that rule, inasmuch as the stage contemplated by that clause does not arise until the question raised in the enquiry is decided. JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of an order of the District Judge of Patna dated the 8th August 1921 whereby he dismissed an appeal preferred before him against an order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 20th April 1921. The appellant is the judgment-debtor before us against whom an execution of a decree was levied. In the course of this execution he filed an application under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure in which he stated and prayed that a certain sum be duly recorded and certified as payment of the decree in question. He also filed a receipt granted by the decree-holder, Sukhan Singh, purporting to bear his thumb impression, his (Sukhan's) grandson, Sheonandan Singh having signed the said receipt for him. The decree-holder denied having received the money or granted the receipt in question. He also stated that the thumb impression on the receipt was not his,

JADUNANDAN SINGH v. SHIONANDAN PRASAD SINGH.

In order to prove that the thumb impression was that of the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor applied for examination of a finger print expert. The expert was accordingly examined who took sample thumb impressions of the decree-holder, but he could not give any definite opinion, inasmuch as the impression on the receipt appeared to be blurred. He got the impression enlarged and photographed and then the thumb impressions of the decree-holder which were taken by him were compared in the Government Finger Print Bureau and a report was submitted to the Court by the Inspector General of Crimes. The report stated that the thumb impression on the receipt in question was similar to those on the bonds B and C which were the admitted thumb impressions of the decree-holder. The judgment debtor then applied to the Court for summoning an expert from the Government Finger Print Bureau who could prove the opinion embodied in the report of the Inspector-General: and accordingly summons was served upon the Inspector-General to send the expert who could prove the opinion stated in the report. But unfortunately the person sent from the Bureau was not able to give any opinion and he does not appear to be connected with the examination of the thumb impressions upon which the report was based. He was not able to give any opinion in the case and accordingly his evidence was useless. The judgment-debtor then applied for summoning the proper person, namely, the person who was competent to prove the opinion set forth in the report of the Inspector-General. The learned Subordinate Judge refused this application in the following words:—

"The applicant then put in a petition for time to take further steps to call another witness from the Bureau. The petition cannot be granted. The expert was here and has been examined and he does not prove the applicant's case. There is no reason for adjourning the case again. The applicant is called upon to examine his other witnesses but he does not examine any witness and his Pleader informs that he has no further instruction after the petition for time is rejected as no further adjournment will be given as prayed for by him. The application is, therefore, dismissed for want of prosecution."

Against this order the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge of Patna. He was of opinion that no appeal lay from the order of the Subordinate Judge inasmuch as the application of the judgment-debtor was dismissed for default. He also held that the application of the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 2, clause (3) could not be entertained in execution proceedings inasmuch as the alleged payment was not certified.

Both these grounds upon which the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal appear to me to be untenable. The application of the judgment-debtor for certifying payment under O. XXI, r. 2, clause (2) could not be dismissed for default inasmuch as some evidence was given in Court and the Court held that the evidence was useless and dismissed the application. It is obvious that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in using the words "for want of prosecution." Virtually his order amounts to a dismissal of the application for the reason that the evidence adduced was worthless. The application of the judgment-debtor for certifying payments by him to the decree-holder out of Court was an application in course of the execution of the decree obtained by the decree-holder. That application was, therefore, an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, for it raised the question as to the execution and satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed. The dismissal of that application certainly gives rise to a right of appeal to the judgment-debtor. If an order of dismissal for want of prosecution is passed in a suit, it is conceded that an appeal does lie; but it is contended that an order of dismissal for default in execution proceedings in unappealable. That may be so, but here is the dismissal of an application for certifying payment said to have been made by the decree holder out of Court; the order amounts to a decree passed in a proceeding under section 47 of the Code and as such it is appealable. In any case the order in the present case disposed of the application on merits upon the findings that the evidence adduced by the judgment-debtor was useless and of no avail to him. Undoubtedly such an order is appealable.

The second ground urged by the learned District Judge is equally unsubstantial, for an application for certifying a payment, in the present case was made under O. XXI r. 2, clause (2) within the period prescribed for making such an application; the application may be made either to the Court which passed the decree or to the Court whose duty is to execute the decree, as is expressly stated in clause (1) r. 2 of that Order. The judgment-debtor could, therefore, make his application either to the Court which passed the decree or to the Court which was executing the decree. In the present case the decree was under execution and the application was properly made to the Court which was executing the decree. In the present case the Court executing the decree was the Court that passed the decree. The enquiry was, therefore, invited by the judgment-debtor as to the payment alleged to have been made by him to the decree-holder during the pendency of the execution proceedings; therefore, his application could not be thrown out upon the ground that it was not certified under clause (3) of that rule. The application was made for the purpose of having the payment certified and until that question was decided, the stage of clause (3) did not arise. The learned District Judge was, therefore, wrong in throwing out the application on the above technical grounds. He ought to have gone into the merits of the appeal. The appeal before him was, therefore, not legally disposed of and he failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. The decision of the District Judge is, therefore, set aside.

Now, the District Judge has not gone into the merits of the case, and the issue before him was whether the application was properly and legally disposed of by the Subordinate Judge; in other words, whether the Subordinate Judge was right in refusing the application of the judgment-debtor for the adjournment of the case and for summoning the proper person from the Finger Print Bureau in order to prove the opinion set forth in the report of the Inspector-General as to the indentity of the thumb impressions on the receipt in question and on the bonds B and C. The judgment debtor had been making strenuous efforts and taking all possible steps in order to have a definite opinion and evidence of a Finger Print Expert as to the thumb impression of the decree-holder on the receipt in question. He paid the necessary expenses and the expert who first came was not able to give definite opinion unless the impressions were enlarged and photographed. To this also the judgment-debtor submitted and paid all the necessary expenses. This was done with the result that an opinion decidedly in his favour was obtained. He was, therefore, naturally anxious to place upon the record the testimony of the witness who could prove the opinion contained in the report. He put in all the necessary expenses and necessary summons was issued upon the department to send the person cognizant of the opinion expressed in the letter. Through no fault of his the man sent from the Bureau turned out to be not the proper person and was not able to give any relevant evidence in the case. He accordingly applied to the Court and expressed his willingness to defray all the necessary expenses for summoning the proper person from the Bureau. When once the Court issued the summons it was the duty of the Court, unless the judgment-debtor was guilty of gross laches, to assist the judgment-debtor and to enforce the attendance of the proper person who could give evidence relevant to the case. The refusal to grant the prayer of the judgment-debtor on the 30th April was a grave irregularity and contravened the recognised principles embodied in the Code of Civil Procedure regarding the enforcement of the attendance of witnesses. The order of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, contravend the rules of procedure in the Code and the recognised principles which produced error in the decision of the case on the merits.

The question before the lower Appellate Court was whether the discretion was properly used by the Subordinate Judge in refusing the application of the judgment-debtor for enforcing the attendance of the witness from the Bureau. This question was, as observed above, left undecided by him. The question affects the merits of the case and we are entitled in second appeal under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure to determine the question which the District Judge ought to have determined. We, therefore, hold that the order of the District Judge dismissing the appeal was illegal. We also hold that the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the application of the judgment-debtor and refusing him an adjournment of the case so as to enable him to produce evidence was also improper.

We, therefore, set aside both the judgments of the Courts be ow and remand the case to the Subordinate Judge for disposal of the original application of the judgment-debtor under section 47 and O. XXI, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure in accordance with law.

The judgment-debtor in this case, however, acted indiscreetly and foolishly in not examining witnesses present on the date when the Court called upon him to give evidence after having rejected his application for adjournment. The practice of not going on with the case after the rejection of an application of this kind is fast creeping into the Courts below and must be put a stop to. The judgment-debtor would have been in a far better position, and so also the Courts, if he had examined the witnesses present in Court on the 30th April. Perhaps, much of the time and harassment of the opposite party would have been saved. I have no hesitation in holding that the conduct on the part of the judgment-debtor or his legal representative was improper in refusing to go on with the case when the witnesses were present, simply because the Court rejected the application for summoning the expert. Besides the costs awarded to the decree-holder by the Courts below, the judgment-debtor must pay to the decree-holder Rs. 64 as costs of hearing in this Court, as a condition precedent to the hearing of the case in the Court below, within a fortnight from the notice given to the judgment-debtor by the Subordinate Judge on the arrival of the records in his Court.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

The acquisition of an interest in immoveable property by a Government servant in the name of another to evade the rules made in that behalf for regulating the conduct of public servants, may be very reprehensible by reason of his violation of the said rules, but it cannot simply for that reason be described as fraudulent or opposed to public policy so as to attract the operation of the law laid down in section 23 of the Contract Act. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendraath Roy (with him Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Framathanath Banerjee, for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of title and for recovery of possession. The plaintiff's case is that he got an amalnama of the land in suit from Narendra Kisore Roy and others who were ijaradars under the Government, in the name of Sasi Kumar Bose, the father of defendant No. 1 the appellant. Sasi thereafter obtained a fresh ijara in his own name and executed a kabuliyat to the Secretary of State for India in 1906. According to the plaintiff's allegation he is all along in possession. My defence was that Sasi was the real owner and that the plaintiff could have no title to the lands. The First Court dismissed the suit. On appeal that decision has been reversed. The plaintiff was a servant of the Government from 1897 to 1907. My submission is, that under the Regulations framed by the Government for regulating the conduct of public servants and on the allegations of the plaintiff himself the plaintiff's acquisition of title is clearly fraudulent, and is, therefore, opposed to public policy. That being so the case would be governed by section 23 of the Indian Contract Act. Refers to Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1), Jadu Nath Poddar v. RupLal Poddar (2), Sham Lal v. Ohhaki Lal (3), Sheo Narain v. Mata Prasad (4), Mohun Lal Babu v. Udai Narain Bhaduri(5), Sitarampur Coal Co Limited v. Colley (6), Sayad Mirza v. Nanhi Khanam (7). I submit that upon the facts and circumstances of the case the plaintiff's action is tainted with fraud throughout. In view of the above decisions the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is manifestly wrong and ought to be set aside and that of the First Court restored.

Sir Asutosh Chaudhury (with him Babus Nagendranath Bose, Asiranjan Chatterjee and Satyendra Chandra Mitra), for the Respondents.—I submit the appellant has not stated all the facts. They have said much on the morality and purity of the public servants. They should have also stated some facts about my conduct. I have informed the Government that I was the beneficial owner. The Government have condoned my fault, if any, and have registered my name in the records. The defendants are more anxious than the Government to punish me for breach of the rules of service. These rules are not statutory prohibitions. They are merely rules of conduct. See Ramkrishna Trimbak v. Narayan Shivrao Aras (8). That being so, the question about the applicability of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act does not at all arise. There is nothing in the object or the consideration of the agreement that is unlawful. See Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines (9), Bhogwan Dei v. Murari Lal (10), Kamala Devi v. Gur Dial (11), Balkissen v. Debi Singh (12). The decision in Sitarampur Coal Co. Limited v. Colley (6) and Mohun Lal Babu v. Udai Narain Bhaduri (5) are clearly distinguishable. The mere intention to perform an illegal object would not bar an action for recovery by the assignor. See Rojab Ali v. HedayetAli (13) and Lobo v. Brito (14). I submit the learned Judge is perfectly right in his decision, Babu Mahendranath Roy replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal, is a tenure covered by a kabuliyat executed by one Sashi Kumar Bose in favour of the Secretary of State on the 3rd July 1906. The case for the plaintiff is that, on the 20th April 1905, he obtained an amalnama in respect of the disputed land, in the name of Sashi Kumar Bose, from Narendra Kishore Roy and others who were, at the time, ijaradars under the Secretary of State, and that, upon the expiry of their ijara, when a fresh settlement was made by the Revenue Authorities, Sashi Kumar Bose, as the ostensible tenure-holder, executed the kabuliyat previously mentioned, Sashi Kumar Bose died in 1912. The plaintiff alleges that, since then, the first defendant, the minor son of Sashi Kumar Rose, and the second defendant, his widow, have set up an unfounded claim to the tenure, though the plaintiff has been in possession throughout. The result was a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which terminated on the 19th April 1913, in an order adverse to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was thus constrained to institute this suit on the 19th September 1916 for establishment of his title and for recovery of possession. The defendants resisted the claim on the allegation that the plaintiff had no title and repudiated the assertion that Sashi Kumar Bose held the property for the benefit and on behalf of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance held upon the evidence that Sashi Kumar Bose was the real tenure-holder, and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed the decision and decreed the suit, finding that Sashi Kumar Bose was benamidar for the plaintiff. On the present appeal, the decree of the District Judge has been assailed, substantially on the ground that, on the allegations of the plaintiff himself, the mode of acquisition of his title was so tainted with fraud that it would be opposed to public policy to assist him in its enforcement. The facts, which form the basis of this argument, are not disputed and may be concisely stated.

The plaintiff was an amin and an Inspector in the Survey and Settlement Department under the Government from 1897 to 1907. He was consequently subject to the operation of the following rule framed by the Governor General-in-Council for regulating the Conduct of Public Servants:

"Any Government servant belonging to the Provincial or Subordinate Civil Services may continue to hold any immoveable property actually held by him at the time of his entry into Government service and may thereafter acquire any immoveable property by succession, inheritance or bequest, or, with the previous sanction of the Local Governemnt or such Heads of Departments as may be specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, by purchase or gift. He will, however, be liable to be debarred from employment within the district or other local limits within which such immoveable property is situated. Any Government servant may hold or acquire immoveable property in good faith for the purpose of residence.

"Every Government servant must make to the Government, through the usual channel, a declaration of all immoveable property which may from time to time be held or acquired by him or by his wife or by any member of his family living with or in any way dependent upon him. Such declaration should state the district within which or the Native Prince or Chief within whose territories, the property is situated and should give such further information as the Government may, by general or special order, require".

The plaintiff, it cannot be disputed, took the settlement of the disputed land from the Government, in the name of Sashi Kumar Bose, with a view to evade the rule mentioned. The defendants contend that such acquisition of interest in land was illegal, and that it would be contrary to public policy to allow the plaintiff to enforce a title acquired in such circumstances. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1) which is an authority for the proposition that although where an intended fraud has been carried into effect, the Court will not allow the true owner to resume the individuality which he has once cast off in order to defraud others, yet, if he has not defrauded any one, the Court will not punish his intention by giving his estate away to another, whose retention of it is an act of gross fraud. This principle has clearly no application to the circumstances of the present case.

The history of the rule recognized by the Judicial Committee in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1) was fully examined in the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (2). That principle is based on the doctrine that where a party admits that he has made a fictitious transfer of his property to another with a view to effect a fraud, but asks to have his act undone, the Court would refuse relief and would leave the parties to the consequences of their misconduct, dismissing the claim when the suit was brought by the real owner to get back possession of his property and refusing to listen to the defence when he set it up in opposition to the person whom he had invested with the legal title. Upon this rule has been engrafted the distinction that although where the intended fraud has been carried into effect, the Court will not assist the true owner, yet if he has not defrauded any one, and the purpose for which the assignment was made has not been carried into execution, the mere intention to effect an illegal object does not deprive the assignor of his right to recover the property from the assignee who has given no consideration for it. This distinction between fraud merely intended and a fraudulent purpose actually accomplished, is recognized in section 84 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and is illustrated by the cases of Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (15) and Rojab Ali v. Hedayet Ali (13) These well-established rules are of no assistance to the defendants, because the conduct of the plaintiff, howsoever reprehensible by reason of his violation of the rules prescribed for the conduct of Public Servants, cannot be described as a fraudulent transfer of property.

This view is supported by the decision in Lobo v. Brito (14). In that case, the plaintiff sued for declaration of his title to land which had been purchased by him in the name of the defendant. The object of the transaction was to conceal from the Collector the fact that the palintiff, who was a Tahsildar, had acquired property in his Taluq contrary to the rules of his Department. Shephard and Subramaniya Iyer, JJ. held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration sought, he may have acted dishonestly and in contravention of the rules of his Department, but he could not be said to have acted illegally so as to bring the case within the scope of the rule that a man is precluded from obtaining relief in respect of a transaction, the purpose of which was illegal and has been accomplished.

We are not unmindful that a different view was adopted by the Allahabad High Court in the cases of Shiam Lal v. Chhaki Lal (3) and Sheo Narain v. Mota Prasad (4) where it was held that the contract made by a Public Officer for the purchase of land in his Circle, contrary to the rules, is opposed to public policy, specially when, with a view to conceal that purchase from his superiors, he takes the conveyance in the name of another person. These cases were, however, overruled by the decision of a Full Bench in Bhagwan Dei v. Murari Lal (10) which was followed by another Full Bench in Kamala Devi v. Gur Dial (11). Sir Henry Richards, C. J., declined to hold that the transfer or assignment, in contravention of the rule, was void as against public policy, though a prohibitory rule made it objectionable for the Public Officer concerned to acquire property or interest in property in his Circle. Walsh, J., pointed out that the case did not fall within the terms of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act and that the earlier cases overlooked the distinction between the conduct of a person and the subject-matter of a contract. The section provides that the consideration or object of an agreement is unlawful, if the Court regards it as opposed to public policy, and every agreement, of which the object or consideration is unlawful, is void. The section thus provides for cases where the consideration or object of the agreement is opposed to public policy. There can be no question that having regard to the Regulations governing the appointment of the officer his conduct was reprehensible, but that does not show that the creation of the tenure was opposed to public policy. Rafique, J., emphasised the well-known principle affirmed by the House of Lords in Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines (9), namely, that no Court can invent a new head of public policy or condemn an agreement, because, in its opinion, it is not consistent with public interest. The case could not thus be brought within one or other of the recognized heads in the classification of agreement to do that which it is the policy of the law to prevent:

(i) agreements which injure the State in its relations with other States;

(ii) agreements tending to injure the public service;

(iii) agreements which tend to prevent the course of justice;

(iv) agreements which tend to abuse of legal process.

(15) 22 Ind. Cas. 86; 18 C. L. J. 616.

(v) agreements which are contrary to good morals;

(vi) agreements which affect the freedom or security of marriage;

(vii) agreements in restraint of trade.

The case before us cannot be placed in the same category as agreements whose object is to induce an officer of the State whether Judicial or Executive, to act partially or corruptly in his office as happened in the case of Egerton v. Brownlow (16) decided by the House of Lords or of Marshall v. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co., (17) decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The decision in Mohun Lal Babu v. Udai Narain Bhaduri (5) is clearly distinguishable. There, the Court invalidated a contract by the intending purchaser to re convey the property to the defaulter; such a contract, if permitted, would clearly defeat the provisions of section 9 of the Patni Regulation and would thereby attract the operation of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act. Nor is there any analogy between the present case and that of Sitarampur Coal Co. Ltd. v. Colley (6) which holds that a contract with a Public Servant, which might cast upon him obligations inconsistent with his public duty, is void. In view of these principles we are unable to hold that the plaintiff is disentitled to the assistance of the Court on grounds of public policy. It may be conceded that there is room for argument on both sides, as is sufficiently indicated by the circumstances that the two Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwan Dei v. Murari Lal (10) and Kamala Devi v. Gur Dial (11) were disapproved of in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Sayad Mirza v. Nanhi Khanam (7) but approved of without hesitation, shortly afterwards, in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur in Balkissen v. Debi Singh (12). There is, however, much to be said in favour of the view maintained by Sir Basil Scott, C. J., in Ramkrishna Trimbak v. Narayan Shivrao Aras (8), namely, that Government Servants Conduct Rules are rules of conduct and not statutory prohibitions, so that a disregard of these rules does not necessarily taint transactions by Government servants with immorality or illegality. We are not, on the whole, much impressed by the argument that the cause of good Government would be seriously prejudiced, if a Government servant in the position of the plaintiff were not deterred from trusting knaves like the predecessor of the defendants, and that consequently in the interest of the public good, as it were, they should be permitted to keep for themselves the property into the possession of which he was so unwisely and unrighteously put. The obvious answer is that the plaintiff in suing to recover possession of his property is not carrying out an illegal transaction but is seeking to put every one, as far as possible, in the correct position. The plaintiff has already intimated to the Revenue Authorities that he was the beneficial owner under the Settlement. They have raised no objection, and are content to register his name in their records. They have not taken steps for cancellation of the settlement, as they might have done if it were shown, for instance, that the plaintiff had abused his position as a Government servant and had successfully conspired with his fellow officers to obtain a benami settlement on terms unfair to the State and unduly advantageous to himself. It is the defendants who are anxious to utilise the breach of the Conduct Rules by the plaintiff, to enable them to retain possession of the property to which they cannot make out a vestige of title; plainly, they cannot be permitted to achieve this object, despite their anxiety to effect great moral ends and to secure the purity of the public services. We hold accordingly that the Court should not refuse to assist the plaintiff in the enforcement of his rights as against the defendants.

The result is that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs,

LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 89 AND 95 OF 1921.

BUDHAN TELI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

MADAN MOHAN LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Ejectment suit—Tenants pleading permanency—Settlement papers not produced—Oral evidence—Inference of lease being temporary—Tenant building while landlord stands by—Estoppel.

In an ejectment suit where the tenant pleads permanency of title but does not produce settlement papers in support of it, s. 91 of the Evidence Act prevents him from giving any oral evidence at all as to the terms of the settlement of land with him and the only inference that can be drawn is that his lease is temporary and that he is a tenant-at-will. [p. 654, col. 2.]

In such a case if the landlord stands by while the tenant builds his house, there can be question of estoppel because the tenant knows his rights perfectly well and any inaction on the part of the landlord cannot deceive him. [p 654, col. 2.]

Obiter.—Where by the terms of a lease no power whatsoever is given to the tenant to erect anything in the nature of a permanent building and the landlord either by his omission to interfere or by his active intervention encourages the tenant in the mistaken idea that he has power to build such a house and that he has permanent interest in the land, the landlord cannot afterwards turn round and say that he had only a temporary interest. [p. 654, col. 2.]

In such case it must also be shown that the landlord was aware of what his rights were and had power to prevent the tenant from building. [p 654, col 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr, Justice Adami, reversing that of the District Judge, Gaya.

Mr. Satyadeva Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kailashpati, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The appellants in these cases are two of eight tenants of the respondent who sued to eject them and recover possession of the property. The case for the landlord was that the holdings of the defendants were yearly holdings or that they were merely tenants at-will and liable to ejectment. There were eight cases altogether and the Munsif found that the character of the tenancy in these cases could not be determined, they were apparently of some age, that no fixed rent could be established on the evidence, that there was no custom of transferability, and eventually decreed the plaintiff's suit.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge and the District Judge held that the tenants had been in possession for a long period and that, from the facts, he was entitled to draw an inference that the tenancies were permanent. He also found in favour of the custom of transferability and, further, upon the question of estoppel, he found that the landlord was estopped from denying the permanency of the defendants' interest.

From this decision a second appeal was brought and heard before Mr. Justice Adami in this Court. The learned Judge of this Court agreed with the decision of the District Judge in six of the cases and as to those there is no appeal. In the other two cases it had been found as a fact by the Munsif and was not in dispute in the First Appellate Court that the defendants' settlement papers or banaobast papers showing their title were in their possession and not produced. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that in such circumstances it was not competent for these defendants to give any evidence as to the nature of the terms contained in their documents of title. Therefore, he allowed the appeal in so far as these two tenants were concerned, finding that they had in the circumstances failed to make out that they had anything more than a yearly interest in the land.

From that decision the two defendants in question have appealed, and it is argued before us to-day that it was not competent to the learned Judge of this Court to overrule the findings of fact of the learned District Judge. The question, however, raises a point of law arising under the Evidence Act. It is quite clear by the terms of section 91 of the Evidence Act that where a contract or a grant or any other disposition of property has been reduced to writing no evidence shall be given in proof of its terms except the document itself or except secondary evidence in certain cases. It was admitted here that the documents of title were in existence, that the defendants, upon whom the onus lay, had them in their possession and they failed to produce them. The cases in which secondary evidence of a document may be given do not include cases such as the present. It was, therefore, no longer open, to my mind, to the defendants, the present appellants, to give any evidence at all as to what were the terms of the settlement of the land with them, they having failed to produce what after all was not only the best but was conclusive evidence as to those terms. The findings of the learned District Judge, therefore, which were arrived at by drawing inference from such facts as long possession and the acts of the parties and so on can have no application to a case such as this, and the learned District Judge was, in my opinion, not entitled to draw these inferences, which, after all, were merely inferences drawn from evidence which was given to prove what were the terms of a written grant or contract, and to this extent it seems to me that the learned Judge of this Court was perfectly right.

A further point was taken that the evidence showed to the satisfaction of the District Judge that the landlord was estopped from denying the permanency of the defendants' holding. The findings of the learned District Judge upon this point were stated thus:—

"I find that the sites of the houses were settled with the defendants for the purpose of providing them with a home; and in accordance with that settlement they built brick foundations in the sub soil, and for generations maintained superstructures of a quality which, in the circumstances of an Indian village, both they and the landlords must have recognised as appropriate to the making of permanent family abodes. In one year they may have put up a new thatch, that in another they may have renovated a wall, but the permanent house remained. In the light of ordinary experience it seems likely that the tenants expended this money in expectation of a permanent home and the landlord acquiesced; otherwise the tenants would have been foolishly wasting money and the landlord would have been standing inactive while the tenants were injuring his property."

In the circumstances of this case it does not seem to me that that finding of the learned District Judge can have any possible bearing upon our decision. The finding is that the tenants built what has been described as a katcha pucca house, that is, a house with brick foundations and mud walls and a thatched roof as a permanent abode, and that the landlord stood by and took no action to prevent them from doing so. If by the terms of their lease it was quite clear that the lease gave them no power whatever to erect anything in the nature of a permanent home or a building of this nature and the landlord either by his omission to interfere or by his active intervention encouraged the tenants in the mistaken idea that they had power to build such a house and that they had a permanent interest in the land, no doubt the landlord could not afterwards turn round and set up a case that they only had a termporary interest, but in this case the terms of the lease have not been proved though they might have been proved by the defendants and it has been found that the leases were granted for the purposes of building some sort of a home. If that is so it may well be that, although they had power to build a house of this nature, the lease was only a temporary lease. Whether it was or not, the defendants could easily have proved. They have failed to do so and, therefore, the inference must be drawn against them that this was only a temporary lease making them tenants from year to year or tenant-at-will although they had power to build some sort of house. If that is the inference that must be drawn, it does not really matter in the least that the landlord stood by whilst they built their houses, because it must in such circumstances be presumed that the tenants knew perfectly well what their rights were and, therefore, that they were not deceived or encouraged in any way merely by the landlord standing by and taking no action. Further, in cases where the landlord stands by and takes no action it must also be shown that he was aware of what his rights were and had power to prevent the tenants from building. But the finding is that they had power to build, and the facts necessary in order to bring about an estoppel have not been proved in these cases. In my opinion, these appeals, in so far as they rest upon any estoppel, must also be dismissed with costs and the decision of the learned Judge of this Court must be upheld.

REFERRED CASE No. 1 OF 1922.
April 12, 1922.
Present:—Sir Walter Schwabe. KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter.
SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF REVENUE (INCOME-TAX) MADRAS—REFERRING OFFICER
versus
MESSRS. MOHAMAD SHERIFF HUSSAIN MEAH SAHIB & Co. MADRAS —ASSESSEE.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), ss. 19, 51—S. 19, meaning of—Income of firm—Year of registry and prior year in which firm not registered—Adjustment.

S. 19 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, means that if, at the end of the year, it is found that the amount at which the income was assessed has been either exceeded or reduced, there is a right and a duty to deal with the matter accordingly.

An adjustment of income-tax can be made during a Financial year in which the Collector's certificate of registration under section 12-A of the Income Tax Act is in force in respect of the income of a firm for the previous year in which the firm was not registered.

Case stated under section 51, Act VII of 1918 and section 6 of the Super Tax Act XIX of 1920, by the Secretary to the Board of Revenue (Income-Tax) Madras, in S. T. A. No. 10 of 1921-1922.

The Government Pleader on behalf of Government.

Mr. D. Chamier, for the Assessee.

JUDGMENT.

SCHWABE, C.J.—This reference, under section 51 of the Income-Tax Act and section 6 of the Super Tax Act now in force is as to "whether an adjustment can be made during a financial year in which the Collector's certificate of Registration under section 12-A is in force in respect of the income of a firm for the previous year in which the firm was not registered". In my judgment it clearly can. The whole scheme of income-tax and super-tax in this country is based on the principle that the tax is assessed at the beginning of the year on an anticipated income and is paid in anticipation on the assessment, but when the year is over and the actual earnings have been discovered, there is not a fresh assessment but an adjustment. As far as super-tax is concerned, a registered firm is exempt from super-tax as a firm, although the partners are personally liable for super-tax if their separate incomes are large enough to bring the provisions of the Super Tax Act into operation against them.

In the year 1920 21 this firm of Messrs. Mohammad Sheriff Hussain Meah Sahib & Co. through carelessness or for some other reason which I am not able to appreciate, having made its return for the assessment purposes at Rs. 90,000 omitted to get registered in time to take advantage of the exemption granted to registered firms. At the end of the year or the beginning of the next year in due course there was an adjustment, because it turned out that the profits were Rs. 1,37,000 instead of Rs. 90,000. It is contested that adjustment cannot be made because under section 19 of the Income-Tax Act, VII of 1918, "when the Collector has, in any year after the commencement of this Act for which income-tax is leviable, ascertained the total income actually received" is said to mean in any year in which super-tax is leviable, and it is argued that, as this firm was registered in the following year i. e., 1921 22 and, therefore, escaped from super-tax that year, the Collector has no power to call for an adjustment for the preceding year. In my judgment that is an entire misinterpretation of the section. The section simply means that, if at the end of the year it is found that the amount at which the income was assessed has been either exceeded or reduced, there is a right and a duty to deal with the matter accordingly. For the year in question this firm was not registered, and not being registered they must be dealt with on an adjustment in the same way in which they were dealt with on assessment, and the amount on which they have to pay is the amount actually earned in 1920-21 and not the anticipated earnings for that year.

It follows that the answer to the question is in the affirmative.

The costs of the reference shall be paid by the assessee and such costs shall include the Government Pleader's fee. The Taxing Officer will fix a reasonable fee under the terms of r. 38 of the Appellate Side Fee Rules which is in those words: "In cases in which the subject-matter of the claim does not admit of valuation, the Court or in the case of the High Court, the Taxing Officer shall fix a reasonable fee, regard being had to the time occupied in the preparation and hearing of the case and the nature of the questions raised therein as also to the minima fees prescribed by r. 31." It cannot be right that there should be a fixed amount payable to the Government Pleader as fee in respect of a case which may last a week and may take days for preparation and that the same fixed amount should be payable in respect of a case like this which cannot take very long to read and prepare for argument and it cannot be right that the assessee who has a small case is to pay an unnecessarily large fee to the relief of an assessee who has a large case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver, appointment of—Applicant's duty to convince Court of prima facie case.

In cases where an application is made for the appointment of a Receiver, the applicant should at least present a prima facie case and convince the Court that there is a fair chance of his succeeding in the suit.

Appeal against an order passed by the Sub-Judge, Bhagalpur.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, C. C. Das and Nirod Chandra Ray, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad, P. N. Sinha, Jagannath Prasad S. N. Rai and Bindheshwar Prasad for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for the appointment of a Receiver which has been allowed in a partition suit. The main question for decision in the suit is said to be whether the parties are joint or separate. The learned Subordinate Judge has declined to consider this question at this stage because it is virtually deciding the whole suit; but in cases where a Receiver is applied for, it is settled law that the applicant should at least present a prima facie case and should convince the Court that there may be a fair chance of succeeding in the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to no conclusion that the applicant has presented a prima facie case, or that he is convinced that there may be a fair chance of the plaintiff succeeding in the suit. In this position of affairs the learned Government Advocate, who appears for the opposite party, agrees with the learned Counsel for the petitioner, that the best course will be for the matter to be sent back to the Subordinate Judge for a decision of this point after considering the evidence of which there is said to be a considerable mass on the record.

It is agreed, however, that the Receiver should remain for the present, until this matter has been decided by the learned Subordinate Judge in accordance with law. The Receiver will accordingly remain for the present in possession of such property as he has already taken possession of, and the learned Subordinate Judge will decide the question of whether a Receiver should be appointed or not at as early a date as possible.

The records with the affidavits will be sent down as soon as possible.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 41—Decree transferred for execution—Certificate, sending of, to original Court—Certificate of failure to execute decree—Certificate of result of each application for execution—Jurisdiction of Executing Court, determination of.

Section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code requires that a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall certify to the Court which sent it that it has completely executed the decree or has failed to do so and is unable to do so any further. The section may also require certificates to be sent of the result of each application for execution that is made to the Executing Court. In any case such certificates have to be sent under the executive orders of this Court. But the sending of a certificate does not of itself put an end to the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree and the sending of a certificate of the latter kind cannot do so at all. Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 14th March 1918, in execution in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1917, passed on the 7th May 1921, and order, dated the 3rd May 1921 by District Judge, Jubbalpur.

Mr. G. R. Bapat, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A decree passed in favour of the appellants by the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara, was sent for execution by that Court, under section 39 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the 4th of May 1918, to the Court of the District Judge, Jabalpur, with a certificate, as prescribed by r. 6 (b) of O. XXI, that satisfaction of the decree had not been obtained. The decree-holders made an application for execution to the Jabalpur Court on the 15th of May 1918 and warrants of attachment were issued, but, as they were unexecuted and the decree-holders did not desire to proceed further, the application was dismissed on the 21st of June 1918. The certificate of failure to execute the decree was duly sent to the Bhandara Court on the 29th of June 1918. On the 3rd of May 1921 the decree-holders put in a second application for execution in the Jabalpur Court. This was not registered but was returned to the decree-holders on the same day with an order endorsed on it in the following terms: "The intimation has been sent to the Court concerned on 29th June 1918. This application is, therefore, returned for presentation to proper Court."

(2) The decree holders presented this to the Bhandara Court, together with a petition for a fresh transfer of the decree and a fresh certificate under section 39, r. 6 of O. XXI. On this petition the learned District Judge endorsed the following order on the 7th of May 1921: "Petition returned. No fresh certificate is necessary. Execution can issue on the original certificate from time to time until either the decree is satisfied or the execution for any reason becomes impossible. The mere fact that an intimation is sent to this Court concerning the result of each petition for execution does not put an end to the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. Petition for issue of fresh certificate is rejected in this Court." The decree holders then presented the same application for execution once more to the Jabalpur Court on the 11th of May 1921, but the learned Additional District Judge passed no written order on it and, apparently, refused to have anything to do with it, stating that he could not revise his former order. The decree-holders have accordingly come here in appeal, praying that whichever of the two conflicting orders is wrong may be set aside.

(3) The view taken by the learned Additional District Judge of Jabalpur seems to be that, when a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution has reported the failure of one attempt to execute, the decree is thereby re-transferred to the Court which made it. No warrant whatever is to be found for this in the words of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 39 speaks of a decree being sent for disposal. Section 42 makes the point still clearer by saying that the Court to which the decree is sent, "shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself": the Court which passed a decree would certainly have power to entertain further applications for execution after the failure of the first, even if it were bound by law or by executive instructions to report that failure to some other Court and had done so. On the words of the Code, there seems to be no doubt about the matter, but certain rulings have been cited which show that the point has been raised.

(4) The difficulty seems to arise from a doubt whether, under section 41, the Executing Court has to report to the Court which passed the decree the result of the first application made to it for execution, even if it is only partial success or complete failure, or to report only complete execution and final failure, leaving no possibility of further execution by it. It is probable that the section was meant to ensure that a Court which passes a decree shall be kept informed all along of the proceedings of the Court to which it is sent for execution. That is undoubtedly the more convenient course, and executive orders that it shall be followed have been issued by this Court. But a certificate of execution, or failure does not put an end to the power of the Court to execute just because it is prescribed by section 41. When a Court certifies that it is unable to execute a decree that has been sent to it any further, either because it has been fully executed or there is no possibility of executing what is left of it, it certainly has lost its power of executing that decree, but not because it reports the fact. Still less, can the mere fact of certifying only partial execution or of failure that is not necessarily final put an end to the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree or re-transfer it to the Court which passed it, whether such a certificate is prescribed by section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code or only by the executive order of this Court.

(5) In the Calcutta case of Manorath Das v. Ambica Kanta Bose (1) decided in 1907 and the Madras case of Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda (2) decided in 1912, the failure of the first infructuous application to the Court to which the decree was sent for execution had apparently not been certified to the Court which passed it, and the question whether that certificate, if it had been sent, would have put an end to the jurisdiction of the Executing Court cannot be said to have been decided; indeed, in the Calcutta case the learned Judges expressly refrained from stating an opinion on it as it did not arise. It follows, however, from both judgments that the certificate of the first failure was considered not to be required by law and an unnecessary intimation of result of one application for execution cannot be called a certificate such as is required by section 41 of the Procedure Code and, therefore, cannot have the effect of such a certificate, whatever that effect may be. But in the Allahabad case of Abda Begam v. Muzaffar Husen Khan (3) and in Harbhaj Rai v. Mukand Lal (4) decided by the Chief Court of the Punjab, a certificate of the failure of the first application had been sent, and the same view of its effect was taken as has been set out above. The case of Mathura Nath Sen v. Kailas Chandra Roy (5) reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes has also been cited before us. A mere summary of the ruling on this point is there given, and even that does not appear to be a quotation of the words of the judgment.

(6) Our decision of the question before us may be summarised as follows. Section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code requires that a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall certify to the Court which sent it that it has completely executed the decree or has failed to do so and is unable to do so any further. The section may also require certificates to be sent of the result of each application for execution that is made to the Executing Court, but in any case such certificates have to be sent under the executive orders of this Court. But the sending of a certificate does not of itself put an end to the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree, and the sending of a certificate of the latter class cannot do so at all. In this view, we set aside the order passed on the 3rd of May 1921 by the Additional District Judge of Jabalpur and order him to admit the application for execution on which that order is passed as an application filed on that date and to deal with it according to law. The costs of this appeal will be paid by the respondents.

In view of the provisions of clauses (e) and (f) r. 46, Chapter XI of the General Rules and Circular Orders of the Calcutta High Court, which is followed by the Patna High Court, a Court has no power to refuse permission to a Pleader to sign a vakalatnama which is already on the file of the Court and in the body of which appears the name of that Pleader. Application against an order passed by the Munsif, Arrah, dated the 7th July 1921.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The present petitioners have been substituted in place of the original petitioner who was the plaintiff in the Court below. The plaintiff instituted a rent-suit out of which this application has arisen in the Court of the Munsif of Arrah, No. 712 of 1920. The defendants did not appear and the case was set down for an ex parte hearing on the 23rd May 1921. On that day the suit was dismissed for default. On the 25th, the plaintiff filed a petition under O. IX, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code for setting aside the aforesaid order of dismissal of the suit and for its restoration. This application was rejected by the judgment of the Munsif, dated the 7th July 1921. The plaintiff has, therefore, come to this Court in revision and asks to have the order of the Munsif set aside.

The short ground urged in support of the application is that in fact there was no default in the appearance of the plaintiff, and the Munsif had, therefore, absolutely no right to dismiss the suit for the non-appearance of the plaintiff under O. IX, r. 3. The contention appears to be sound and is borne out by the facts and circumstances of the case. On account of his old age the case of the plaintiff was looked after by his son, Ram Radhya Singh, and his am mukhtear Lakhmi Prasad, under a duly registered power-of-attorney. The plaint was duly signed and verified by the am-mukhtear, Lakhmi Prasad, for the plaintiff. The vakalatnama filed on behalf of the plaintiff was also executed by Lachmi Prasad It contains the names of a number of Pleaders of the Arrah Bar; but at the time of filing the plaint and the vakalatnama the Pleader Moulvi Abdul Aziz only accepted the vakalatnama and made the necessary endorsement. On the 23rd May, the date of the hearing of the suit, the hazri of the plaintiff's witnesses was filed under the signature of the said Pleader Moulvi Abdul Aziz This gentleman is also very old being of about 80 years of age and was on those days observing the ramzan fast. He left the Court a 10-30 A. M. and the case till then was not taken up. It was taken up at 11-26 A. M as the order-sheet shows. Lachmi Prasad, the mukhtear of the plaintiff, and Ram Rachya Singh, his (petitioner's) son were both present in the ijlas room and were also the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff: The plaintiff's witness went into the box. As Pleader Moulvi Abdul Aziz had left the Court, Lachmi Prasad and Ram Rachya Singh wanted Rai Jang Bahadur, Pleader, who happened to be present in Court, to appear and examine the witnesses in the case which was heard ex parte. No fresh vakalatnama was filed, and on behalf of the plaintiff it was urged that the stamp vendor was not available so late in the day. This explanation has not been accepted by the Munsif. The name of Rai Jang Bahadur, however, happened to be in the body of the vakalatnama along with the names of several other Pleaders of the Bar. The plaintiff's am-mukhtear asked Rai Jang Bahadur to act on his behalf as Pleader, and Rai Jang Bahadur did give his consent. He then wanted permission of the Court to sign the vakalatnama which had already been filed. This prayer made on behalf of the plaintiff for Rai Jang Bahadur to sign the vakalatnama was refused, and the learned Munsif passed the following order:—

"Pleader of the plaintiff does not appear. The suit is dismissed for default. There is no one to examine the witness-in-chief. Time 11-27."

Now, on behalf of the plaintiff it is urged in this Court that the order of the Munif is wholly without jurisdiction, illegal and irregular. It is said that he had no power to refuse Rai Jang Bahadur to accept the vakalatnama and sign the same. This contention appears to me to be borne by the law and the authorities on the subject. O. III, r. 4 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure requires:

"The appointment of a Pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person, by his recognised agent or by some other person duly authorised by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf."

This rule was complied with, inasmuch as there was a written vakalatnama filed on behalf of the plaintiff as executed by his am-mukhtear under a registered power-of-attorney. This vakalatnama was accepted by Moulvi Abdul Aziz and was already filed in Court. Rai Jang Bahadur was also there on the ijlas; the am-mukhtear and the plaintiff's son engaged him as the Pleader and he accepted the same. His name being already in the vakalatnama he was competent to sign the same in accordance with the rules prescribed by the High Court. Formerly, it was held in some cases that even the signature of the Pleader is not essential, provided his name is in the body of it. However, in 1914 the Calcutta High Court (which is followed by this Court) prescribed the rules on the subject: vide Chapter XI, r. 46 of the General Rules and Circular Orders. Clause (b) of the rule requires that,

"A Pleader accepting a vakalatnama purporting to be executed by his client in person is bound to satisfy himself that it was so executed. When it purports to be executed by a third party, on behalf of his client, he is bound to ascertain that such person has been duly empowered by the client to appoint a Vakil, and has himself executed the vakalatnama."

Clause (c) requires that,

"No Vakil or Pleader shall receive a vakalatnama from any person other than the party himself, or his recognized agent, or a person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf, or his servant or relation or a Pleader or Vakil or mukhtear specially authorized in writing in that behalf."

Clause (e) says that,

"When a vakalatnama is filed by a Vakil or Pleader, he shall endorse on the back of it the date of acceptance, the name of the person from whom it is received, and, if such person is neither the client himself nor a Vakil, Pleader, or mukhtear, shall state the precise nature of the authority with date of that person."

Clause (f) says:—

"A vakalatnama which has been filed in Court may be subsequently accepted by a Vakil or Pleader whose name appears in the vakalatnama at the time when it was first filed: in the case of such subsequent acceptance, an endorsement shall be made as in the case of the first acceptance."

I have considered all the authorities cited by the Munsif on the subject, namely,

Shama Prosad Ghose v. Taki Mullik (1), Jogesh Chandra Gupta, In the matter of (2) and Mohesh Chandra Addy v. Panchu Mudali (3). As to the recognized practise upon the subject, reference may be made to 19 Calcutta Weekly Notes xxv (25), XXVI (26) Notes. This has been referred to in the case of Mohesh Chandra Addy v. Panchu Mudali (3). In Two Pleaders, In the matter of (4) it was observed by a Special Bench of this Court that the Court can only object to a Pleader appearing in a case when he does not comply with the aforesaid rule on the subject of the acceptance of vakalatnama, that is to say, when the Pleader does not sign the vakalatnama and record the endorsement required by clauses (e) and (f) of r. 46 of Chapter XI of the General Rules and Circular Orders. The Pleader in the present case, Rai Jang Bahadur, was ready to make the necessary endorsement. The Munsif refused it only on the ground that a fresh vakalatnama was not filed and the vakalatnama already filed was not sufficient. The refusal was against the express provisions in r. (f) which says,

"A vakalatnama which has been filed in Court may be subsequently accepted by a Vakil or Pleader whose name appears in the vakalatnama at the time when first filed; in the case of such subsequent acceptance an endorsement shall be made as in the case of the first acceptance"

The argument advanced by the learned Munsif appears to be very ingenious indeed. He says,

"He did not appoint him his Vakil from before. He appointed Rai Babu Jang Bahadur orally. He did not appoint him to be his Vakil by vakalatnama. At the time he executed his vakalatnama he intended to appoint as his Vakil only the person or persons of whom he took or he intended to take signatures. At the time of appointing Mr. Abdul Aziz as his Vakil he had no intention to appoint any other Vakil. He only gets signature of the Vakil whom he appoints at the time of executing vakalatnama."

We are not here to investigate into the intentions of the parties. The fact is that names of various Pleaders including that of Rai Jang Bahadur were in the vakalatnama, and obviously it was with a view to get the acceptance of any of the Pleaders whose names appeared in the vakalatnama when an emergency would arise. The names of other Pleaders than the one who was engaged and accepted at the time are only mentioned with a view to obviate the necessity of filing a fresh vakalatnama, else there was no meaning in encumbering the vakalatnama by putting down a number of Pleaders' names if when subsequently in appointing the Pleaders named in the vakalatnama fresh vakalatnamas were necessary. But we are relieved from going into the intention of the parties in the case when the rule expressly says that a vakalatnama once filed in Court may be subsequently accepted by a Vakil or Pleader whose name appears in the vakalatnama. The Court has only to see whether the name of the Pleader proposed to be appointed appears in the vakalatnama or not, and if his name does appear then the Pleader is entitled to sign the vakalatnama and appear and act in the case.

Again, apart from the question whether Rai Jang Bahadur could or could not be permitted to sign the vakalatnama in question, there was no default on behalf of the plaintiff when there was a duly authorized agent with a registered power-of-attorney, present in Court with his witness, and the order dismissing the suit was bad in law: O. III of the Code of Civil Procedure. This agent had signed and verified the plaint, had appointed Vakils and was looking after the case. The Munsif could have, with his assistance, examined the witness which would have taken only a few minutes, or should have adjourned the case as it was taken up so late in the day, instead of disposing of it at 11-27 A. M., particularly when the plaintiff's Pleader had filed hazri and left the Court at 10.30 A. M. The plaintiff only wanted to use the Record of Right and to examine only one witness. The zeal of the Munsif does not rest there. While hearing the application for setting aside the order of dismissal under O. IX,

r. 4, two witnesses were examined on behalf of the plaintiff, namely, Lachmi Prasad, am-mukhtear, and Moulvi Abdul Aziz, Pleader, who was engaged originally to act in the case. Naturally the evidence-in-chief was very short, but the cross examination was by the Munsif himself, as nobody appeared to oppose the application, and that appears to be too searching and inordinate, and the judgment rejecting the rehearing petition also appears to be pretty long. The learned Munsif seems to have been carried away in this case from the beginning to the end more from vindicating his own view of the technical point as to the right of a Pleader signing the vakalatnama already filed in Court than from the justice of the case. He would have been well-advised had he reserved this point for a more appropriate case. In any view the discretion used in this case by the Munsif both in dismissing the suit and not restoring it was not proper.

The result is that I set aside the order of the Munsif under O. IX, r. 4, and restore the case to its original file to be disposed of in accordance with law.

Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), ss. 4, 41, sub-s. (3)—Cesses, whether recoverable from tenants paying rent in kind.

There is nothing in law to prevent a landlord from recovering cesses from his tenants in the case of lands held by them on rents payable in kind.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate, Judge, First Court, Chittagong, dated the 11th of December 1902, modifying that of the Munsif, Patiya, Third Court dated the 24th of June 1901.

Babu Hari Bhusan Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for arrears of rent of three plots of land. Money-rent was claimed in respect of two of the plots and rent in kind in respect of the third. There was also a claim for the usual cesses.

The Court of first instance decreed the entire claim but on appeal the lower Appellate Court has modified the decree of the Court of first instance by disallowing the claim for cesses in respect of the plot of land for which rent was claimed in kind. The Subordinate Judge gives as his reason for disallowing that part of the claim for cesses that there is no provision in the law for the payment of cesses when rent is payable in kind and there is no proof on behalf of the plaintiff of any agreement to pay such cesses.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the Subordinate Judge is in error in supposing that the law does not contemplate that cesses should be paid by the tenants in the cases of lands held on rents payable in kind. The contention is, in my opinion, correct. Section 41 of the Cess Act clearly provides that the cess is payable in respect of all lands held by a cultivating raiyat and sub-clause (3) of that section lays down the amount of cesses which the raiyat is bound to pay. The Subordinate Judge was possibly unaware of the rules provided for the levy of cesses in respect of rents payable in kind, and his attention is, therefore, invited to the explanation given under section 4 of the Cess Act, B. C. of 1880, in the edition of the Act published by the Board of Revenue, with the Boards Rules attached. In my opinion, the Subordinate Judge is in error in disallowing the claim of the plaintiff for the tenants' share of the cesses on the plot of land paying rent in kind and I, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge on this point and restore the judgment and decree of the Munsif.

As no one appears on the other side to contest the appeal, I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Suit to set aside transfer as not justified by necessity—Necessity for sale of part of transferred property established—Appeal, valuation of.

Where in a suit to set aside a transfer of property made by a Hindu widow on the ground that it was not justified by legal necessity, the Court finds that the transfer was justified only to the extent of a certain sum for which there was necessity, the value of the appeal to His Majesty in Council is the value of that part of the transferred property whose sale is not found to be for legal necessity, and if the value of the same be less than Rs. 10,000 leave to appeal will not be granted.

Application, under section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, against the decision of Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Ross, in First Appeal No. 4 of 1918, dated the 4th January 1921.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court, dated the 4th January last.

The applicants are the defendants in the suit. The defendants claimed the property under a sale made to their father by the grandmother of the present plaintiff. The plaintiff is the reversioner of the estate of the grandfather after the life-interest of his grandmother and her daughter.

The lower Court awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the transfer made by the grandmother was not justified by legal necessity. On appeal to this Court that decision was varied, the Court finding that out of a total sum of Rs 3 800, the purchase price, Rs. 1,412 was justified by legal necessity at the time of the transfer. The Court accordingly varied the decree of the Trial Court by ordering that the plaintiff's title to the property in question should be declared and that he should recover possession thereof upon condition that he first paid to the defendants Rs. 1,412 with interest from the date of the decree. From that decision the defendants seek leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

So far as the decision appealed from is concerned, it was one of affirmance and decided upon questions of fact and no question of law arises. It is contended, however, by the defendants that the Court having come to the conclusion that the sale of the property was justified to the extent of Rs. 1,412 for which there was necessity on the part of the family at that time, the Court ought to have ordered that there was valid transfer of the property, at all events to the extent of rather more than a third of the property, and, therefore, instead of setting aside the sale ought to have confirmed the sale of a proportionate part of the property. It appears that for many years it has been the practise in such cases, where a portion of the purchase price is shown to have been justified by legal necessity, to set aside the sale upon payment by the plaintiff of that portion. Even if this question might possibly be considered a substantial question of law, it is not necessary to decide it in the present case, for, assuming that the defendants were entitled to that proportion of the property which Rs. 1,214 bears to Rs. 3,800, the value of their appeal would not come up to the statutory requirements. The value of the whole property is said to be Rs. 10,000. Therefore, if the defendant should be successful on the point of law in their appeal to His Majesty in Council, the result would be that they would only recover property of the value of a slightly more than a third of Rs. 10,000 instead of its cash equivalent. For these reasons, it does not appear to me that this is a proper case in which to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The respondent is entitled to costs; hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99—Witness, deposition of, not signed by Judge—Trial, whether vitiated—Irregularity—Re-trial, whether should be ordered.

The mere fact that the deposition of a witness is not signed by the Judge who recorded it, would not vitiate the trial of the suit. The omission to sign is an irregularity merely, and, so long as there is no doubt whatever that the deposition was recorded by the Judge, section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code does not afford ground for a new trial.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 171 of 1920, dated the 9th February 1921.

Mr. S. C. Dutt Chowdhry, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first ground of appeal is to the effect that the plaintiff has not proved that the former tenant died without heirs. The plaintiff asserted that the former tenant died without heirs, and the plaintiff's pleading on this point was not contradicted by the defendant who in fact admitted that he believed it to be true.

As to the second ground, it certainly lay upon the appellant to prove that he was a tenant. He was not recorded as a tenant and the landlord did not admit that he was a tenant and it was for him to prove it. The question whether he has proved it is a different matter. It was argued that it was proved by the jamabandi. The Patwari who made the entry in the jamabandi says that he made it on information given by the appellant. It was admitted that the appellant was in possession, but as sub-tenant of Kanhaiyalal and not as tenant. This ground of appeal, therefore, fails.

As to the third ground of appeal the Expert evidence is not rebutted by any expert evidence to the contrary, and I do not see any reason why the lower Courts should not have relied upon it. It is pointed out that the deposition of the Expert in Handwriting is not signed by the Munsif, though it is signed by the Expert. This, however, does not vitiate the trial. It is an irregularity and, under section 99, Civil Procedure Code, does not afford a ground for a re-trial, since there is no doubt whatever that the deposition was recorded by the Munsif.

The fourth and fifth grounds of appeal simply attack the decision upon questions of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court and do not afford a ground for interference in second appeal.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Under the Civil Law, unlawful entry is not an essential element of trespass. [p. 666, col. 1.]

A trespasser, before force is used to eject him, even such force as a slight push, must always be given an opportunity of withdrawing peaceably notwithstanding the fact that the trespass is committed in a place where a notice forbidding entry is stuck up. [p. 666, col. 2.]

Where a trespasser without being given an opportunity of withdrawing peaceably is given a slight push, whereby he suffers neither in person nor in reputation, he has a cause of action owing to the infringement of a civil right but is not entitled to more than nominal damages. [p. 666, cols 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 26th of May 1919, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, First Court at Mymensingh, dated the 29th of January 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Choudury (with him Babus Kali Kinkar Chakraburtty, Birendra Kumar De and Jatindra Nath Sanyal), for the Appellant.—The law of civil trespass is the same in the case of a Railway property as in the case of individual property. Reads section 122 of the Railways Act and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 27, paragraphs 1492, 1495 My entry was not unlawful as I was there on invitation. There is no civil trespass unless the entry was unlawful. Refers to Indermaur's Common Law, 11th Edition, page 328, Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 23, paragraphs: 1487-88. If there was an entry by license there can be no civil or common law trespass.

[NEWBOULD, J.—But if a man abuses an authority given him by the law, he becomes a trespasser ab initio. See Six Carpenters' case (1)].

The case of a trespasser ab initio is different. If I enter upon another's land by leave and license, I can under no circumstances be made liable for civil trespass. If I committed any offence I might be liable for that. From the Six Carpenters' case (1) it is clear that there is a distinction between authority of law and private authority. There is no trespass ab initio by abuse of private authority. Refers to Pollock on Torts, 10th Edition, page 413.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Assuming that you are a trespasser, how does that justify the assault?]

That is my second point. If I was there unlawfully no body has a right to use physical force and drive me out without requesting me to leave. See Halsburys' Laws of England, Volume 27, paragraph 1505, Volume 23, paragraph 1488.

Then comes the most important question, the question of damages. Reads Ratanlal on Torts, 6th Edition, page 178, Indermaur's Common Law, 11th Edition, page 461. Special damage need not be proved in a case of assault. So that there is no justification for giving me only nominal damages Lastly, there is no reason why I should not be entitled to my full costs. I have succeeded on the merits and the lower Appellate Court has exercised an unsound discretion in not allowing me my full costs. Refers to Justin Hull v. Paull (2).

Mr. Langford James, Counsel (with him Babu Ambicapada Chaudhury), for the Respondent. —Having regard to the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court it cannot be seriously argued that the plaintiff was not a trespasser. The entry of the plaintiff need not be unlawful from the beginning. Even if unlawful entry were an essential element of trespass, the plaintiff has nothing to complain, for the finding of the final Court of fact amounts to a finding that his entry on the Railway property was unlawful from the beginning. As the plaintiff was a trespasser the assault, if any, was justifiable. See Pratab Doji v. Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Co. (3). Then on the question of the amount of damages, as the plaintiff has neither suffered in person nor in reputation, he has only a technical cause of action owing to an infringement of a civil right which caused him no real damage. Under the circumstances the plaintiff can claim nothing beyond nominal damages.

In the cross-objection my contention is that there was no cause of action even in the technical sense. Much has been made of the fact that there was no request to leave, but the fact that there was a notice prohibiting trespass, was sufficient to render any such request to withdraw unnecessary. On the question of costs also, my submission is that as the defendant succeeded in reducing the major portion of the damages claimed, he should have been given his full costs.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Choudhury replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of what has rightly been described by the learned Counsel for the respondent as a storm in a tea cup. The plaintiff and the defendant are two gentlemen residing at Mymensingh. On the 15th July 1917 the first train from Mymensingh to Netrokona was run across a newly erected bridge. On the evening of that day the plaintiff and defendant were both on the embankment leading to this bridge. The defendant was accompanied by two ladies. The plaintiff passed in front of those ladies not noticing that they were there. The plaintiff's conduct caused annoyance to the ladies and the defendant did not realize that the plaintiff's rudeness was unintentional. The defendant had authority from the Agent of the Railway Company to remove trespassers from that place and he went and gave the plaintiff a slight push. He did not go through the formality of asking the plaintiff to go and waiting for his refusal before using physical force. On these finding the lower Appellate Court has awarded the plaintiff damages amounting to 5 rupees. These findings must be accepted in second appeal, and on these findings we think that the lower Court was perfectly right.

(1) (1610) 1 Sm. L. C. (11th Ed.) 132; 8 Coke 146*a*; 77 E. R. 695.

It is contended that these findings are insufficient for holding that the plaintiff was a trespasser. With that we cannot agree. The plaintiff's case on this issue is based on the facts that there was an implied permission to the public to go to the quarters of one Mr. Mookerjee which was on the Railway land. But it is found that there could be no reasonable claim on the part of the plaintiff that he had the right to take the route he did. It is strongly contended that either under section 122 of the Railways Act or under the Civil Law there can be no trespass without an unlawful entry. We are unable to accept this proposition of law. Section 122 of the Railways Act has no application to the present case. Section 122 defines a specific criminal offence and has no bearing whatever on the rights of an occupier of land to eject trespassers therefrom. But even if unlawful entry were an essential element of trespass the finding we have just quoted amounts to a finding that the entry on this part of the Railway property was unlawful, that is to say, without the consent of the Railway Authorities.

As regards damages we think that on these findings it is absurd to contend that the plaintiff has a claim to anything beyond nominal damages. He has certainly not suffered in person, and although the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case in the first instance took a more favourable view of the plaintiff's case and held that he was not a trespasser yet he did not find the plaintiff suffered any loss of reputation. The case is one in which the plaintiff has cause of action owing to infringement of civil right but in which no real damage has been caused to him.

The last point taken in this appeal was the question of costs. Certain English cases were cited and also the decision of this Court—Justin Hull v. Faull (2). This is a case of the Original Side of this Court. The practice in the Muffusil is that costs should depend on the result of the case and it is usual when the suit partly succeeds for proportionate costs to be given. The important difference between cases in England and on the Original Side of this Court and cases in the Muffasil is that in cases in the Muffasil costs are much more directly proportionate to the amount claimed. In the present case we are unable to hold that the learned District Judge in following the usual practice in granting costs exercised an unsound discretion.

In the cross-objection it is urged that the mere fact that there was a notice forbidding trespass at the place where the plaintiff was, was sufficient to render any request to withdraw unnecessary. That contention we are unable to accept. Before force is used even such slight force as in the present case a trespasser must always be given an opportunity of withdrawing peaceably. It is further contended in cross-objection that the defendant should have been given full costs in the lower Appellate Court as he succeeded in reducing the damages awarded from Rs. 700 to Rs. 5. But for the same reason as we have rejected the appellant's contention as regards costs we reject the defendant's also.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal and disallow the cross objection. As both parties failed before us we make no order as to costs in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 50, O. XXI —'May apply,' meaning of—Death of party defendant after decree and before execution sale—Legal representative not brought on record—Sale, whether nullity —Suit on mortgagee—Puisne mortgagee impleaded as defendant—Compromise decree—Puisne mortgagee, whether "judgment-debtor."

The words 'may apply' in section 50, Civil Procedure Code, are equivalent to 'shall apply', for, except in the sense that the decree-holder may, if he chooses, drop execution altogether, there is no option left to him and it is imperative on him to follow the procedure enjoined by the section if he desires further execution. [p. 669, col. 1.]

Proceedings taken in execution of a decree without the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor being brought on the record are void and do not amount to a mere irregularity, and, if the proceedings have culminated in a sale, the sale is altogether void and is a nullity and need not be set aside, for this purpose no distinction can be drawn between the case of a judgment-debtor's death before the order for sale is passed and the case of a death after the order. In a suit by a first mortgagee impleading the puisne mortgagee as party defendant the latter filed a statement stating that he had no objection to the passing of a decree and praying that the balance remaining, after selling the property and paying the plaintiff, might be applied towards his mortgage. The plaintiff and other defendants filed a compromise petition in terms whereof a decree was passed. The puisne mortgagee, who was, however, not removed from the record died after decree. In due course the mortgage decree was executed and properties sold without the representatives of the deceased puisne mortgagee being brought on record. In the present suit by the heirs of the puisne mortgagee to enforce their mortgage:

Held, (1) that the puisne mortgagee was a judgment-debtor in the prior suit; [p. 669, col. 1.]

(2) that the mortgage security was not extinguished as the sale in execution of the decree in the prior suit was a nullity. [p. 669, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. Rungachariar and N. C. Vijiaraghava Chariar, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff's mortgage security had been extinguished by the decree in Original Suit No. 11 of 1898 and the execution proceedings therein which culminated in the sale. Aiyasawmi, the puisne mortgagee in that suit, was only a pro forma defendant and is not a judgment debtor. It was not necessary to bring his legal representatives on the record.

The sale is not a nullity. The failure to bring on record legal representatives is only an irregularity which makes the sale voidable.

Besides the sale has not been set aside within the limitation period. See Malhorjun v. Narhari (1), Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (2), Abdur Rahman v. Shankar Dat (3), Aba v. Dhondu Bai (4) and Krishnayya v. Unnissa Begam (5).

Messrs. T. Narasimha Iyengar and A. Ganesha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Aiyasawmi, the puisne mortgagee, was not virtually a party to the decree in the prior suit.

The sale in the prior suit was an absolute nullity as it was held without bringing on record the legal representatives of Aiyasawmi. It is not an irregularity. Groves v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6) and Samandan Karkat Edathil Rayarappan Nambiar v. Malikandi Aketh Mayan (7).

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the judgment about to be delivered and have nothing to add to it.

RAMESAM, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought on the foot of a mortgage-deed dated 3rd November 1896 for the recovery of the mortgage amount, by an assignee from the heir of the mortgagee, Ayyasami Pillai. The main defence is that the mortgage was extinguished by reason of the decree in Original Suit No. 41 of 1898 and the proceedings in its execution. That suit was based on a prior mortgage dated 17th March 1896 and Ayyaswami was the 8th defendant therein. In his written statement (Exhibit V C) he stated that he had no objection to the passing of a decree and prayed that the balance, after selling the property and paying off the amount due to the plaintiff, might be paid towards his mortgage. The other defendants in that case originally contested the suit but afterwards filed a compromise petition (Exhibit C) by which the amount to be decreed was determined and a compromise decree (Exhibit D) was passed. The learned Vakil for the respondent argued that Ayyasami was not a party to that decree. I cannot agree to this contention. His name appears in the cause title of the decree and the Court was not even asked to strike his name out of the record. The suit cannot be regarded as still pending so far as he is concerned nor can it be said that it was dismissed as against him. It follows, therefore, that the decree directing the sale of the properties without reserving his right (i. e.,) free of his mortgage [Vide Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (8)] is a decree affecting him and is binding on him. If duly executed it ought to extinguish his mortgage.

The property was sold on the 9th July 1904 (Exhibit VII) sometime before the sale, i. e., on 6th April 1904, Ayyasami died and his legal representatives were not brought on record. In these circumstances, the Subordinate Judge held that the sale could not affect his interest. It is contended for the appellant that Ayyasami was a pro forma defendant and cannot be regarded as a judgment-debtor and it was not necessary that his legal representatives should be brought on the record. This contention is inconsistent with the main plea that he was a party to the decree and his mortgage was, therefore, extinguished. A second mortgagee when impleaded in a first mortgagee's suit is not a pro forma defendant. He can redeem the earlier mortgage by paying up the decree amount at any time before the sale. He can apply to set aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89 or 90. He can apply that the balance of the sale proceeds after discharging the prior mortgagee's dues may be paid to him. Though it is true that, what was mortgaged to the plaintiff in that suit was the mortgagor's property as it stood on 17th March 1896 and, therefore, the plaintiff could not get the property sold free of subsequent encumbrances; the plaintiff could do this only by a properly constituted suit and proceedings in execution, i. e., by impleading the puisne mortgagee or his representatives, and the interest of the mortgagor which the prior mortgagee would then be entitled to sell may be said to comprise, at the time of the sale, the interest of the subsequent mortgagees and the mortgagor's equity of redemption. I am, therefore, of opinion that Ayyasami was a judgment debtor in Original Suit No. 11 of 1898.

It is next contended that the sale is not a nullity. It is said (1) that the proceedings in the execution of a mortgage-decree after the order for sale is passed (and the proceedings in the execution of a money-decree after the order for attachment is made) are administrative, and (2) that the irregularity in not bringing the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor on the record will only make the sale voidable and as it has not been set aside within thirty days of the sale (Art. 166, Limitation Act) or within one year (Art. 12) the sale stands, not being a nullity. It may be that some proceedings in execution after an order for sale is made do not amount to "determination of any question within section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908" so as to amount to a decree, for the purpose of being appealed against [see Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (9)] and may be said to be "administrative" as opposed to "adjudicating" in the sense that they do not adjudicate a right but carry out some prior order but they are nonetheless judicial proceedings in the sense that they are proceedings of a Court of justice and not of an executive authority and if not legally carried out, may be materially defective. This leads me to the next question as to the nature and effect of the defect in the proceedings.

Section 50 of the Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to section 234 of the old Code) lays down that "where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased." It is obvious that the word 'may' in this section is equivalent to 'shall,' for except in the sense that the decree holder may, if he choses, drop the execution altogether there is no option left to him and it is imperative on him to follow the prosedure enjoined by the section, if he desires farther execution. As it is opposed to all notions of justice to allow legal proceedings to be taken against an estate without there being some person in the record to represent the estate, one would suppose that such proceedings in execution taken without having the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor on the record are void and do not amount to a mere irregularity. It is difficult to see how, for this purpose, any distinction can be drawn between the case of a judgment-debtor's death before the order for sale is passed and the case of a death after the order. The estate has to be represented on the record by some one interested in watching the proceedings until the sale is confirmed. I will now examine the cases on the point.

The case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) was very much relied on for the appellants but, in my opinion, does not help them. In that case the procedure laid down by the Code was followed. "An application was made to bring the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor on the record. The Court received the application and did issue notice to the party named as the heir. He contended that he was not the right person, but the Court, having received his protest decided that he was the right person, and so proceeded with the execution. In so doing the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake, it is true: but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right" (Lord Hobhouse at page 347). These observations do not apply to the case now before us. The prosedure laid down by the Code was not followed in this case. This is not, therefore, the case of an erroneous decision, ruling or exercise of discretion of the Judge in a matter in which the Court had jurisdiction. I think that the interests of Aiyasami was not represented in law or in fact in the proceedings in execution after 6th April 1904 and the sale of the property, so far as his interest was sought to be affected by it, was, therefore, without jurisdiction and null and void [vide Khiaramal v. Daim (10) which is a case of the decree being itself void]. But there is no substance in the distinction that, when the decree was duly obtained against the deceased judgment-debtor, the sale in execution after a decree without the heir of the judgment debtor properly on the record is not a nullity. This is clear from the case of Rashid-un-nissa v. Muhammad Ismail

Khan (11) vide also Pasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (12) where it was held that execution proseedings obtained against a minor legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor without his being represented by a proper guardian ad litem are void. A fortiori, a sale in execution carried out against a dead person (or no person) is void and should be regarded a nullity and has not got to be set aside. It seems to me that the decisions of Indian High Courts prior to Rashid-un-nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (11) i.e, (a) those in favour of the appellant such as Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (2) and Abdur Rahman v. Shankar Dat (3) which merely follows it, (b) Aba v. Dhondu Bai (4) which, while seeming to disapprove of Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (2) are based finally on grounds not quite clear and (b) decisions like Ramasami Ayyangar v. Bogirathi Ammal (13) and Krishnayya v. Unnisa Begam (5), (where Shephard, J, said that it was not a case of mere irregularity but the learned Judges in Letters Patent Appeal described the defect, as a material irregularity causing substantial injury), which are rightly commented on by Mr. Rangachari, the learned Vakil for the appellants, as inconclusive, are not of much value. But the other Madras decisions cited before us viz., Groves v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6) and Samandan Karkat Edathil Rayarappan Nambiar v. Malikandi Aketh Mayan (7) are decidedly against the appellants. The language of the learned Judges in these cases is clear and unambiguous. I agree with the remarks of Boddam, J. in Groves v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6) where he disagrees with Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (2). It is said that Art. 12 of the Limitation Act was not considered in those cases as the matter arose in execution and not in a separate suit. On the view taken by their Lordships in those cases, viz., that the sale was a nullity, no such question could arise. I may add that, if the sale in pursuance of an order for sale against the judgment-debtor (when living) is not a nullity but only voidable, as contended by the appellants any attempt to set aside the sale must be made in execution and not by a regular suit and no occasion for the application of Art. 12 can arise. The cases in Narayana Kothan v. Kalianasundaram Pillai (14) [which Boddam, J., described in Groves v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6) as supporting his view], Muhammad Rafi v. Muhammad Askari (15), Sechagiri Row v. Tangaluri Jagannadham (16), [Sri Krishnasawmy Iyengar v. Soorikutti Ganapathy Iyer (17)] and Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Prashad Narayan Singh (18) are not cases of the judgmen-debtor's death and need not be considered. As to the cases decided in Calcutta, in Net Lall Sahoo v. Sheikh Kareem Bux (19) the heirs were parties to the proceedings in execution. In Bepin Behari Bera v. Shashi Bhushan Datta (20) the sale was a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act of the Bengal Code and may perhaps be distinguished on that ground. But it must be admitted that the manner in which the Madras cases were referred to at page 763 supports the appellants. So far as the reference to Groves v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6) is concerned, I would observe with great deference to the eminent Judges that decided Bepin Behari Bera v. Shashi Bhushan Datta (20) that, though Boddam, J. concludes saying that the sale should be set aside, there is no doubt as to what the learned Judge meant (vide pages 123—125) viz., that the sale should be declared void. In Jagadish Bhattacharjee v. Rama Sundari Dasya (21) (case of a money-decree) Richardson, J merely follows Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (2), Aba v. Dhondu Bai (4), Net Lall Sahoo v. Sheikh Kareem Bux (19) and Shamsul Huda, J. was content to follow Bepin Behari Bera v. Shashi Bhushan Datta (20). The decision in Rukmin v. Jodha Singh (22) might be also described as inconclusive but for the manner in which Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) was distinguished by the learned Judges. In my opinion, the cases in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) might have been distinguished on the ground that it was not, whereas the case before their Lordships is, a case of nullity.

The distinction made between an application for attachment and an application for sale in Vuppa Sitaramayya v. Minchula Gopalakrishnamma (23) in the course of applying the decision in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (24) (a decision on O. XXI, r. 22) cannot help the appellants. The application there was made against the judgment-debtor himself and no question arose as to the effect of section 50, Civil Procedure Code, which would certainly cover even all applications in execution after attachment. I, therefore, hold that the execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 11 of 1898 not being carried out so as to affect Aiyyasami's interest, his mortgage is not extinguished.

The only other question is whether the payment of Rs. 240 on 15th February 1904 is true. The evidence is all one way and I accept the finding of the Court below. The suit is, therefore, not barred.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

There is a memorandum of objections by the plaintiff. He objects to those portions of the judgment and decree which direct that the plaintiff should execute an indemnity bond for Rs. 3,775 to be answerable to the reversioners of Ayyasami on the death of the 8th defendant. The reversioners are not parties to the suit. I do not think that the directions for the benefit of the absentee reversioners is justified. I agree with the plaintiff's contention and allow his cross-objections with costs and direct that clause (3) of the decree should be deleted.

Time for redemption is extended to 28th February 1922.

In applying the rule of res judicata Courts should be influenced by no technical considerations, but by matters of substance within the limits applied by law. [p. 672, col. 2.]

Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Singh, 33 Ind. Cas. 914; 43 C. 694; 14 A. L. J. 466; 20 C. W. N. 738; 18 Bom. L. R. 397; 23 C. L J. 621; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 419; 20 M. L. T. 1; 3 L. W. 514; 31 M. L. J. 77; 43 I. A. 91 (P. C.), referred to.

In a proceeding for grant of Letters of Administration, the question before the Court is one of representation to the estate and not of distribution, and it is only for the purpose of determining the question of representation that the Court is called upon to decide whether the applicant is entitled to the whole or any part of the estate of the deceased within the meaning of section 24 of the Probate and Administration Act, and such finding is not res judicata in a suit in which the question of title to the properties has to be determined. First appeal against the judgment passed by the District Judge, Amherst.

Mr. May Oung (with him Mr. Eusoof), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J.—Plaintiff, Maung Tun Yin, sued for the administration of the estate of his deceased step mother, Ma Nyein Me, claiming that he and the second and third defendants were the sole heirs of the deceased. The District Court found that the suit was res judicata by reason of the proceedings in Suit No. 19 of 1919 of the same Court, wherein Letters of Administration to the estate of Ma Nyein Me were granted to Ma Sein Yin. In the proceedings under section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act the Court found, after recording evidence, that the present plaintiff-appellant had no right of inheritance to Ma Nyein Me's estate.

The only point for decision is, therefore, whether the plaintiff's right to inherit must be considered to be res judicata in view of the decision in Suit No. 19 of 1919.

In Ma Tok v. Ma Thi (1) a Bench of this Court pointed out that findings of fact arrived at in cases of application for Letters of Administration would not operate as res judicata in suits for administration or possession of property.

The learned District Judge apparently was of opinion that this finding was merely an obiter dictum, but a perusal of the judgment of this case makes it clear that the Bench declined to go into a question of adoption in an appeal from an order granting Letters of Administration, on the ground that such a question could subsequently be fought over again in a regular suit.

The finding on the question of res judicata was, therefore, necessary for the decision of the appeal and cannot be brushed aside as an obiter dictum. It was arrived at after a consideration of the rulings on the subject and it was pointed out that no decisions to the contrary were cited.

In Maqbul Shah Ahmad v. Muhammad Azmat (2), decided, in 1918, a Bench of Punjab Chief Court taking the same view held that in a proceeding for grant of Letters of Administration the question before the Court is one of representation to the estate and not of distribution, and it was only for the purpose of determining the question of representation that the Court was called upon to decide whether the applicant would be entitled to the whole or any part of the estate of the deceased within the meaning of section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, and that such a finding was not res judicata in a suit in which the question of title to the properties had to be determined. With this decision I am in entire agreement.

Sheorarsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Singh (3) is quoted as an authority for the opposite view, but does not appear to be so in reality. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the application of the rule of res judicata by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations, but by matter of substance within the limits applied by law. This is sound common sense. The application of this principle would not seem to justify a finding that the question decided in the Letters of Administration proceeding in the present case was res judicata in the subsequent administration suit.

In the Calcutta case above cited the District Court granted Probate of a Will and the decision was affirmed by the High Court on appeal.

The appellants, therefore, sued for a declaration that they were next reversioners to the estate according to the Hindu Law in the case of an intestacy, and as such entitled to obtain revocation of Probate.

The Judicial Committee without deciding the question of res judicata held that the suit was not maintainable.

The Bombay case of Kalyanchand Lalchand v. Sitabai Dhanasa (4), which is in favour of the District Court's view, was also a Probate matter. A Will had been held not proved and Probate refused. In a suit brought by the widow of the deceased for recovery of the property from the executors under the Will a Full Bench held that the judgment in the Probate proceeding operated as res judicata between the parties under section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act and section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The ground for the finding was that as contentious Probate proceedings must take the form of a suit, they constitute a suit within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This is to my mind a dangerous doctrine. Section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act says that in any case where there is contention the proceeding shall take as nearly as possible the form of a suit according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in which the petitioner shall be the plaintiff, and the person, who may have appeared to oppose the grant, shall be the defendant.

The section says the proceedings shall take the form of a suit, which seems to be merely a rule of procedure; it does not say the proceedings shall become or be deemed to be a suit.

In the District Court there were no less than four claimants or sets of claimants to letters in the present instance.

It is an arguable thesis that, on the strict letter of the law, the miscellaneous proceedings under the Probate and Administration Act should have been converted into four suits.

In a case of this description regard must be had to the formality of the proceedings in the matter of the applications for Letters.

Although the matters at issue were apparently well understood, no issues were actually framed and no formal issues were drawn up.

It is admitted that plaintiff Tun Yin was a step-son of the deceased. The District Court found that he had forfeited his right to inherit by his unfilial conduct, although there was no allegation to this effect in the pleadings.

The parties confined themselves almost entirely to proving their right to obtain Letters as heirs and made practically no effort to rebut their opponents' case. Under the circumstances, it would be unjust to declare that the parties are debarred from proving their right to inherit in a regular suit.

I would set aside the finding of the District Court on the preliminary issue and the decree dismissing the suit and remand the suit for disposal on its merits.

Costs of this appeal to be borne by the estate.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1918, (Original Suit No 111 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura.)

The Advocate General instructed by Messrs. Brightwell and Morseby, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar (with him Messrs. K. S. Vaikuntam Aiyar and M. Krishna Bharati), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The decision appealed against gives plaintiff a charge for two lakhs of rupees on the properties purchased by third defendant, appellant at a sale held in execution of first defendant's money-decree against 2nd defendant, after the dismissal of plaintiff's claim.

The nature and extent of plaintiff's right over the properties depends on the effect of a series of transactions originating in the liability of 2nd defendant, her husband, for mahar settled at £ 22,500 when their marriage took place in 1884. This liability is referred to in Exhibits E and F and is not disputed before us, although those documents are not registered and may not affect the security for its satisfaction, to which they refer. This attempt to provide security was due to second defendant becoming indebted; and in 1909 he further gave Exhibit A undertaking (1) to re-pay to plaintiff a loan taken for the discharge of his debts, within five years from the income of the properties, which had fallen to him as his share under the partition, Exhibit G, and (2) to sell her at the end of five years those properties for two lakhs of the mahar debt or to give her possession thereof apparently as security for that sum. This document also was unregistered and, therefore, was valid only as an agreement to sell. On this the loan was, as Exhibit H series and K show, advanced; but nothing was done in pursuance of the provision for sale or delivery and on the 11th December 1914 the properties were attached by 1st defendant. Second defendant, however, in defiance of his obligations under Exhibit A and the attachment gave a lease for three years, Exhibit B, for an advanced rent of Rs. 7,500 to P. W. No. 1 and another; and this was followed within two months by a reference on the part of plaintiff and 2nd defendant to arbitrators of the differences, which, according to the muchilika Exhibit J, had arisen between them, the arbitration ending in an award Exhibit J-1 which was made a decree of Court, Exhibit. J-3. It is with the effect of Exhibit J 3 that we are concerned, its terms being that (1) 2nd defendant should within one month execute a sale-deed conveying to plaintiff the properties referred to in Exhibit A or that in case of his default the Court should execute one on his behalf, (2) he should borrow Rs. 7,500 from plaintiff, re-pay the lessee under Exhibit B the amount received from him and then put plaintiff, in possession of the properties which, until he did so, should be charged with two lakhs of rupees for her benefit and (3) he should re-pay the plaintiff within two years another amount already borrowd on a pronote.

In pursuance of this, the lease, Exhibit B, was terminated and plaintiff alleges that she was put in possession of the properties, her claim was made and dismissed, and third defendant purchased, at the sale, which followed. In her suit plaintiff asked generally for a decree vacating the order on her claim and declaring that the properties were not liable to be sold. But the lower Court refused the latter relief on the ground that she had not perfected her right by obtaining a sale-deed and it is not suggested on her behalf that this refusal was wrong. The question is only whether the lower Court was entitled to grant her a charge for two lakhs on the property.

The charge it allowed was not created by Exhibit A which was unregistered, and, therefore, it must be supported, if at all, as created by Exhibit J-3. That decree was, however, passed after the attachment of the property; and it is argued with reference to section 64, Civil Procedure Code, that, as the award, which it embodied, resulted from the consent of plaintiff and 2nd defendant to a reference to arbitration it must be regarded as a private transfer of the property attached or, consistently with plaintiff's case of an interest in it and as void against third defendant's claim, which is enforceable under the attachment. It is not necessary to consider whether a decree embodying an award can be so regarded, in case it is proved that the reference to arbitration was collusive and the whole proceedings a device to invest a private arrangement between the parties with the appearance of a public adjudication. For, the learned practitioners who appear for third defendant, have expressly disclaimed any intention to attack the lower Court's finding that the contrary was the case. And then in accordance with Qurban Ali v. Ashraf Ali (1) and Kasi Visvanatha Chettiar v. Ramaswami Athitha Nadar (2), the former being a decision of a Full Bench, and proceeding on general principle, not on any of the particular facts before the Court, we must hold that a decree such as Exhibit J-3 which embodied an award is not a private transfer, which can be treated as void under section 64.

Plaintiff has, however, still to establish that the charge she is claiming is created by Exhibit J-3. The lower Court held that she did so on the ground that, as her claim to two lakhs, as part of her Mahar was in fact accompanied by possession of the suit properties, she had under Muhammaden Law a lien on them and a right to retain possession until that mahar debt was discharged. It referred in support of this to Mulla's Principles of Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, Rr. 206, 207 and before us, the dictum of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Abi Dhunimsa Bibi v. Muhammad Fathi Uddin (3) that "Muhammadan wife has a lien over the property of her husband in her possession for unpaid dower," has been relied on. But this contention rests on a misapprehension, due perhaps to indiscriminate use by the learned author and the learned Judge just referred to, of the term "wife" to denote both a divorced wife and a widow, since the law recognises such a lien as that now claimed in both of these cases. We have not, however, been shown that the right of the wife to a lien before the marriage is dissolved, is recognized by any authority; and in fact the context of the learned Judge's dictum with its reference to "the estate of the deceased husband" and two cases, in which only a widow's possession of such an estate was in question, shows that he had no such extension of this well-defined doctrine, as plaintiff requires, in mind. This failing, it is necessary to consider her claim, as it is put forward before us, with direct reference to the terms of Exhibit J.3.

One term relied on provides that "defendant (here 2nd defendant) shall after paying the lessees and redeeming the lease, put the plaintiff in possession of the properties covered by it and till then the properties shall be under a mortgage charge for Rs. 2,00,000." This is the only provision for charge and in fact the decree directs elsewhere as regards the mahar generally that plaintiff is entitled to it during 2nd defendant's lifetime only when he pays it of his own accord, and it is, therefore, on this term if it all, that plaintiff can succeed. Reading as it stands, it provides for a charge to continue only until plaintiff is given possession, as she was shortly after Exhibit J.3 was passed; and, if so, it had ceased to be operative before the present suit began and no claim to relief therein can be founded on it. Plaintiff, however, contends that the words "till then" cover, not only the contingency specified in their immediate context, but also the performance of the other obligation imposed on 2nd defendant in the preceding portion of the decree, the execution within a month of a sale-deed and further that this interpretation is in accordance with the award in the terms of which the decree is drawn up. The answer is, firstly, that the words "till then," can most naturally be read in connection with the contingency, the transfer of possession referred to in the distinct clause in which they stand, and that after that transfer, when plaintiff would be in enjoyment of the property, the right to a charge would be useless, since it would not assist her to obtain performance of 2nd defendant's remaining obligation, the giving of a sale-deed, her remedy by execution being available. And, secondly, although it is true, that for some purpose, which is obscure, Exhibit J.2, the award, provides in clause 9 (b) in accordance with plaintiff's contention for a charge "for a period extending from this day to the date of the completion of the said sale" we are not at liberty to import those words into a decree which is easily intelligible in itself and without them, which was passed at plaintiff's own instance against which she did not appeal and which had become final in its present form before 3rd defendant made his purchase.

The grounds, on which plaintiff claims a charge, being, unsustainable, the appeal must be allowed and her suit must be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1665 OF 1921.

January 25, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau.

GANGA RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, AMRITSAR, THROUGH HARI KISHEN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 3 (13), 172, 193—"Street," what is—Lane looked after by mahaldars but accessible to public, whether street—Committee, refusal of, to allow projection over such land—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to interfere.

SADHU SARAN v. AMBIKA LAL.

A lane which is accessible to the public, whether permanently or temporarily, is a 'street' within the meaning of the definition contained in section 3 (13) of the Punjab Municipal Act.

The fact that the arrangements for lighting and clearing the lane are made by the mahalladars at their expenses, and that the lane is cemented by them, is not material; ner the fact that the mahalladars have a right to close the lane to the public, if, as a matter of fact, the public have never been prevented by any physical obstruction from entering it.

A Municipal Committee has full power to withhold permission for the building of a structure that will project over a street, and a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in such a matter.

Section 193 of the Punjab Municipal Act refers only to buildings to be erected on private property and has no application to a structure that projects over a street.

Municipal Committee of Delhi v. Devi Sahai, 62 P R. 1907; 105 P. L. R. 1908; 147 P. W. R. 1907; relied upon.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 18th June 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 23rd December 1920.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Appellant.

Lala Sham Das for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff applied to the Municipal Committee of Amritsar for permission to build a balcony in front of his house. The Committee required him to pay Rs. 20 which he refused to do, and finally it rejected his application. He then sued for an injunction to restrain the Committee from preventing him from building the balcony, He was given a decree in the First Court, but the District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal.

It is contended for the appellant that as his application for permission to build the balcony was refused more than two months after he had made it the building of the balcony should, under the proviso to section 193 of the Punjab Municipal Act, be deemed to have been sanctioned absolutely. This contention, however, is not correct if, as the defendant Committee maintains, the lane in which the plaintiff's house opens is a "street" as defined in section 3 (13) of the Act, as section 193 refers only to buildings to be erected on private property. See [Municipal Committee of Delhi v. Devi Sahai (1).]

The fact that the arrangements for lighting and clearing the lane are made by the mohalladars at their expenses, and that the lane is cemented by them, is not material. A lane which is accessible to the public whether permanently or temporarily is a "street". The lane in which the plaintiff's house is situate is closed by a wall at one end, and at the other end, where it opens on to the main street, there is a door, but it is not alleged that that door is ever closed. Whether or not the mohalladars have a right to close the door and exclude the public need not be determined. Even if they have that right the lane would be a "street" as the public have not, as a matter of fact, been prevented by any physical obstruction from entering it although it would not be a "public street". I agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court that the lane in question is a "street" as defined in the Municipal Act. This being so, it is clear from section 172 that the plaintiff is not entitled to build the balcony without the permission of the Committee. The Committee has full power to withhold permission for the building of a structure that will project over a street, and a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in such a matter.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

A Road Cess Return signed by a landlord is admissible as against him to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant. [p. 678, col. 1.]

SADHU SARAN v. AMBIKA LAL.

A batwara khasra is not a "record" within the meaning of section 35 of the Evidence Act and an entry made therein of the name of a tenant in possession is not admissible to prove the fact of his tenancy. [p 678, col. .]

There is nothing, however, to prevent a tenant rom putting the batwara khasra in evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act to show the past history of the land before the creation of the tenancy in his favour if that can in any way lend support to his contention [p. 678, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Shahabad.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. ParmeshwarDayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs sought to redeem a usufructuary mortgage, executed some 22 or 23 years before the suit, in favour of his landlords-defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

According to the plaintiffs, one Bilati Ahir had an occupancy holding of 5 bighas 6 kathas 17 dhurs, his son, Sansar Ahir, and two others sold 3 bighas 1 katha 3 dhurs of this land to the mother of the plaintiff No. 1 who in 1898 or 1897 mortgaged it to his landlord stipulating that they should remain in possession appropriating the profits till re-payment of the debt. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5, however, at the time of the Survey managed to get defendants Nos. 6 and 7, Thag Koeri and Ratan Koeri, recorded as the occupancy raiyats of the land which was measured in the survey as two plots Nos. 1069 and 1070, comprising 2 bighas, 18 kathas 5 dhurs. In 1324 F. S. the plaintiff No. 1 tendered the principal amount due under the bond but the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 refused to receive it. The plaintiffs then instituted the suit giving rise to this second appeal joining as defendants Thag Koeri and Ratan Koeri and certain persons who claimed interest through purchase from them.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the mortgagee, landlords, did not contest the suit, and though some of the other defendants filed written statements, it was defendant No. 15, the present appellant, who alone really resisted the claim. He denied that the plaintiff or his predecessors ever held the land under any title or ever mortgaged it. According to him the land was the bakasht land of defendants Nos 1 to 5 who settled it with Bhagbat Koeri who was succeeded by his cousin Thag Koeri. In execution of a decree against Thag Koeri the land was sold and purchased by Paltan Koeri who in 1915 sold it to defendant No. 15, the present appellant.

The Munsif found that there was a sale of the land now in dispute to the mother of the plaintiff, and that the land mentioned in the kabala Exhibit 4 was identical with plots Nos. 1069 and 1070. He relied on a batwara khasra Exhibit 1 and a map showing that Bilati Ahir was in 1866 acknowledged by the signature of the landlords to be a tenant of plots identifiable with those in dispute. He relied also on a Road Cess Return (Exhibit 5) of 1888 signed by the landlords showing the plaintiff as tenant, and on the landlords amabandis of 1872. He found that the entry in the Record of Rights was merely based on the lease given by the landlords to defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and that the presumption of its correctness was rebutted by the evidence produced by the plaintiff. He disbelieved the defence evidence as to possession, and found that the sale certificate granted to Paltan Koeri and receipts granted after the lease to Bhagbat could have no weight in the case and were not binding on the plaintiffs. He held that the plaintiff had proved the mortgage. He, therefore, granted a decree.

The learned District Judge on appeal has upheld the decree of the Munsif. He held that the batwara papers of 1866 proved that Bilati Ahir was then tenant of the plots now in suit, and that the plots in suit were the lands sold by the son of Bilati Ahir to the mother of the plaintiff He found the sale-deed to be genuine. He laid special stress on the Road Cess Return signed by the landlords showing a holding to the extent of the disputed plots in the plaintiff's name. He disbelieved the oral evidence of the defence witnesses, and believed in the genuineness of the mortgage bond. He described the documents put forward by the defence as fictitious ones evidently executed with a view to the Survey proceedings without any title.

On the face of the judgment the findings of fact by the learned District Judge would preclude access by the appellant in second appeal. It has been found that defendants

Nos. 1 to 5 did in fact take the lands in suit in usufructuary mortgage.

It is contended, however, that the appellant was a bona fide purchaser without notice and that the Record of Rights entitled him to assume that his vendor had a good title. It is urged, too, that the Courts below were not entitled to rely on the batwara khasra and map or to use the Road Cess Return against the appellant.

The case of Perma Roy v. Kishen Roy (1) is authority for the proposition that a batwara khasra is not a "record" within the meaning of section 35 of the Evidence Act, 1872, and that an entry made therein of the name of a tenant in possession is not admissible in evidence, and Nanda Lal Fathak v. Mohunt Ohanurpat Das (2) is to the same effect. However, in the present case the batwara khasra was used to show the past history of the plots long before the defendant's predecessors in interest obtained a settlement and to show that in 1866 the land was raiyati land of Bilati. The above cited cases deal only with admissibility under section 35 of the Evidence Act. There is no reason why section 13 of the Evidence Act should not apply. Relief was being claimed against the landlords who signed the batwara papers. A batwara entry made under the old Act would not be admissible against the tenant if made after the creation of the tenancy, but here the partition was in 1856 and the tenancy on which the appellant relies was not created till 1906.

The Road Cess Return being signed by the landlords would be admissible as against them, and it shows, as against them that the plaintiffs were their tenants, and lends support to the case that Thug Koeri was never a tenant in possession.

With regard to the contention that the appellant had no notice of the mortgage and was an innocent purchaser, the mortgagees have been found to have entered into a fictitious transaction with a view to the Survey proceedings, as mortgagees they had no power to take away any of the mortgagor's rights; the mortgage still subsisted and any possession by the appellant must be subject to the mortgage, the appellant is merely a representative of the mortgagee and is not entitled to the relief asked for.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

No interest is chargeable either under Act XXXII of 1839, or as damages under section 73 of the Contract Act on a balance struck after an account between the plaintiff and the defendant wherein no mention is made of interest and where no notice has been given that interest would be charged.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, dated the 14th April 1920.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Razak, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought on bahi account on the allegation that on the 9th January 1914 Rs. 2,712 was found due by the defendant and a balance was struck, which was thumb-marked by the defendant. The suit was instituted on the 8th January 1920 for the recovery of principal, viz., Rs. 2,712 and interest, viz., Rs. 2,988, total Rs. 5,700 in all. The claim in respect of the principal has been decreed but that relating to interest has been dismissed on the ground that no agreement to pay interest has been alleged or proved.

The plaintiff has preferred this appeal and it has been contended on his behalf by Mr. Manohar Lal that interest ought to have been allowed as damages though there was no agreement to pay interest. The decision of the Court below is supported by authority and we are not prepared to hold that the order refusing to decree interest is wrong. In the case of Arjan Das v. Hakim Rai (1) it was held that no interest was chargeable either under Act XXXII of 1839 or as damages under section 73 of the Contract Act on a rugga which made no mention of interest, and where no notice had been given that interest would be charged.

In this case also it is not alleged that any notice was given. There is no force in this appeal and we dismiss it with costs.

It is the duty of a hotel-keeper to keep his premises in such a condition of safety as would reasonably prevent theft and take such care of the property of his guests as a man of ordinary prudence would, under the circumstances, take of his own goods. Where he fails in such a duty, he is, in case of a theft of the property of a guest, liable for its value. [p. 681, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are these:—The plaintiff (respondent) who is a commercial traveller, went to Cawnpore, in September 1918, and put up as a guest at the Civil and Military Hotel, Cawnpore, which was owned by the defendant-appellant. While staying in the hotel, he alleged that a suit-case of his, containing valuables to something over Rs. 3,000 in value, was stolen from the room he occupied while he was at dinner in another part of the building. He claimed to recover the value of the goods stolen from the defendant on the ground that the loss was due to the neglect of the defendant in keeping the premises in an unsafe condition. The defendant (appellant), among other pleas, pleaded that if the theft was committed, it was due to the fault or connivance of the plaintiff's own servant and that the defendant was not liable, and that the defendant had kept proper care and had taken proper steps to provide for the security of travellers staying in the hotel, and that there was no negligence on his part. The Trial Court came to the conclusion that there was no Statute Law in India applicable, and held that, therefore, it must be guided by the Common Law in England. Having found that it was not proved that the plaintiff had in any way been negligent, and that under the Common Law of England it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove that there was any negligence on the part of the defendant and that if goods were lost in an inn, the inn-keeper was prima facie liable and that the onus lay on him to prove otherwise, it decreed the suit. On appeal, this decree and the reasons for it were maintained by the learned District Judge. On appeal to this Court objection was taken to the finding on the point of law arrived at by the Court below. That decision was based largely on the case of Whateley v. Palanji Pestonji (1). That was a case referred by the Court of Small Causes in Bombay to the High Court, and from the opening words of the judgment of the High Court it would seem that the case was one concerning a hotel situated in the Island of Bombay, for the opening words are: "There is no law but the Common Law of England to regulate the relation of inn-keeper and guest in Bombay, in a case between an European and a Parsi." It is argued for the respondent that, in the absence of any Statute Law dealing with the subject in this country, the Common Law of England should be applied. It was, however, pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (2), that that is so, but only if the rules of English Law are found applicable to Indian society and the circumstances. There can be no doubt that hotels are built and managed very differently in England and in India, more certainly so in the Mofussil parts of India at the present time. Owing to the climate and for other reasons the quarters in which the residents live in Indian hotels are much more open and unconfined than in England. Unlike an English hotel an Indian hotel is more or less a thoroughfare to which the public have free access—pedlers with their wares, unemployed servants seeking employment, and so on—including snake-charmers, jugglers and such. It is also the custom in India for guests to take private servants with them, who have access not only to their master's rooms but also have opportunities of access to the rooms occupied by other persons, and menial servants must be employed and have of necessity frequent access at least to the bath rooms. We may point out that even in England the Common Law was greatly modified in favour of the inn-keeper by the Inn-keepers' Liability Act of 1863 and other Acts. Under these circumstances it would be quite impossible to apply the Common Law of England in force against inn-keepers in the Mofussil in India.

There is nothing to show that the Bombay decision was meant to, or has any application to the Mofussil of India. That case also was decided in 1866 before the Indian Contract Act was passed. It seems to us that the liabilities of a hotel-keeper to his guests are now regulated by the Indian Contract Act, and in the absence of any specific agreement in a given case, we think that the rules in Chapter IX of the Indian Contract Act would apply. The case of Rampal Singh v. Murray & Co. (3) would seem to confirm this view, although it is not fully applicable to the facts of this particular case.

It is remarkable that (so far as we know) there is no reported decision in any of the Indian Courts on the subject. Having come to the conclusion, when the appeal was first heard by us that while the decree of the Courts below could not be maintained on the ground taken by those Courts, we thought it necessary before deciding the case, to send down an issue as to whether the defendant had taken such care of the goods of the plaintiff as were required by section 151 of the Indian Contract Act. In other words, we thought the Indian Contract Act was applicable. The parties were allowed to give such further evidence on this issue as they desired, and the learned District Judge has found as a fact as follows:—The hotel building is divided into two main blocks, the public and dining rooms and some residential rooms are in one block, and other dwelling rooms are in a separate block at some distance from the main block. The detached block of dwelling rooms consists of a verandah, extending the whole length of the building, six sleeping rooms leading into two bath-rooms, each at the rear, and each bath-room has a door leading out to the back. It is found that at the back of this block there is an open unfenced Maidan so that any one who pleased could have access to the back of these quarters. It was also found that the bath-room connected with the sleeping room which the plaintiff occupied, was unsafe and could easily be entered from the back. It was admitted that the plaintiff had a servant with him and that on the evening of the 27th of September at about 8 o'clock when the plaintiff went to the main building to have his dinner, this servant was left in or about the room; that shortly afterwards the suit case was stolen from the room. It is found that the plaintiff's servant followed the thief unsuccessfully. It is also found that there had been two other thefts within the year in the hotel to the knowledge of the manager, and it is not denied by him as asserted by the plaintiff that his notice had been brought to the unsafe condition of the bath-room. On the evidence the Court has come to the conclusion that the defendant had not taken such care to ensure the safety of the property of the guests as a man of ordinary prudence would, under the circumstances, take of his own goods, and that there was negligence on his part. In other words, the finding is against the defendant Objection is taken to the finding mainly on the ground that as the plaintiff actually had a servant in his own employ and had left his servant in or near the room at about the time the theft took place, the defendant was absolved from liability, and that, at any rate, so far as this plaintiff was concerned, there was no obligation for the defendant to take special care to ensure the safety of his goods. We are not prepared to accept this argument. It was the duty of the defendant to keep his premises in such a condition of safety as would reasonably prevent theft. The finding here is that the whole of the back of the detached premises was unsafe; that the fact that it was unsafe had been brought to the notice of the defendant and that, therefore, he should not only have had the doors repaired but that he should have had a watchman at the back of these premises as the only means of ensuring safety, and prevent anybody entering the premises if he had a mind to do so. In our opinion, on this finding, which is one of fact, binding on us in second appeal, the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Khudayar v. Ahmad, 51 Ind. Cas. 298; 83 P. R 1919, referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 2nd August 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 26th May 1917.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

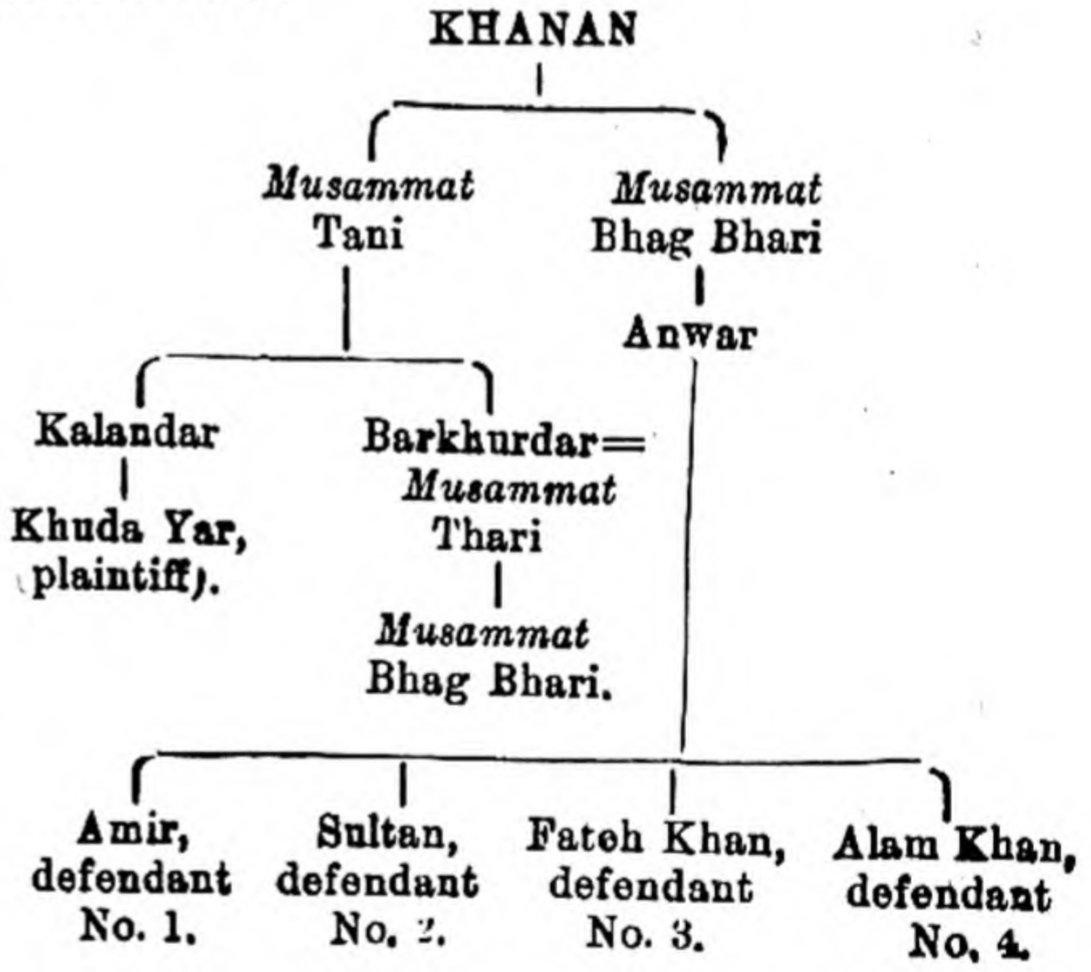
JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree exhibits the relationship between the parties to this case :



The property in dispute is that of Barkhurdar who was succeeded in the holding by his daughter, Musammat Bhag Bhari. On her marriage, about 1906, Barkhurdar's share in the joint estate was mutated in favour of the parties in equal shares. The present suit was brought by Khuda Yar for a declaration that he was the owner of a two-thirds share of the joint estate. The case propounded by him was that in accordance with custom, on the death of Khanan, who had families by two different wives, succession was made in accordance with the pagwand rule i.e., Kalandar, Barkhurdar and Anwar each succeeded to a one third share in the estate. His contention is that in such circumstances it is the custom for the two different families to be regarded as separate groups for the purpose of collateral succession and that on the death of Barkhurdar he should consequently have been recorded as owner of Barkhurdar's one-third share to the exclusion of the defendants. The Trial Court decreed for the plaintiff, holding that the riwaj-i-am of 1870, entirely supported the custom recited by the plaintiff and that in the subsequent riwaj-i-am of 1908 the Jats stated that no regard was paid among them to uterine descent but the compiling officer noted that this statement was not in accordance with facts, as several instances had been quoted in which full brothers had succeeded to the exclusion of half brothers. The learned District Judge on appeal by the defendants held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the custom alleged and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come up to this Court on second appeal and the question for decision appears to be as follows. In view of the fact that in 1870 the custom by which the whole blood excluded the half-blood was emphatically affirmed and that in 1908 the assertion that the custom had been reversed was found to be not in accordance with facts, have the defendants established that the old custom has become obsolete? The parties belong to village Shadia which is now a separate estate but was formerly at the time of the Settlement of 1878 a hamlet of the large village of Wan Bhachran. On behalf of the plaintiff two cases decided by the District Judge of Mianwali are cited. Those cases referred respectively to Bhatti Mians and Bhachar Jats of Wan Bhachran and in them the rule of uterine descent was followed. Khuda Yar v. Ahmad (1) is a case of Kaliar Jats of Mianwali Tahsil in which it was held that the half brothers, who were the defendants in the case had failed to establish a custom by which half brothers succeed with those of the full blood. Two other cases are cited in which the same rule of custom was followed by the Collector in 1909 but the parties to those cases appear to have been Pathans, and one other case, that of Said Khan, a Janjuha like the parties to this case, who excluded his half brothers. As against those, two Janjuha cases, that of Zaman and Muhammad Azam, are cited in favour of the custom set up by the defendants' and two other cases are referred to, but the facts of those cases and their dates are not satisfactorily proved, so that the only two clear cases in favour of the defendants' contention are those proved by the evidence of the Naib Sadr Kanungo.

Bearing in mind that no custom has the force of law unless it is ancient and certain and that the custom recited by the plaintiff was in full vogue in 1878 and has been observed since that date in several contested cases, we are unable to hold that the defendants have succeeded in establishing that the old custom is obsolete.

For the reasons set forth above we accept the appeal and decree for the plaintiff with costs throughout.

SHANTARAM BALKRISHNA v. WAMAN GOPAL.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, Actg. C. J.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are briefly these. A plot of ground, which is shown in the plan, was originally owned by one Balkrishna. He left four sons, Shantaram, Vasantrao, Janardan and Shivshankar, and at a partition which was effected among the four brothers in the year 1916, this plot was divided into four parts. The plot marked A in the plan fell to the share of Shantaram, the plot marked B was assigned to Vasantrao, the plot marked C was assigned to Janardan and the plot marked D was assigned to Shivshankar. There was a common passage left which is shown in the plan and which is marked E F H G. There is no special provision in the decree based upon the award relating to the partition, but it appears from the descriptions of the various plots given in the Schedules that the said land was reserved for the common passage. On September 9, 1916, Janardan conveyed his interest in the plot C to the present plaintiffs, and on September 28, 1916, Shivshankar conveyed his interest in the plot D to the 1st plaintiff on behalf of both the plaintiffs. On June 18, 1919, Vasantrao conveyed the plot B including his right, title and interest in the strip of land called the common passage to Bhagvandas Tapidas, the original defendant No. 2.

It appears that before the date of this last conveyance, the present plaintiffs, who had become owners of plots C and D, built in such a manner as to make some encroachments upon the common passage which are shown in the plan, and a suit was filed by Shantaram and Vasantrao for the removal of those encroachments. In that suit a decree was passed on August 6, 1918, against the present plaintiffs. A copy of that decree was annexed to the plaint but has not been formally put in as an exhibit. In the course of the argument the decree has been referred to, subject to the appellant putting in a certified copy of the decree as an exhibit. The result of this decree was that the plaintiffs were required to remove the encroachments which they had made on this common passage.

Then on August 22, 1919, the said Bhagvandas conveyed in favour of the plaintiffs his interest in the small strip of land forming part of the plot B in the south marked OPJL, and his right, title and interest in the portion of the common passage between the plots C and D and marked EFML. In virtue of these conveyances at the date of the present suit, which was filed in September 1919, the plaintiffs had become owners of the plots C and D, and it may be taken for the purpose of this appeal that they had become owners of three-fourths of the interest in that portion of the common passage which is marked EFML, and were interested along with the owners of plots A and B, as co-owners in the remaining portion of the land described as common passage, namely, LMHG. I may add that the common passage joins the main road at its northern end and is closed by a wall of the adjoining premises at its southern end. As a passage it ends at the line EF. The present suit was filed with a view to seek partition of the land which has been described as common passage, and the prayer was to secure the result that the partition should be so effected as to make the owners of plots C and D absolute owners of the portion of the passage EFML; to assign the absolute interest in the soil of that part of LMHG towards the line MH so far as the owner of the plot A was concerned, which would represent $\frac{1}{4}$th of the whole area of this passage, to the 1st defendant; and to allow to the owner of plot B the absolute interest in the soil of that portion of LMHG towards the line LG to the extent of $\frac{1}{4}$th interest in that part of the passage which is marked LMHG. The intermediate narrow strip which would be very small was to remain the absoulte property of the owners of the plots C and D with the right of passage in favour of the plaintiffs over the whole of the land marked LMHG subject to such compensation being paid to the owners of plots A and B as the Court might think proper. This would make the plaintiffs the absolute owners of the southern half of the passage, while the remaining half would remain exactly as it was at the date of the suit for the benefit of all the four owners.

During the course of the suit there were various amendments made from time to time which it is not necessary to detail for the purposes of this appeal. The objection taken by defendant No. 1 who is the owner of Plot A was that this was really an attempt to get rid of the clear effect of the decree against the plaintiffs for the removal of the encroachments and to secure a partition, which in effect would deprive the 1st defendant compulsorily of such right of ownership as he had in the whole of this common passage as a co owner. Defandant No. 2 Dwarkadas, who purchased the interest of the original defendant No. 2, Bhagvandas, in the plot B, as also defendant No. 3, the original owner of the plot D, resisted the plaintiffs' claim. I need not detail the various defences; but five issues were raised on the pleadings. The first issue is, whether the portion of the passage marked EFLM is of no use to the defendants as alleged in the plaint, and the other material issue which I need note is the third issue whether the plaintiff is entitled to partition as claimed. The learned Trial Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs, and made the following observations :—

"Having regard to all the considerations in the case and having seen the passage this afternoon I am fully convinced that the passage between LM and EF is absolutely useles to the proprietors of plots A and B, and this passage was kept open only for the purpose of giving access to the owners of plots C and D as they had no other access except through this passage. I think it is fit that this partition should be ordered and special directions should be given to the Commissioner."

The learned Judge gave directions as to partition practically as prayed for.

In the appeal the principal point argued is whether the partition of this narrow strip of land, which was reserved at the time of the partition in 1916 as common passage can be allowed. In the course of the argument a further point that arose in connection with this question was whether, as a matter of law, such a claim for partition of the common passage was maintainable in view of the rule of Hindu Law, by which the parties are governed, that common passages are indivisible.

I shall first deal with the question as to whether, in view of the special rule of Hindu Law, which undoubtedly is applicable to the parties to this suit, the claim for partition is maintainable. I am of opinion that it is not. The rule to which I refer is to be found in the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section iv, (Stokes' Hindu Law Books, pages 384, 387 and 389). That section relates to "Effects not liable to partition" and the relevant passages in that section are to be found in paragraphs 16 and 25 which are as follows :—

"16 Other things exempt from partition, have been enumerated by Manu; 'Clothes, vehicles, ornaments, prepared food, women, sacrifices and pious acts, as well as the common way, are declared not liable to distribution.'"

Then the commentator proceeds to deal with each of these items, and the opinion expressed by Vijnaneshwara as to 'common way' is to be found in paragraph 25 which is as follows :—

"The common way, or road of ingress and egress to and from the house, garden, or the like, is also indivisible."

The same rule is referred to by Nilkantha in the Vyavahara Mayukha The same verse from Manusmriti is quoted in Chapter IV, section vii, and the word 'prachara' which has been used for the expression "common way" is thus explained in the same section: "Prachara is way to the house, or the like, as also a pasture ground for cattle, etc." (See Mandlik's Hindu Law, pages 70 and 71.)

These passages make it quite clear that if this is to be treated as "common way, or road of ingress and egress", it is indivisible. I may add here that the word "prachara" which is used in the verse quoted from Manusmriti, and which has been rendered in these translations as "common way" is translated in the Sacred Books of the East Series, Volume XXV, as "pasture ground", and I have not overlooked the interpretation which has been put by some commentators upon the word "prachara" as indicating "pasture ground." In the foot-note on this verse (Manu IX, 219) in the said volume at page 379 it is also indicated that the word "prachara" is understood by some of the commentators on Manusmriti in the sense of "common way". But what is important is that this word has been interpreted in the Mitakshara in the sense of 'common way'; and that is how it is interpreted in the Vyavahara Mayukha. The author of the Vyavahara Mayukha gets over the apparent difficulty by accepting both the meanings of the word "prachara". There is no doubt, therefore, that on the authority of the Mitakshara and the Vyavahara Mayukha, by which we are bound, that the land which was reserved as common passage at the time of partition between the parties in 1916 is not divisible.

It is urged, however, that this rule ought not to be strictly applied, under the modern conditions obtaining in a large city like Bombay. The rule to my mind is so plain that I do not see how it could be said to make any difference whether it is to be applied to any land in the city of Bombay or outside. Further, it is urged that the 'common way' referred to in the texts would refer to the "common ways" existing prior to partition, but not to such "common passages" as are created for the first time and reserved by agreement between the parties at the time of the partition. I am unable to discover in this contention any real answer to the application of the plain and simple rule to the facts of this case. This point was not raised in the Trial Court, and as I have already stated, it was only referred to in the course of the argument before us. But the rule is clear, and I do not see how the plaintiffs can escape the application of that rule. This rule is referred to in Nathubhai Dhirajram v. Bai Hansgavri (1). No doubt there the facts were different and the rule was referred to under somewhat different circumstances. I refer to that judgment for the purpose of showing that the rule is not an obsolete rule of Hindu Law but a rule which is capable of application, and which ought to be applied, wherever it can properly apply.

In the present case it is clear to my mind that when in 1916 the brothers divided the property and kept this passage common, they really kept it as a common way for the use of all the four brothers; and the attempt which has been made in the course of the argument to show that the owners of the southern plots C and D have greater interest than the owners of plots A and B in the north does not appear to me to derive any support from the words used with reference to this passage in the decree relating to partition. The land which is shown in the plan as passage has been described throughout as "common passage" and the plaintiffs' claim for partition is based on the footing that all the owners of the four plots are co-owners of this land. It may be that the plaintiffs have some greater use of the passage in virtue of the position of the plots C and D than the owners of plots A and B. But I do not see how the accident of the southern end of the passage being closed by a wall could make any difference in law to the rights of the parties, nor can I see how in law they can be said to have any more interest in the passage than the owners of plots A and B. Really the land which is now sought to be partitioned is 'common way' and it ought not to be divided according to the rule of Hindu Law to which I have referred. That seems to afford a complete answer to the plaintiffs' claim.

But, apart from this rule of Hindu Law, the point has been raised on behalf of the appellant that such a partition which has practically the effect of depriving one co-owner of his interest in the property ought not to be allowed. On the other hand, on behalf of the plaintiffs reliance is placed upon the rule about which there can be no doubt that a co-owner of any land is entitled to seek partition of the land at his will. But in the present case it is not a simple partition by metes and bounds that the plaintiffs seek, but a partition on certain lines without which the partition would obviously be of no use to the plaintiffs. The strip of land which is marked as common passage varies in width from eight to ten feet throughout the whole length, and as a strip of land it is absolutely inconvenient to divide it by metes and bounds.

But the way in which the plaintiffs seek to get over the difficulty is by drawing a distinction between the right of passage as an easement and the right of ownership over the land as distinguished from the right of passage. The argument is somewhat ingenious and I shall not attempt to state it in detail. In the case of land which is owned by certain persons, it ought to be divided in the ordinary way if it is capable of division. If it is incapable of division it must be kept as the common property of the co-owners. It is not suggested that the alternative remedy of sale under certain circumstances as provided by the Partition Act is applicable to this case nor is it suggested that such a remedy is suited to the present case. The very nature of the prayer shows that the plaintiffs do not desire a simple partition, which obviously is not possible under the circumstances of the case, but a peculiar partition to serve their own interests without due regard to the interests of the co-owners. In view of the rule of Hindu Law upon which I base my decision, it is not necessary for me to arrive at any final conclusion on the general question whether, apart from that rule, such a partition as is claimed by the plaintiffs is permissible in law, and even if it be permissible in law, whether under the circumstances of the case it would be right to direct such a partition.

It is difficult to escape the inference that soon after the decree was passed for the removal of the encroachments, in 1918, against the plaintiffs, they filed this suit with a view to circumvent, if possible, that decree. If it be open to them in law to do so they are entitled to that remedy. But, in my opinion, it is not open to them to do so.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, discharge the decree of the Trial Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

CRUMP, J.—As I agree that the decree of the Trial Court cannot stand, I wish to indicate briefly my reasons for that conclusion. The parties to this case stand in the shoes of the four sons of Balkrishna who were parties to the original division of this property. That partition by virtue of the decree in Suit No. 337 of 1910 was a complete partition, and I cannot see any ground on which it can now be re-opened. It is not suggested that there was any bona fide error there, or that the partition was of a partial nature. The effect of the decree clearly was to decide that the property of which partition is now sought should be reserved as a common passage to the houses of the four parties. That being so, it would follow from the decree itself that that passage is not property such as can be the subject of a further partition. Therefore, even apart from the rule of Hindu Law, as to which it is unnecessary for me to add anything in view of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, it does appear to me that the suit is not maintainable, and that the jurisdiction which the Judge of the Trial Court has exercised is a jurisdiction which he did not possess. The ingenuity of Counsel has failed to discover any precedent for such a suit as this, the reason obviously being that it is probably the first suit of its nature. If I felt any doubt as to the correctness of our view of the law, that doubt would be removed by a consideration of the motive which has impelled the plaintiffs to file the present suit. They do not in reality desire partition of this common way. What they really desire to do is to get rid of the effect of the decree against them whereby they were ordered by this Court to remove a certain encroachment on that way. It is an ingenious course, but one which I do not think could possibly be permitted to succeed. The grounds on which the Trial Judge has proceeded are those of convenience rather than law. It may be true that the portion of the passage which has been assigned to the plaintiffs is of no value to the other parties, but then they are the best judges, and they cannot be compelled to surrender the rights which were awarded to them by the partition decree in the previous suit without their own consent. Therefore, it seems to me that the suit must of necessity fail, whether it be approached on the basis of the rule of Hindu Law or on the basis of any other system of law which could conceivably be applicable to the present case. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 9, 54, 118 —Transfer of property by husband to wife for life in lieu of future maintenance—Sale—Exchange—'Price' in s. 54, meaning of.

A transfer of land of the value of more than Rs 100 by a husband to his wife to be enjoyed by the latter during her lifetime in discharge of her claim to future maintenance can be made without writing. Such a transfer is neither a sale nor an exchange but is a transaction not expressly required to be in writing under section 9 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 689, col. 1; p. 690, col. 1.]

Narbadabai v. Mahadeo Narayan, 5 B. 99; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 68, disapproved.

Per Schwabe, C. J.—The word 'price' in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act means money, but not necessarily money handed over in current coin at the time but includes money which might be already due or might be payable in the future. [p. 689, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.—The word 'price' in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act connotes something different and something more limited than the familiar term 'valuable consideration.' It means money. [p. 690, col. 1.]

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 14th and 15th of April 1921 upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the 1st Respondent, and the 2nd Respondent not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having been posted to be spoken to on the 20th and 22nd of April 1921, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellant and of Mr. A. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the 1st Respondent and the case having stood over for consideration till the 27th of April 1921, the Court (Oldfield, J. and Ramesam, J.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The second defendant, here appellant, relies on a sale-deed of the suit land from 1st defendant. Plaintiff, the first wife of 1st defendant, has obtained a declaration that the sale to 2nd defendant is invalid, so far as it affects her right to enjoy the land during her life, on a finding by the lower Courts that she is doing so under an oral transfer of that right by 1st defendant with a condition against alienation by him during her enjoyment. The finding that this transfer was made is one of fact and we must accept it. The second appeal has been argued on the ground that under the Transfer of Property Act an oral transfer of this kind is ineffective. The decision of the lower Appellate Court has been supported on the grounds that, even if the oral transfer is ineffective, plaintiff has prescribed for a right to possession by her adverse holding for about seventeen years, and that 2nd defendant's sale having to his knowledge been intended to defeat plaintiff's maintenance right that right must under section 39 of the Transfer of Property Act be enforced against him by keeping her in possession.

Neither of the considerations relied on by plaintiff affords an immediate ground of decision. For the lower Appellate Court has found only that she had possession on the date of her plaint, not that she had had it for the previous period necessary for prescription; and a remand for proper consideration of the plea of prescription would be necessary. The argument from section 39 assumes that her right to maintenance can be identified with her right to the enjoyment of the suit land, whereas the validity of the transfer to her of that land in lieu of maintenance is the point in dispute.

MADAM PILLAI v. BADRAKALI AMMAL.

We have, therefore, to decide whether this oral transfer of land, admittedly of over Rs. 100 in value is valid. The question raised are of general importance and as we are referring the matter we attempt no further discussion or citation of authorities than is sufficient to indicate its difficulty. In argument before us neither party has contended that the transfer to plaintiff is a lease; and the suggestions that it is a gift or a family settlement or compromise can be dismissed shortly, the former because her abandonment of her right to claim maintenance is a consideration within the meaning of section 2 (d) of the Indian Contract Act, the latter because the arrangement is not put forward as an acknowledgment of existing rights or otherwise than as a creation of new ones. Second defendant argues that the transfer is a sale or exchange which under sections 54 and 118 of the Transfer of Property Act can be made only in writing, plaintiff, that it can be made without writing under section 9, because the case is not one in which a writing is expressly required.

One obstacle to the application of either section 54 or 118 is that in the present case the transfer is on the one side of the right to enjoy only for the transferee's life and this may be inconsistent with the references to transfer of ownership in the former and of ownership of a thing in the latter. For in the absence of definitions of "ownership" and of "a thing" it is a question whether the transfer of less than an absolute and permanent right is contemplated by either section. We have been shown no authority on this point or on the kindred objection to the application of section 118 to the consideration proceeding in the present case from the transferee, that the abandonment of a right to maintenance is not the ownership of a thing. For it can hardly be said that the abandonment of a right against a person is a transfer to him of that right; and, if it could be, a right to future maintenance is, it has been held, not a thing which can be the subject of transfer or assignment. [Narbadabai v. Mahadeo Narayan (1) and Palikandy Mammad v. Chingoran Keloth Valia Appa (2).] The difficulty in connection with section 54 is that a price or promise of a price is essential and that plaintiff's abandonment of her right to future maintenance, which has never been assessed or valued, is not a price or the promise of one because a price must according to authority [Queen Empress v. Appavu (3) and Volkart Brothers v. Vettivelu Nadan (4)] be money. We have been asked to disregard this with reference to the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyer, J., in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumaraswamy Padayachi (5) and his dictum that "If two persons mentally fix the values of the exchanged things in current coin and then exchange them as of equal value, ... they might be held to effect 'sales' and not to pay 'prices' (the word 'not' being apparently interpolated in the report) and not merely to effect an exchange." It is possible that this was not enunciated as a general principle, but only with reference to cases such as that before the learned Judge, in which the data for the mental process he assumed, in the shape of information as to completed transactions, were available. But the supposition of such a process can hardly be made in cases of the kind now in question, in which the calculation of the amount depends on an estimate of an unascertained periodical liability for an uncertain time, and we have to assume not only a mental fixing of the total due by each party, but some sort of sympathetic agreement between them on the same figure, in the absence of which there could be no contract.

In these circumstances we refer for the opinion of a Full Bench the question whether a transfer of land of the value of more than Rs. 100 by a husband to his wife to be enjoyed by the latter during her lifetime in discharge of her claim to future maintenance can be made without writing.

This second appeal came on for hearing before a Full Bench.

The transaction in question is invalid for want of a writing to evidence it.

It must be treated as a gift as there was no valid consideration for the transfer. An agreement to provide for the future maintenance of one's wife is an illegal bargain. If it is viewed as a settlement even then it should be in writing.

Messrs. A Swaminatha Aiyar, for Respondent No. 1.—The transaction falls under section 9 of the Transfer of Property Act in the category of cases in which no writing is expressly required by law. It is not a sale as there was no 'price', that is, money paid or promised. It is not a gift. There is nothing illegal in husband and wife agreeing as to the wife's future maintenance. It is not an exchange as neither party transfers the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another.

SCHWABE, C. J.—The question referred to us in this case is "whether a transfer of land of the value of more than Rs. 100-0 0 by husband to his wife to be enjoyed by the latter during her lifetime in discharge of her claim to future maintenance can be made without writing."

It was argued first that such an agreement was a gift, because it was said that such a bargain was illegal and, therefore, without consideration: but it had to be admitted that, if the bargain was to receive the land in discharge of the claim to future maintenance, there was nothing illegal at all; and it is not necessary to say anything further on the subject of gift. By the Transfer of Property Act, section 9 "A transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law" and, therefore, one has to look at the rest of the Act to see whether writing has been expressly required by law for such a transaction as this. Apart from the question of gift, the only sections, which it is claimed, could apply are sections 54 and 118. Section 54 relates to sales, a sale being defined "as a transfer of ownership in exchange for price paid or promised". In this case one has to consider whether there was a price paid or promised by the transferee. Now, "price" has a well defined meaning. It means money, but not necessarily money handed over in current coin at the time but includes money which might be already due, or might be payable in the future. I think the law is well expressed in the commentaries on the Transfer of Property Act by Shephard and Brown, page 175. "'Price' includes money only, for, if the thing given and exchanged for land consists of goods and not money, there is no sale but an exchange. A transfer not made in exchange for a money consideration, e. g., a transfer made in pursuance of a compromise of a family dispute, would not be a sale, and might be altogether outside the provisions of the Act." There being, in my view, no price paid or promised in this case, the transaction was not a sale. We were referred on this point to a decision in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumaraswamy Padayachi (5) and to certain observations of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., therein in which apparently he would extend "price" so as to cover all cases where articles are exchanged, one against the other, provided that the parties went through the mental process of fixing in their own minds the value of the articles to be exchanged. I must say that I think that that was going beyond anything that one can find in the Act. It seems to me that those observations were quite unnecessary for the decision which was arrived at in that case, and I confess that I cannot agree that the mental process gone through of valuing in one's mind the different articles to be exchanged can possibly turn an exchange transaction into a sale.

The remaining section is section 118 which deals with 'exchanges'. By that section "exchange" is defined as follows: "where two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, neither thing or both things being money only, the transaction is called an exchange." In this transaction the husband transfers the land or the right to use the land during the lifetime of the wife and the wife gives up her right to future maintenance. It seems to me that there are two reasons why this transaction cannot be an exchange within that definition. First of all, the husband does not transfer the ownership of the land, and, secondly, the wife does not transfer the ownership of anything. She does not purport to transfer anything to her husband, nor had she anything, within the meaning of that section, which she could transfer.

On these grounds the answer to the question referred to us is in the affirmative.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—I agree. When we are construing a word like "price," we are dealing with a word which is by its inherent nature a likely subject of controversy, and I turned out of curiosity to the Oxford English Dictionary and found the quotation from Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations—1776: "The real price of everything, what every thing really costs to the man who wants to acquire it, is the toil and trouble of acquiring it. Labour was the first price, the original purchase money that was paid for all things." But it seems to me that the answer is to be found in what I said during the course of the argument, that a trained English lawyer would never use the word "price," unless it be to connote something other than the perfectly familiar phrase "valuable consideration," which would naturally occur to his mind; and it seems to me that the whole of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer's ingenious argument comes to this that we are to construe price as meaning the familiar term "valuable consideration." I think that the word "price" was put into the section to connote something different and something more limited, that is, money.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—I agree with my Lord and would only add that even if the transaction is treated as a settlement of family disputes, there is nothing in Hindu Law requiring it to be in writing. Partition can under Hindu Law be made without any document and a settlement cannot be in a worse position.

It is argued that the transaction must be viewed as a gift of immoveable property, as under Hindu Law an agreement by a husband to provide for the future maintenance of his wife is invalid, and there being no legal and valid consideration for the transfer, it is in effect a gift. I see nothing illegal in Hindu Law for a husband to make provision for the future maintenance of his wife. It is very often a very proper thing to do. Even assuming that the agreement to provide for future maintenance is invalid under Hindu Law the transaction will not amount to a gift. It will be invalid not for want of writing and registration but because it is incompetent for the parties to enter into the transaction because of the personal law by which they are governed.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. Leach, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree of this Court confirming the decree of the Court of first instance

The facts involved are as follows:—

Two persons, Maung Thwe and Tun Pe, each claimed to be the sole adopted son of a Burmese couple who died leaving a fairly large estate. Cross-applications for Letters of Administration were filed and Letters were granted to Tun Pe. Thereupon, Maung Thwe brought a suit to have it declared that he was the sole adopted son and for possession of the estate. The first Court held that he was the sole adopted son. On appeal to this Court it was held that Tun Pe was the sole adopted son. An appeal was filed to His Majesty in Council when their Lordships held that both were adopted sons. In the meantime, subsequent to the decree of this Court declaring him to be the sole adopted son, and after notice had been served of the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, Tun Pe alienated the land in suit to Ma Shwe Pon for Rs. 6,000 by a registered deed. Subsequently, Ma Shwe Pon mortgaged this land to A. L. A. R. Chetty. The present suit was brought by the Chetty to enforce his mortgage. The amount he claimed was under Rs. 10,000, as was also the amount decreed in his favour. Maung Thwe was made a party and contested the mortgage on the ground that the original sale by Tun Pe to Ma Shwe Pon was void and of no effect, as he was merely a co heir and had no separate rights in this property that he could convey away. He pleaded that the principle of lis pendens applied to the alienation and that Ma Shwe Pon acquired no rights in the land which she could mortgage to the Chetty.

On appeal this Court at first accepted these arguments and set aside the decree of the Court below. An application for review was, however, admitted on the ground that the effect on the claim of the fact that Tun Pe was the administrator of the estate and must be deemed to have acted as such had not been considered, and the final decision was that the sale was good and that the doctrine of lis pendens would not apply in the circumstances of the case and this Court accordingly confirmed the decree of the Court below. From this decision Maung Thwe desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

He claims, in the first instance, that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance and in dispute on appeal to His Majesty is over Rs 10,000. It may be admitted that the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is over Rs. 10,000 if the interest accrued due up to the date of the decree of this Court be taken into consideration. But it is argued by the respondent that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is not Rs. 10,000.

As to this we have to consider the value at the time of the institution of the suit. The sale by Tun Pe to Ma Shwe Pon was for Rs. 6,000. When the property was brought to sale in execution of the Chetty's mortgage-decree we are told it realized less than Rs. 10,000, and we can find no proof on the record to show that the land was worth Rs. 10,000, or upwards at the time of the institution of the suit.

The amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit to the Chetty was clearly the amount he claimed, together with, at most, interest that had accrued due up to the date of the decree.

In Koti Chand v. Ginga Prasad Singh (1), their Lordships held that the amount of the subject-matter of a suit in the Court of first instance for the purpose of an appeal to His Majesty in Council is the amount for which a decree is recovered, including interest up to the date of the decree, and in the case of DeSilva v. DeSilva (2) Jenkins, C. J., held that for the purpose of considering whether the conditions as to value are satisfied "the decree is to be looked at as it affects the interest of the party who is prejudiced by it, and who seeks to relieve himself from it by appeal."

So far as Maung Thwe is concerned, the effect on his interest of the adverse decree is that he is deprived of this parcel of land and that, as we have said, has not been shown to amount to Rs. 10,000. We must, therefore, hold that the conditions laid down in the first paragraph of section 110 are not satisfied.

It is next urged that, even if that be so, petitioner is entitled to come under the second paragraph of section 110. It is urged that the decree involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value.

(1) 24 A. 174; 6 C. W. N. 363; 29 I. A. 40, 4 Bom. L. R. 156, 8 Sar. P. C. J. 247 (P. C.).

MAUNG THWE v. A. L. A. R. CHETTY FIRM.

In the first place, it is claimed that this provision is to be read alone and not subject in any way to the requirements of the first paragraph of the section. We are quite unable to accept this view. It is based apparently on the spacing and quasi separation into a separate paragraph. We do not consider that it was intended to make it a separate provision. What the section requires is that the subject matter in the Court of first instance must be Rs. 10,000, or upwards, and in addition that the amount or value of the subject-matter on appeal must be the same, or the decree must involve, directly, or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value. This latter provision is to be read as an alternative to the 2nd restriction in the earlier part of the section. To read it otherwise would render the provision as to the value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance a dead letter. It is not open to us so to interpret the section. We are bound so to interpret it that effect may be given to all its provisions if we can reasonably do so.

There is authority for this view in the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Pellammal (3). Speaking of this argument Wallis, C. J., said: "If this contention be accepted, a certificate must be granted in any case in which the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is not less than Rs. 10,000, whether or not the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance fell below Rs. 10,000, and this provision becomes wholly nugatory."

Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar said "..... it is impossible to construe the second clause of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to render the first [perfectly useless.....In my judgment, the first clause applies to cases where the decree awards a particular sum, or property of a particular value or refuses that relief (i. e.,) to cases where the subject-matter in dispute is of a particular value .....If the operation of the decision is confined only to the particular object-matter, clause (2) does not apply, and unless the case satisfies the conditions in clause (1) there is no right of appeal. If the decision beyond awarding relief in respect of the particular object-matter of the suit affects rights in other properties, clause (2) would apply: also if the matter in dispute is one which is incapable of valuation as in the case of easements, clause (2) may apply."

It is argued that the decision in respect of this particular alienation by Tun Pe will decide other alienations made by him, one of which is pending in appeal before this Court. It is a case in which a mortgage was made by Tun Pe of another portion of the estate. The decision of this case cannot be said to decide some other case relating to another portion of the estate The parties will be different and this will in no way be binding on them. Moreover, the decision will be on a point of law and the correct decision on a point of law cannot be said to decide questions relating to other portions of the estate. Even if the decision on the point of law in this case holds good in some subsequent case, it will mean nothing more than that the right law has been applied, but, however this may be, as the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is not Rs. 10,000 this provision cannot be brought into play.

Lastly, it is urged that the case should be certified to be otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. Where a case is otherwise unappealable, their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down in Moti Chand's case (1) that leave should not be granted unless there is some substantial question of law of general interest involved.

We are unable to hold that there is any such substantial question involved in the present case.

The powers of co-heirs in respect of alienation of joint and undivided property are well-settled. The decision as to the doctrine of lis pendens cannot be described as of general interest and there is no substantial question of law to justify the grant of a certificate.

Had the case been one satisfying the restrictions as to value, as our decree confirmed that of the Court of first instance it would have been necessary to hold that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. It may be that for purposes of that provision the questions arising in this case might have been held to justify the grant of a certificate; but for the grant of a special certificate, the questions involved must be not merely substantial but must be of great public or private importance and we are unable to hold that they are such in the present case.

For these reasons the application for leave to appeal must stand dismissed with costs. Advocate's fees five gold mohurs.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Suit No. 59 of 1912 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge brought by one Rahimkhan against Hedayat Khan and Mahebub Khan for dissolution of partnership, the property in suit which belonged to Hedayat Khan and Mahebub Khan and had vested in the Receiver was sold by the latter on the 29th January 1916 to one Kunjilal. Kunjilal afterwards sold the property to the plaintiffs.

The defendants got the same property attached and sold in execution of a money decree against Hedayat Khan and Mahebub Khan in Small Cause Court Suit No. 1340 of 1911 and purchased it themselves. The sale was confirmed on the 17th August 1918. The plaintiffs sue for possession on the ground that the sale to the defendants is not binding on them. The claim is made under the following circumstances. In Suit No. 1340 of 1911 the property was first sold in execution in the Court of the Munsif in April 1912. Before the sale was confirmed an injunction was issued to the Munsif on the 24th June 1912 by the Subordinate Judge trying Suit No. 59 of 1912 to stay the execution proceedings. The proceedings were thereupon dismissed by the Munsif on the 28th June 1912. In February 1914 the defendants again obtained an order for sale of the property from the Munsif's Court. The property was again sold on the 5th January 1918 and purchased by the defendants. A second injunction to stay proceedings was issued by the Subordinate Judge to the Munsif who stayed the proceedings until further orders from the Subordinate Judge; vide order dated the 12th February 1918 in order-sheet (Exhibit D. 4). On the 17th August 1918 the Munsif confirmed the sale.

The grounds on which he did so appear in his order (Exhibit P-10), which is as follows:—

"Decree-holder by Mr. P. C. Bose, judgment-debtor by Mr. Banerji. Decree-holder applied for confirmation of sale held on 5th January 1918. After the sale an injunction was brought from the Court of Sub-Judge to stay further proceedings and the proceedings were then stayed. The case in connection with which the injunction was issued has been decided. But no order for cancellation of the injunction is received. Applicant's Pleader contends that as the suit is decided and no order is passed in reference to the injunction the injunction must be taken as having lost its force as the Court of the Sub Judge has no longer jurisdiction in the matter. I agree with this contention. I now confirm the sale as prayed for. Sale confirmed. Case struck off as partly satisfied. Costs on judgment-debtors."

On the 8th October 1918 the plaintiff applied for review of the above order (Exhibit P-6). The application was rejected by the Munsif on the 24th January 1919 (Exhibit P-3). The Munsif held that the objection was too late and that the matter was one which required a regular suit for its decision. The present suit was then filed on the 13th August 1919.

The Trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the sale to the defendants was bad on the ground of lis pendens. The defendants' plea that the suit was barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code, was decided against them. The defendants appealed to the lower Appellate Court and confined themselves to the plea of bar under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is barred under that section and has dismissed it. In this Court it is first contended that the question whether a suit or an application for execution lies is res judicata by reason of the Munsif's order (Exhibit P-3). This contention cannot prevail. The defendants were not parties to or heard in the proceedings in which the order was passed. Again, the Munsif was not called upon in the proceeding before him to decide whether a suit or an application for execution lay. If the Civil Court had not the power to try a suit in the matter, the Munsif's opinion could not confer it.

It is next argued that section 47 has no application as the matter does not relate to execution, satisfaction or discharge of a decree, and the plaintiffs are not the representatives of the judgment-debtor. This point has been fully discussed by the lower Appellate Court in paragraphs 4 and 5 of its judgment and I agree with its conclusions. It is said that in Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (1) the point was whether an appeal lay or not. This is true, but this point depended on the question whether an auction-purchaser was the representative of the judgment-debtor or not, and the latter was the point really to be decided. That the matter is one in execution proceedings can scarcely be disputed. The Executing Court sold property which the plaintiffs contend had ceased to be the judgment-debtor's. They desired the sale to be cancelled and not confirmed. An application for this purpose had to be made to the Executing Court as in fact it was made. I agree with the lower Appellate Court that section 47 applied to the case, the plaintiffs being the representatives of the judgment debtor and the matter being one relating to execution of the Small Cause Court decree and arising between the defendants who were the decree holders in that suit and the plaintiffs who were the representatives of the judgment-debtors.

It is lastly contended that under clause (2) of section 47 the suit should have been treated as an application in execution and dealt with as such. Under section 38, Civil Procedure Code, a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. The Trial Court not being the Court to which the decree was sent by the Small Cause Court for execution, this section prevents it from proceeding with the suit as a matter in execution and executing the decree.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The lower Appellate Court has ordered costs in the lower Courts to be borne as incurred and in the particular circumstances of this case I am not inclined to interfere with the exercise of its discretion. The cross-objection is, therefore, dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

ARUNACHALAM CHETTY v. PO. KO. YAN.

Railway Receipts are "Mercantile Documents of Title to Goods" within the meaning of section 178 of the Contract Act, but they are not by law negotiable; in order to give them the attribute of negotiability, it must be established by the custom of merchants that they are treated as negotiable in the particular trade and at the particular place where the claim to negotiability is advanced. From the mere fact that they have acquired the attribute of negotiability in one City in a particular trade, it does not follow that they are invested with that attribute in another City in an altogether different trade. [p. 697, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 137 of the Transfer of Property Act merely deals with the manner in which the documents to which it relates can be transferred, but it does not affect the result of the transfer when made. In order that such a transfer should, in the case of Railway Receipts, have the effect of transferring the ownership of the goods, it must be established that they are negotiable. They are not negotiable by law, nor are they rendered negotiable by section 137 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 698, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Maung Kin, on the Original Side.

Mr. N. M Oowasjee, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Young and Leach, for Respondents Nos. 3 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are practically undisputed. The 2nd defendant, Kyaung Taik, had received from time to time large sums of money from the 3rd defendants, the London-Rangoon Trading Company, Limited, for the purpose of buying paddy for them. He was still owing them over Rs. 13,000 which he had to make good by the supply of paddy. They agreed to take paddy from him at the rate of Rs. 160 per 100 baskets. He went to Mandalay and there made arrangements with the 1st defendant, Po Yan, telling him that if he would buy paddy for him he would sell it to the London-Rangoon Trading Company, Limited, who were paying Rs. 160. Po Yan had no capital and he arranged with the plaintiffs, the Chetty firm, that they should finance his purchases, assigning to them the Railway Receipts for all paddy dispatched, as collateral security for hundis that were to be executed.

It is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs were fully aware of the arrangements come to. Po Yan bought paddy and consigned it to the London-Rangoon Trading Company, Limited, to be delivered at their Patheinnyun Mill siding. For each dispatch a hundi was drawn by Po Yan on Kyaung Taik and the hundi was sent by the plaintiffs to their Rangoon branch for acceptance and collection, together with the Railway Receipt relating to that consignment assigned by Po Yan, the consignor, to them. When each consignment was loaded in trucks and the Railway Receipt issued, Po Yan, taking with him his vendors or their brokers, went to the Chetty who advanced the price and then took the hundis and the Railway Receipts. The paddy was carried by the Railway Company, the 4th defendants, and delivered at the 3rd defendants' mill siding where it was immediately unloaded by Kyaung Taik's men. After the paddy had been inspected and passed, it was taken over by the 3rd defendants. Delivery was given by the Railway Company without production of the Railway Receipt. This was in accordance with the standing arrangement between the Railway Company and the 3rd defendants, the Railway Receipts being collected weekly and submitted together with the freight due.

It is not denied that the plaintiff Chetty gave no notice either to the 3rd defendants or to the Railway Company that the Railway Receipts had been assigned to him for value specifically applied to the purchase of the paddy. All the paddy was delivered between the 20th and 23rd of November 1918.

The plaintiff Chetty on learning that his Rangoon branch could not find Kyaung Taik, came down to Rangoon on the 25th, that is, after delivery had been given and taken, Kyaung Taik then accepted the hundis but he did not meet them. Subsequently, as he could not obtain payment from either Po Yan or Kyaung Taik, the Chetty brought the present suit in which he claims a decree against the 1st and 2nd defendants for the amount due to him on the hundis: he asks for a declaration that he had a valid charge and lien for the amount so found due on the paddy covered by the Railway Receipts, and further for a decree that the 4th defendants, or in the alternative the 3rd defendants, should hand over the paddy to him or pay its value to the extent of the amount found due from the 1st and 2nd defendants.

The 1st defendant confessed judgment. The 2nd defendant did not defend the suit though he appeared as a witness for the 3rd defendants. The 3rd defendant Company pleaded that they had a contract with the 2nd defendant to supply them 12,000 baskets of paddy at Rs. 160 per 100 baskets, and as the 2nd defendant owed them Rs. 13,500, it was agreed that the price of paddy delivered under this contract should be set off against the previous amount due. They admit receipt of the paddy; they allege that they paid for it by writing off Rs. 5,600 against the previous debt and paying Rs. 774 1-0 in cash; they allege they received the paddy from the 2nd defendant and that they had no knowledge that the paddy belonged to any other person, or that any third party had any interest whatever in the paddy or its value; they urge that it was the bounden duty of the plaintiff to have informed them immediately and plaintiffs' failure to do so absolves them from all liability.

The Railway Company deny that the plaintiff has any lien on the paddy; that they gave delivery in ignorance of the alleged claim and deny that plaintiff was entitled to any relief against them.

There can be no doubt, on the evidence in this case and on the documents that were executed, that Po Yan purchased the paddy for and on behalf of the 2nd defendant. He bought it under an arrangement by which it was agreed that the paddy should be consigned to the 3rd defendants at their mill siding. He purchased it with the knowledge and on the understanding that it should eventually be sold to the 3rd defendants. The plaintiff was also fully aware of these facts. He knew exactly when the paddy was dispatched, and he knew, or must be presumed to have known, that the paddy would not be kept lying about in waggons but that it would be unloaded without delay.

So far as the Railway Company was concerned, he knew that if they delivered the paddy to the consignee they would be merely carrying out completely the contract that they had entered into with the consignor.

The plaintiff must, therefore, have been aware that the 3rd defendants would take delivery of the paddy in due course without delay, that the paddy was consigned to them and that they would have no reason to suppose that there were any other claims against this paddy if he did not give them notice of the assignment of the Railway Receipts to him. Knowing all this he appears to have taken the most leisurely action and made no attempt to give any such notice to either the Railway Company or the 3rd defendants. Under ordinary circumstances, therefore, he could have no claim as against either the 3rd or the 4th defendants unless the Railway Receipts were documents that were negotiable and transfer property in the goods by assignment merely. It is on this point that the appellant mainly bases his appeal.

The argument is that Railway Receipts are documents of title to goods within the meaning of section 178 of the Indian Contract Act and that, therefore, a valid pledge of such documents might be made. Leaving aside the question whether the pawnee, in this instance, can be said to have acted with ordinary care in a manner that a careful man of business would act, the argument is based on the provisions of sections 4 and 137 of the Transfer of Property Act, but for the provisions of section 137 such a document would have required to be transferred by an assignment in writing, coupled with notice to the holder of goods.

Section 137 lays down that in respect of certain specific documents or instruments which are for the time being by law or custom negotiable, and also in respect to any mercantile document of title to goods, those provisions should not apply.

To the section is appended an explanation which is a definition of the expression "Mercantile Document of Title to Goods." It lays down that this expression includes, amongst other things, Railway Receipts and any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented. The section does not purport to go beyond providing that documents that fall within the scope of its terms shall not be subject to the special requirements of Chapter 8 as regards transfers of actionable claims.

Now, it may be admitted that Railway Receipts are "Mercantile Documents of Title to Goods," but they are documents which are not by law negotiable, and in order that they should be given the attribute of negotiability, it must be established that by custom they are treated as negotiable in the particular trade and at the particular place where the claim to negotiability is advanced.

In paragraph 967 of Halsbury's "Laws of England," Volume II, page 565, it is said: "There remain, however, always the same prime requirements with which an instrument must comply before it can be accorded negotiability. One of these requirements is the form of the instrument itself, the other the custom of trade in regard to it....."

Great reliance was placed on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ramdas Vithaldas Durbar v. Amerchand & Co. (1). That was a case dealing with Railway Receipts as used in connection with the cotton trade in Bombay. The case dealt with the right of stoppage in transitu. The High Court of Bombay in dealing with section 137 of the Transfer of Property Act had called attention to the significance of the division into two classes of Mercantile Documents of Title mentioned in section 137; Bills of Lading stand apart in that "the purchaser who takes the Bill of Lading has done all that is possible in order to take possession of the goods, as there is a physical obstacle to his seeking out the master of the ship in requiring him to attorn to his rights," and the learned author from whom the quotation is made goes on to say: "but when the goods are on land, there is no reason why the person who received a delivery order or dock warrant should not at once lodge it with the bailee, and so take actual or constructive possession of the goods. There is, therefore, a very sufficient reason why the custom of merchants should make the transfer of the Bill of Lading equivalent to an actual delivery of possession, and yet not give such an effect to the transfer of documents of title to goods on shore."

They held that the enactment of section 137 put an end to the question, but on the case coming up on appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council, they held that on the evidence that had been given in that case, the custom of merchants in the cotton trade at Bombay in respect of Railway Receipts had been established and that that custom accorded negotiability to these documents, and their Lordships go on to say: "It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether, apart from evidence as to the ordinary course of business, the effect of sections 4 and 137 of the Transfer of Property Act No 2 of 1900 would be conclusive on the point. It is clear that, even without the assistance of these sections, the receipts in question are 'documents showing title to goods' within sections 102 and 108 and 'documents of title to goods' within section 178 of the Indian Contract Act"

To my mind it is clear that their Lordships of the Privy Council did not regard the matter as so certain and clear as the Appellate Court in that case had considered; or, otherwise, they would have decided the case on that ground also. It is not necessary to go so far as to say that their judgment indicates grave doubt as to the result of section 137, but the authority does not help us to a decision in this case, for in the case before us no evidence has been led to show that by the ordinary course of business these documents have acquired the attribute of negotiability in Rangoon. They have in Bombay in the cotton trade, but it does not follow from that that they have in Rangoon in the paddy trade.

There are remarks, however, in their Lordships' judgment which are of great assistance. They say: "In the first place it is to be observed that 'title' in both expressions, (Instrument of title, Document of title) can relate only to the right to receive delivery of the goods to which the instrument or document relates. It can have nothing to do with ownership. A Bill of Lading may in this sense be an instrument or document conferring title, but, if so, the same is true of all the other documents contained in the genus 'document of title.' The fact that a document confers title in this sense cannot, therefore, be used as the distinguishing mark of a particular species of the genus. The truth is that the only point in which a Bill of Lading differs from other 'documents of title' is that its assignment, whether upon a re-sale or by way of pledge, operates as a constructive delivery of the goods to which it refers. The appellant's Counsel was unable to mention, and their Lordships are not aware of any other document with this peculiarity....."

A Bill of Lading transferred by endorsement and delivery transfers ownership of the goods; no other documents, though they may be "documents of title" to goods, can transfer by mere assignment and delivery, the ownership of the goods though they may transfer the right to receive the goods.

In my view, therefore, section 137 merely deals with the manner in which the documents to which it relates can be transferred, but it does not affect the result of the transfer when made. In order that such a transfer should have, in the case of Railway Receipts, the effect of transferring the ownership of the goods, it must be established that they are negotiable. They are not negotiable by law; they are not rendered negotiable by section 137 of the Transfer of Property Act, and there has been no attempt to prove in this case that they are negotiable by the custom of merchants in Rangoon.

There is, I think, authority for this view in the case of Natchappa Chetty v. Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. Ltd. (2). Their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a very similar claim to the present one. That was based on a Mate's Receipt, which is practically the equivalent, in the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's business, of the Railway Receipt in the Railway Company's business. Their Lordships said after quoting section 137: "Their Lordships are of opinion that this document was not a negotiable document in the sense of this section of the Statute. It was not a document of title. There was no authority by law to give to an assignee by transfer of that document any right as against the shipowner except upon the usual form of an assignment as between the shipper and his assignee. That usual form must be accompanied by notice to the shipowner which charges him with the fact of the assignment, and makes him responsible to the assignee instead of the original shipper. There is great difficulty in cases of this kind, in avoiding being misled by terminology. Each of the categories attempted has failed. The document is not a Bill of Lading, not a Mate's Receipt, and not a statutory negotiable instrument. The simple fact remains that this is a document which charges the respondents with receipt of certain goods from Chowdhry, under a bargain to convey them by ship to Rangoon for a stipulated freight and on certain conditions, and the duty arising from it was to deliver the goods to Chowdhry or to his nominee at Rangoon. In complete compliance with that duty the goods so placed in the possession of the shipowner for carriage were duly delivered.

"In these circumstances their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the judgment reached in the Court appealed from is correct. It is a simple ordinary receipt for goods. Why should these goods not be delivered to the person who is said to have handed them to the shipowner? Assuming the 'Mate's receipt,' as it is called, to have been lost, was the owner of the goods, who then handed them to the shipowner, not to be entitled because the receipt had disappeared, to possession of his own goods from the carrier whose freight he was willing to pay?

"Their Lordships are of opinion that that simple statement of the point shows that there is no legal foundation for the position that this was a document of title, and that the goods passed upon the transfer of it."

Their Lordships then dealt with the result of the clauses in the conditions which are very similar to the clauses in the Railway Receipts.

As regards the necessity for the production of the Mate's receipt before delivery, can be given; "In the opinion of their Lordships the sentences now quoted from the circular of the respondent Company merely set forth a mode in which in conducting their own business, the respondent Company would protect themselves in the course of their trade. But they cannot be founded upon by other parties as forming any part of any obligation to them restrictive of their freedom or methods of action in conducting their own affairs. As against customers they afford protection to the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, and they give an intimation or warning that they shall not part with the goods unless Mate's Receipts are given up, or otherwise unless a guarantee be obtained. But this protection of themselves they could freely give up if satisfied of the identity and solvency of the owner or nominee of the owner who demanded the goods at the port of delivery. And it is wholly jus tertii for any person in the position of the appellants (who are money-lenders who had made certain trading advances to Chowdhry and make claims against him for the paddy) to plead that that clause of the shipowners' circular constitutes an obligation upon which they as outside parties are entitled to found."

Lastly, dealing with the case founded upon tort in respect of giving delivery without the production of the Mate's Receipt, their Lordships say: "It is difficult to figure it; but the thing upon which tort was founded was some failure of duty. The failure of duty apparently was this: that the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company had suspicions raised in their minds or might have had suspicions raised in their minds, as to the expediency of parting with these goods unless on production of the Mate's Receipt to Chowdhry, who himself handed them over to them, because some financiers like the appellants might have claims upon them....." They discard the argument.

It, therefore, seems to me that there is ample authority to support the opinion that I have expressed above, namely that these Railway Receipts, while they are "documents of the title" to goods within the meaning of section 178, are not also of necessity documents which ipso facto transfer the ownership of the goods; to do that they must be negotiable; they have not the attributes of negotiability in form and there is no proof that they have become negotiable by the custom of merchants.

As regards the Railway Company the appeal must fail, for the Railway Company entered into a contract and they have performed that contract in its entirety. The terms of their Railway Receipts do not impose on them any duty not to give delivery unless and until the Railway Receipt is produced. They have reserved to themselves in express terms the right to give delivery without the production of the Railway Receipt and they exercised that right in the present case, and it must have been known to any one who gave the matter a moment's thought not only that they would, but that they were bound to, exercise that right.

The Railway Company had the arrangement with the 3rd defendants that is mentioned earlier in this judgment, and if they were to insist on the production of Railway Receipts in every instance, the whole of the paddy trade of this Province would be dislocated. The shortage of waggons would be heavily accentuated, and there is every reason, therefore, why they should avail themselves of the right to dispense with the production of Railway Receipts, which they have reserved.

As regards the 3rd defendants, the appeal also fails. They had agreed to accept from the 2nd defendant paddy at a certain rate; paddy arrives at their mill siding consigned to them; it is taken delivery of by the 2nd defendant's servants and unloaded; they examine the paddy and accept it and pay for it; they had had no notice from anyone of any dealing with the Railway Receipts; they had no privity of contract with Po Yan; he was not their seller and no assignment by him could bind them, and certainly not without notice.

The sole ground, therefore, on which the appellant's claim could succeed as against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 would be that the Railway Receipts were documents of such a character that property in the goods had passed to the plaintiff by the assignment of the Railway Receipts. They are not negotiable instruments; they are not instruments which by transfer pass the ownership of the goods.

On every ground, therefore, in my opinion, the appeal fails as regards the 3rd and 4th defendants, and as regards the 3rd and 4th defendants it must be dismissed. We, therefore, confirm the decree of the Court below with costs throughout.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 cls. (iv) (c) and (v) —Alienation by widow—Gift—Reversioner's suit for possession after widow's death—Declaratory decree—Consequential relief—Unnecessary prayer for relief—Duty of Court—Interpretation of Statutes—Fiscal Act—Relief asked for necessary or unnecessary—Court-fee.

Per Special Bench, (Coutts, J. dissenting) :—Where a plaintiff claims relief, to which he is not entitled until some decree or alienation of property which stands in his way has been avoided, or until his legal character or title, which has been called in question, has been declared by a decree of the Court, his suit is one for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and comes under clause (iv) c) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, even though the declaration, which it is necessary for him to obtain before the further relief can be granted, has not been in terms asked for in the plaint. But where such a declaration is not necessary to enable the plaintiff to obtain possession of property or other relief for which the suit is really brought, the suit does not fall under clause (iv) (c) merely because a declaratory decree is sought. The prayer for such a decree should be treated by the Court as a mere surplusage. [p. 701, col. 2.]

In a suit by a reversioner on the death of a widow to recover possession of immoveable property of her husband from her donee, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to seek a declaration that the gift is not binding on him. And even if such an unnecessary declaration is asked for the suit comes under clause (v) and not under clause (iv) (c), section 7, Court Fees Act. [p. 702, col. 2; p. 703, col. 1.]

The Court is, in all cases, bound to adjudicate upon the matters in issue between the parties and it is unnecessary for the parties to pray that this should be done. [p. 701, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This matter came before a Division Bench on a question of Court fees in an appeal preferred to this Court on behalf of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs as the reversionary heirs of Benarsi Pershad instituted the suit to recover possession of a portion of his estate to which they were entitled as reversionary heirs on the death of his widow Jainti Kumari. The defendant claims to be in possession of the property in suit under a deed of gift executed by Jainti Kumari during her life time. She died in 1916 and the plaintiffs on endeavouring to obtain possession and to have their names entered in register D in the Land Registration Department were opposed by the defendants who set up the deed of gift executed by the widow. The plaint alleges that the plaintiffs are the next reversionary heirs of Benarsi Pershad and that the property in suit formed part of his estate, that his widow Musammat Jainti Kumari, after his death, came into possession by right of inheritance as a Hindu widow and that on her death the plaintiffs became entitled to possession, but that their possession was opposed by the defendants who set up a deed of gift executed by Jainti Kumari. They further plead that the deed of gift made by the widow is not legally binding on the plaintiffs and that the defendant is not entitled to retain possession. There are other allegations which it is unnecessary to refer to in detail. In the prayer portion of their plaint they claim the following reliefs :—

(1) That on consideration of the above facts the Court may be pleased to hold that the properties in dispute constitute the estate of Babu Benarsi Pershad, that the plaintiffs, as reversionary heirs of the said Babu, are entitled to get possession of the properties in dispute since the death of Musammat Jainti Kumari, that it is illegal on the part of the defendant not to give up possession of the properties, and that the defendant's possession is quite illegal and wrongful.

(2) That on adjudication of the above points a decree may be passed in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of the properties in dispute by dispossessing the defendant or such person as may be found in possession at the time of delivery of possession.

With their plaint the plaintiffs deposited a Court-fee upon a valuation of 10 times the Government revenue, treating it as a suit for possession of land under section 7 (v) of the Indian Court Fees Act. On appeal to this Court they again paid the fee calculated on the same basis with their memorandum of appeal, The Stamp Reporter, whose duty it is to see that the proper fee is attached to the memoradum of appeal, reported that the fee payable in such a case was that provided by section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, which provides for suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed, in which case the stamp-fee payable is an ad valorem fee according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal. If the fee is payable under clause (iv) and not under clause (v) of the section, the plaint and the memorandum of appeal were both insufficiently stamped by a sum of Rs. 1,025. The question came up before the Taxing Officer who referred it to the Taxing Judge, who held that the case fell within section 7 clause (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act and that on the memorandum of appeal the deficit Court-fee should be paid. Upon this question his decision as to the fee payable on the memorandum of appeal is final and the deficit has been paid. The question whether the deficit payable on the plaint should be deposited before the appeal should proceed was placed before the Bench for determination. As there appeared to be some conflict of opinion between the decision in the case of Khetra Mohon Mohapatra v. Ganesh Lal Pandit (1) and the case of Ram Sanehi Tewari v. Mahadeo Upadhya decided by the Taxing Judge, Mr. Justice Roe in August 1917, First Appeal No. 242 of 1917 the Division Bench thought that the question should be heard by a Special Bench and it now comes before us for determination.

The question is, whether the present suit is one to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed under clause (iv) (c) of section 7, in which case the fee paid on the plaint is deficient by Rs. 1,025, or whether it is a suit for the possession of land under clause (v) of that section. A practice appears to have sprung up in the subordinate Courts of this Province, and possibly in other Provinces, of claiming declarations in cases where such relief is altogether unnecessary. This practise frequently gives rise to questions of some nicety as to what is the proper fee payable in such cases. In cases where such a declaration has been claimed, although it is not necessary in the particular case to enable the plaintiff to obtain possession of property or other relief for which the suit is really brought, it has sometimes been held that if he frames the suit in that way he must pay a Court fee upon a suit so framed. Further, where the plaintiff claims relief to which he is not entitled until some decree or alienation of property which stands in his way has been avoided, or until his legal character or title, which has been called in question, has been declared by a decree of the Court it has generally been held that such a suit comes under clause (iv) (c) of the section, even though the declaration which it is necessary for him to obtain before the further relief can be granted has not been in terms asked for in the plaint. In the present case the plaintiff asks for an adjudication upon certain points and for a decree in his favour for delivery of possession by dispossessing the defendant. He does not in terms ask the Court for any declaration either as to his legal character or title or as to the invalidity of the gift in favour of the defendant. The Court is in all cases bound to adjudicate upon the matters in issue between the parties and it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to pray that this should be done. The real relief which the plaintiff seeks is delivery of possession of the property by dispossession of the defendant, and if he asks for a decree in those terms when he is not bound first to ask for a declaration before such relief can be granted I do not think that, merely because he ask the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in issue, the suit should be treated as a suit to obtain a declaratory decree with consequential relief. The real question for determination appears to me to be whether or not the plaintiff can obtain in the present suit a decree for possession without first seeking a declaration that the gift to the defendant by Jainti Kumari is not binding. If a gift in such circumstances is binding as against the reversioner until it is set aside by the decree of the Court then it is, in my opinion, essential that he should first ask for a declaration setting it aside. This question appears to me to be governed by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (2) where it was decided in a suit by a reversioner on the death of a Hindu widow to recover immoveable property of her husband, of which the widow had granted a lease for a term extending beyond her own life, that the reversioner might at his option affirm the alienation or treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, there being nothing to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the heir's right to recover the property. In that case the plaintiffs had in fact by their plaint prayed for a declaration that the lease was inoperative as against them and further asked for delivery of possession. It was held, however, that it was not necessary for them to claim a declaration and that they might merely have claimed possession leaving it to the defendants to plead and (if they could) prove the circumstances which they relied on for showing that the lease or any derivative dealings with the property were not in fact voidable but were binding on the reversionary heirs. Their Lordships accordingly held that Art. 91 of the Limitation Act which limits to three years the period for bringing a suit to cancel or set aside an instrument was no bar to a suit for possession after the three years had expired.

It follows, therefore, that in the present case there was no necessity for the plaintiff to seek a declaration that the gift was not binding as a necessary preliminary to his right to recover possession nor did he in fact do so. I can see no reason why the wording of the prayer portion of the claim which asks the Court to consider and adjudicate upon the matters alleged in the plaint and then grant a decree for possession should be interpreted as asking for a declaratory decree. The Court was bound to determine the questions in issue and the plaintiff was not bound to seek a declaration in the form of a decree. The only decree asked for was one for possession after dispossessing the defendant and the rest of the prayer was merely unnecessary surplusage which I regret to say is so often a distinctive feature of the pleadings which come before us.

The cases of Ugra Mohan Chaudhuri v. Lachhmi Prasad Chaudhuri (3) and Khetra Mohon Mohapatra v. Ganesh Lal Pandit (1) were relied upon by the learned Government Advocate who appeared on behalf of the Board of Revenue. In the former case the plaintiffs' claim to recover a large estate depended upon the validity of his adoption which had been distinctly challenged and he brought the suit to establish his status as an adopted son as well as to recover the estate. It was, therefore, held that the suit was one for a declaratory decree with consequential relief. In the second case the plaintiff asked in terms for a declaration that she was the sole heir of her father and that the defendants who claimed under a transfer from her mother when in possession of the estate as a Hindu widow had no right to the properties in suit. Even if such a declaration was not necessary the plaintiff asked for it and it was competent to her to do so. The fee in both cases was held to fall under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Act. Those cases, however, do not afford any authority for the proposition that where a declaration is neither necessary nor in terms asked for the suit should be treated as one coming under clause (iv) (c) of the section.

It was further argued that as the Deputy Collector had refused to enter the plaintiff's name in the register he was bound to seek a declaration of his title. I am unable to follow this argument. The title of the plaintiff in no way depended upon the act of the Deputy Collector nor was anything done by that officer an obstacle which required to be removed before the plaintiff could assert his title and claim possession. In my opinion the fee paid on the plaint was the proper fee and the case came within clause (v) and not clause (iv) (c) of the 7th section of the Court Fees Act. The plaint was properly stamped and the appeal should be allowed to proceed.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

COUTTS, J.—I regret I am unable to agree with my Lord the Chief Justice and my learned brothers.

As I read the plaint, the suit is one for a declaratory decree with a consequential relief, and this being so, the Court-fee is payable under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. The Court Fees Act is a purely fiscal Act, and in deciding what Court-fee is payable on a plaint, the question of whether any relief asked for is necessary or not does not, in my opinion, arise.

DAS, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17, O. XXII, r. 3—Amendment of plaint by deceased plaintiff's legal representative—Limits of amendment—Conflict of interests—Proper course for legal representative.

It is not open to the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff to assert any individual and hostile rights which he may have against the deceased plaintiff and those claiming through or under him and to seek to enforce those individual and paramount rights under the guise of an application to amend the plaint. [p 705, col. 1.]

All that he can do is to take up the suit at the stage at which it was left by the deceased plaintiff and to continue the proceedings as legal representative. [p 705, col. .]

The limits to amendment should be determined by the consideration whether it would have been granted if the deceased had made the application [p 705, cols. 1 & 2.]

The power to grant amendment is subject to the rule that the subject-matter of a suit cannot be changed by means of amendment nor can one distinct cause of action be substituted for another. [p. 705, col. 1]

Therefore, the legal representative of a plaintiff who dies cannot be allowed to so amend the plaint as to convert a suit of one nature into one of another nature simply because he has in law the right to repudiate the transactions of the deceased as not binding on the estate to which he has succeeded. [p. 705, col. 2.]

In cases where there is a conflict of interests between the deceased plaintiff and his legal representative the proper course is for the latter to file a separate suit to enforce his rights. And it is not open to him in his capacity as legal representative to repudiate the transactions which have been admitted by the deceased to be valid and on the footing of the validity of which the deceased lodged his claim [p. 706, col. 1]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 18th December 1920, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 267 of 1920, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Appellant.—The lower Court should not have granted the legal representative's application for amendment of plaint. The amendment asked for has practically the effect of converting the deceased plaintiff's suit into a suit of a different and inconsistent character. The plaintiff's representative disaffirms and repudiates the transactions entered into by the deceased. The test is, would the amendment have been allowed if the original plaintiff had asked for it? The only remedy for the representative lay in a separate suit. He cannot continue the suit on amendments contradictory to those alleged in the plaint. He can only continue the proceedings. That is the gist of O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. See Subbaraya Mudali v. Manika Mudali (1), Umrao Begum v. Irshad Husain (2), Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Nani Mohan Banerjee (3), Sham Chand v. Bhayaram Panday (4).

Messrs. L. A. Govindaragava Iyer, for the Respondent.—The amendment was well within the powers of the Court. If the legal representative is entitled to the reliefs claimed by him in his proposed application there is no use driving him to a regular suit. It is the declared policy of the Legislature to avoid multiplicity of suits. The Code of 1908 gives wider powers of amendment than the Code of 1882. See Bal Kishan Lal v. Topeswar Singh (5), Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (6), Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswa Nath Mandal (7), Sangili v. Mookan (8) and Sakharam Mahadev v. Hari Krishna Dange (9).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer in reply:—The cases cited by the other side can all be distinguished. In those cases the materials necessary for granting the reliefs were all found. They do not derogate from the salutory rule that new causes of action should not be introduced or hostile rights set up under the guise of amendment applications.

JUDGMENT.—This petition arises out of an application made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to amend the plaint as originally filed. The suit was filed by the Rajah of Kalahasti against the defendants on a mortgage executed by him. As the Rajah of Kalahasti, before he succeeded to the Zemindari, had lent a lakh of rupees to the previous Rajah on the mortgage of certain villages, he filed a suit in two capacities. He described himself as the first plaintiff in his individual capacity and as the second plaintiff in his capacity as the Rajah of Kalahasti. As the transaction according to him took the form of an absolute sale-deed with a promise to re-convey and as only a sum of Rs. 84,000 out of the consideration was admitted by him, the reliefs he claimed were a decree for redemption after payment of Rs. 84,000 and for possession or in the alternative, if the transaction be held to be a sale and not a mortgage, for the recovery of Rs. 2,79,045 or such other sum as may be found by the Court to be due as unpaid purchase-money. Various defences were put in which it is unnecessary to consider for the purpose of this petition.

The plaintiff died pending the suit and his successor to the Zemindari applied to be brought on record as legal representative and was brought on record, as the third plaintiff. He also applied to amend the plaint by making allegations (1) to the effect that there was only a consideration of Rs. 23,400; (2) that, in any event, the transaction set out in the plaint, even if true, would not bind him as successor to the estate, as the moneys raised thereunder were not utilised for purposes binding on the estates; (3) that the sale alleged in the plaint for Rs. 3,00,000 odd was an improvident transaction, which caused serious loss to the estate and is not binding on him, and (4) that as the original vendee did not perform his undertaking, he is not entitled to remain in possession. The Subordinate Judge allowed the amendment and paragraphs 10 (a), 10(b), 10(c) and 12(a) are the amended paragraphs setting forth the contentions of the present Zemindar.

There can be little doubt that under section 4 of the Madras Impartible Estates Act, II of 1904, the present Zamindar is entitled to question the alienations made, or debts contracted, by the deceased plaintiff if the alienations or debts were made or incurred under circumstances which would not entitle the managing member of a Hindu joint family, not being the father or grandfather of the other co-parceners, to make an alienation or incur a debt binding on the shares of the other co-parceners independently of their consent. The only question is whether he can do so in his capacity as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff. I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing the amendment which virtually amounts to the assertion of a title by the legal representative hostile to that person whom he purports to represent, and denying that the transaction entered into by the deceased plaintiff and on the footing of which he sued is binding on him. In cases where there is a conflict of interests between the deceased plaintiff and his legal representative and where the latter claims that he is not bound by the transaction of the deceased plaintiff, I think the proper course is for the legal representative to file a separate suit to enforce his rights, and that it is not open to the legal representative in his capacity as such to repudiate the transactions which have been admitted by the deceased to be valid and on the footing of the validity of which the deceased claimed certain reliefs in the plaint. Order XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, enacts that where the right to sue survives, the Court shall, on the application made in that behalf, cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit. So that, it is clear from the above rule that all that the legal representative can do is to take up the suit at the stage at which it was left by the deceased plaintiff and to continue the proceedings as legal representative. It is not open to him to assert any individual and hostile rights which he may have against the deceased plaintiff and those claiming through or under him and to seek to enforce those individual and paramount rights under the guise of an application to amend the plaint. So far as the amendment of the plaint is concerned, it seems to me that the limits to the amendment should be determined by the consideration, whether it would have been granted, if the deceased had made the application. Within those limits, it is of course open to the legal representative to ask for amendment and the Court would, in my opinion, be justified in granting it. But where the amendment sought is one which the deceased himself could not have asked, it seems to me difficult to see how his legal representative could ask for it. It is clear that in the present case it was not open to the deceased Zemindar to question the propriety of his own alienation or to seek a declaration that the alienations made by him and which in terms are not limited to his own life-interest in the Zemindari are not binding on his successors. It is of course open to the successor of a Zemindar either to affirm an alienation made by him or to treat it as inoperative as being in excess of the powers of disposition vested in him by law. Where the legal representative disaffirms the transaction as in derogation of his individual right, it is difficult to see how the suit to redeem can be converted to a suit to question the propriety of the alienation, as against the reversioner.

In the latter case, the issues raised and the considerations involved would be wholly foreign to the issues in the suit to redeem. I can find no authority for the proposition that a suit of one nature can be converted into one of another nature simply because the legal representative has in law the right to repudiate the transactions of the deceased, as not binding on the estate to which he has succeeded.

Turning to the authorities, they seem to be clearly against the contention of the respondent. In Subbaraya Mudali v. Manika Mudali (1) it was held that the representative of a deceased plaintiff can only prosecute the cause of action as originally framed and that the defendant can raise no other defence against him, than he could have raised against the deceased plaintiff. In Umrao Begum v. Irshad Husain (2) the widow of a deceased taluqdar in Oudh claimed the taluq as against the daughter's son of the deceased. Her claim was disallowed as the grandson was held entitled to succeed under the Oudh Estates Act. The widow preferred an appeal to the Privy Council and died pending the appeal

Her daughter was brought on record as her legal representative. Though the suit was confined to the taluq, she claimed to bring into the controversy other property left by the last male-holder. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that she could not do so, and that the revived appeal should be confined to the questions raised between the original parties as to the taluq. Their Lordships observe: "The reasons for the revivor apply only to the taluq, and it would obviously be improper and dangerous to allow Umrao to use the position she has obtained as the substitute of Ahmadi for the purpose of advancing her personal claims. Whatever claims Umrao has against any part of the estate she must enforce by a suit on her own behalf." In Sham Chand v. Bhayaram Panday (4) it was held that a person who is in the position of a rival claimant, who is desirous of setting up a claim of his own, which is not only not dependent upon the claim of the original plaintiff, but is in conflict therewith, cannot do so as the legal representative of the deceased. In Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Nani Mohan Banerjee (3) Harrington, J, held that "the right to sue in O. XXII means the right to bring a suit asserting a right to the same relief which the deceased plaintiff asserted at the time of his death."

It is argued by Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer that the powers of amendment under the Code of 1908 are much wider, than those under the Code of 1882 and that the Court should allow an amendment which would prevent a multiplicity of suits. So far as the power to grant amendments is concerned, it is subject to the rule that you cannot substitute one distinct cause of action for another or change by means of amendment the subject-matter of the suit. In Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council observe: "All rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice, and it is, therefore, essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised, but nonetheless no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by means of amendment, the subject matter of the suit." After referring to section 153 of the Code and r. 17 of O. VI, their Lordships state that to allow an amendment, whereby another and independent contract was set up when the original contract was negatived would be going outside the provisions of the Code.

Reliance was placed by Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer on Bal Kishan Lal v. Toreswar Singh (5) where an infant plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage-decree as not binding on him and it was found that the mortgage was executed for necessity, the Court allowed him to redeem. The learned Judges were of opinion that as all the materials necessary to grant a prayer for redemption were found and as the plaintiff can obtain the relief in a separate suit, "it would manifestly not be in the interest of either party to the litigation to allow the possibility of a fresh suit". In the present case, the materials necessary to support the claim of the legal representative, to disaffirm the mortgage and sale sued on, would not ordinarily be necessary to be proved on the claim as originally made by the deceased plaintiff and it will be introducing contentions entirely foreign to the original claim to allow the amendment. Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (6) was a case where the plaintiff claimed full proprietary possession free from all mortgages or other burdens granted by his predecessor. The suit was dismissed by the High Court which reversed the decision of the Sub Judge. Before the Privy Council a point was taken for the first time that the dismissal was wrong and that in any event a decree for possession ought to have been passed, conditional on payment of mortgages and charges created by the predecessor in-title. Their Lordships of the Privy Council stated that they experienced considerable difficulty in permitting the alternative case raised to be the ground of judgment but observed: "It is only because, in this view, it may be possible, out of a large wreckage of procedure, to construct the material for a just decision of the true rights of the parties, and because upon the whole this may be in the parties' own best interests, that their Lordships refrain simpliciter sustaining the appeals and dismissing the suits". This is no authority for the proposition that as a general rule a legal representative can be allowed in that capacity to set up his individual rights and disaffirm transactions on which the deceased based his right to claim the reliefs sought.

The principle that Courts may take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions referred to by Mookerjee, J., in Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswa Nath Mandal (7) has no application to cases like the present, where the death of a party creates rights on his legal representatives to question the validity of transaction entered into by the deceased. Sangili v. Mookan (8) and Sakharam Mahadeo v. Hari Krishna Dange (9) were cases where a co-parcener died pending appeal in a suit for partition and all that was held was that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for a larger share as it had increased by the death of a co-parcener. In Rustomji v. Sheth Purshotamdas (11) the father was the plaintiff and the son one of the defendants. The plaintiff died pending the appeal and the son was as his representative, the sole plaintiff. It was held under the peculiar circumstances of the case he can only get such relief as would have been possible, had he occupied that position at the institution of the suit.

I set aside the order allowing the amendment of the plaint with costs in this and the lower Court.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 542 OF 1921.

July 7, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coutts and Mr. Justice Das.

SIBANAND MISRA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS,

versus

Babu JAGMOHAN LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Subrogation—Purchaser of equity of redemption paying off incumbrances—Subrogation, right to, on sale being set aside—Suit to enforce security—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132, applicability of—Subrogation—Reimbursement, right of—Distinction.

The right of subrogation can be claimed only by a person who, though not primarily liable to discharge a debt, discharges it for his own protection or at the request of the party ultimately bound. It cannot be claimed by a mortgagor or any other person who has assumed the payment of the mortgage-debt without having any interest to protect. [p. 708, col. 2]

However, a purchaser of the mortgaged premises, not under a covenant to pay, who pays off incumbrances on the property becomes entitled to the benefit of the securities when the purchase is afterwards set aside. [p. 708, col. 2.]

Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram, 22 W. R. 409; 14 B. L. R. 226; 2 I. A. 7; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 405 (P. C.) and Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu, 21 M. 143; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 457, followed.

A suit seeking to enforce such securities is governed by Art. 132, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act and must be brought within 12 years from the date of the mortgage. [p. 711, col. 1.]

Subrogation is, in most cases, rather an additional remedy than an additional right and may exist concurrently with and as a further security to the right to a simple action for reimbursement. [p. 710, col. 1.]

Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, Vol. V, p. 5183, referred to.

Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh, 14 Ind. Cas. 496; 39 C. 527; 11 M. L. T. 265; (1912) M. W. N. 367; 9 A. L. J. 332; 14 Bom. L. R. 280; 16 C. W. N. 505; 15 C. L. J. 411; 22 M. L. J. 468; 39 I. A. 68 (P. C.), followed.

The right to reimburse arises on a contract, express or implied, to reimburse and the party who claims the right enforces it in his own right and not in the right of another. Consequently, the right does not arise until he has discharged the debt of another. But the right to enforce a security by virtue of subrogation is a right which equity concedes to a person who, not being primarily liable to discharge an obligation, does discharge it and it is a right to demand the performance of the original obligation and the application thereto of all the securities held by the creditor. [p. 709, col. 2; p. 710, col. 1.]

The right to reimbursement accrues to the person paying off a debt on the date on which he pays it off, while the right to enforce a security arises from the date of mortgage. [p. 702, col. 2.]

A second mortgagee paying off a prior mortgagee neither "acquires" a charge on the property nor does he acquire it on the date on which he pays off the prior mortgagee. The charge is already there; all that he acquires is a right to enforce the charge and to a cession in his favour of the securities held by the prior mortgagee. [p. 709, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The material facts are these: On the 13th December 1904 the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (who will be referred to as the defendants throughout this judgment) borrowed a sum of money from Musammat Chandra Badan Koer and executed a mortgage bond in her favour, the due date of the payment fixed in the mortgage bond being the 29th May 1905. Thereafter the defendants executed three successive mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs to cover the properties mortgaged to Musammat Chandra Badan Koer. The plaintiffs sued upon their mortgages and got a preliminary decree on the 28th August 1916, and a final decree on the 11th May 1917. Musammat Chandra Badan Koer also sued on her mortgage, and got a preliminary decree on the 2nd September 1916 and a final decree on the 2nd March 1917. In execution of the plaintiffs' decrees the mortgaged properties were put up for sale and were purchased by the plaintiffs on the 3rd January 1918. The defendants then presented an application under O. XXI, r. 90 for setting aside the sale. Musammat Chandra Badan Koer commenced her execution proceedings on the 16th November 1917, and the plaintiffs on the 17th April 1918 as puisne mortgagees and for their own protection paid off Musammat Chandra Badan Koer whose execution proceedings thereupon came to an end. It is important to remember that the discharge of the prior security by the plaintiffs took place at a time when the equity of redemption was in them, though an application for setting aside the sale was pending at the instance of the mortgagor. The application of the mortgagors for setting aside the sale in favour of the plaintiffs ended in a compromise, the mortgagors paying off the plaintiffs and the sale being set aside. On the 4th January 1919 the plaintiffs commenced this action to enforce Musammat Chandra Badan's security as against the defendants or in the alternative, for a personal decree as against the defendants. Their case in the plaint is a simple one. They say that on paying off Musammat Chandra Badan which they were obliged to do for their own protection, they were subrogated to the securities held by Musammat Chandra Badan and were entitled to enforce these securities as against the defendants. The Courts below have allowed the plaintiffs' claim and the defendants appeal to this Court.

Two questions have been argued before us by Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh on behalf of the appellants: First, that in the circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of the security held by Musammat Chandra Badan; and, secondly, that in any event, the right to enforce the security is barred by limitation. The argument as to the extinction of the security rests on the settled view of equity that a person who is primarily liable to discharge the debt and does discharge it is not entitled to claim a cession or assignment of the security. It was argued that, at the time when the plaintiffs discharged the debt of Chandra Badan, the equity of redemption was in them and that they were in fact in the position of the mortgagors primarily liable to discharge the debt due to Chandra Badan. In my opinion, the argument is not entitled to succeed. I accede to the argument that the right of subrogation can be claimed only by a person who, though not primarily liable to discharge a debt, discharges it for his own protection or at the request of the party ultimately bound, and that the right cannot be claimed by the mortgagor or by any person who has assumed the payment of the mortgage debt without having any interest to protect, but I am not prepared to agree with the view that the plaintiffs, after their purchase of the equity of redemption, were in the position of the mortgagor. It must be remembered that their purchase was not left unchallenged by the defendants and that an application for setting aside the sale was actually pending. That sale was ultimately set aside, and the moment it was set aside, equity will place the plaintiffs in the same position as that which they would have occupied but for the transaction which for the time being vested the equity of redemption in them. "A purchaser of the mortgaged premises, not under a covenant to pay, who pays off incumbrances on the property, is also entitled to the benefit of the securities though the purchase may be afterwards set aside." [See Ghose on Mortgage, 4th Edition, Volume 1, page 349. See also Moulvie Mahomed v. Shumsool Hooda (V.

Shewukram (1), Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (2) and the cases cited at page 34) of Ghose on Mortgage]. I am of opinion that, on paying off Musammat Chandar Badan and on their own purchase being set aside, the plaintiffs became entitled to the securities held by Musammat Chandra Badan.

On the question of limitation, however, I am of opinion that Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh's arguments ought to prevail. In order to understand the argument it is necessary to remember three important dates in the history of these transaction. Musammat Chandra Badan was entitled to receive the mortgage money from the defendants on the 29th May 1905, so that her cause of action to enforce the mortgage of the 13th December 1904 accrued to her on the 29th May 1905. The plaintiffs discharged the mortgage debts due to Chandra Badan on the 17th April 1918, and commenced the present action on the 4th January 1919. The argument of Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh is this: That, in so far as the plaintiffs are seeking to enforce the security of Chandra Badan, the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act inasmuch as they can only do so, not in their own right, but in the right of Chandra Badan. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, maintain that on paying off Chandra Badan, they acquired a right as against the defendants to be re-imbursed the money which they had paid for the benefit of the mortgagors, and, as a consequence, to a cession of the securities held by Chandra Badan, and that they acquired this right on the 17th April 1918 when they discharged the debt due to Chandra Badan. This argument receives considerable support from the decision of Banerji, J., in the case of Bora Shib Lal v. Munni Lal (3) but, with all respect, I am unable to agree with the view expressed by that learned Judge in the case cited. The argument of Banerji, J., is this: That a puisne mortgagee in paying off the prior mortgage is entitled under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, to be reimbursed by the mortgagor the money, which he pays to the prior mortgagee. He also acquires a charge on the property which he relieves of liability on general principles and under section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act. And the conclusion at which that learned Judge arrives may be stated in his own words. "This charge he acquires not when the prior mortgage was made nor when that prior mortgage could be enforced but on the date on which he pays off the amount of the prior mortgage. The right also to be re-imbursed accrues to him on the date on which he pays off the amount of the decree and relieves the mortgagors of the obligation which under the decree exists on them."

Speaking with all respect, I quite agree with the view that the right to be reimbursed accrues to the person paying off the debt on the date on which he pays it off; but I wholly deny that a second mortgagee paying off a prior mortgagee "acquires" a charge on the property or that he acquires it on the date on which he pays off the prior mortgagee. The charge, in my view, was already there, all that he acquires is a right to enforce the charge and to a cession in his favour of the securities held by the prior mortgagee. Section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which Mr. Justice Banerji refers, does not provide that, on paying off a prior mortgagee the subsequent mortgagee acquires a charge on the property; but it does provide that he acquires "all the rights and powers of the prior mortgagee as such". It is one thing to say that a person acquires a charge on the property; it is quite another thing to say that he acquires the rights and powers of the prior mortgagee, one of which is to enforce the charge already existing subject to the law of limitation.

In my opinion the right to re-imbursement stands on one footing; right to enforce a security by virtue of subrogation stands on another footing. The right to re-imbursement arises on a contract, express or implied, to reimburse; and the party who claims the right enforces it in his own right, and not in the right of another. Consequently, the right does not arise until he has discharged the debt of another. But the right to enforce a security by virtue of subrogetion is a right which equity concedes to a person who, not being primarily liable to discharge an obligation, does discharge it, and it is a right to demand the performance of the original obligation and the application thereto of all securities held by the creditor. It is a claim which is enforced in the right of the original creditor and only because the person discharging the obligation becomes clothed with the rights and powers of the original creditor. The subrogee is an assignee in equity, and it is difficult to understand how an assignee in equity stands on a better footing than an assignee at law. If, for instance, a creditor assigns his security for valuable consideration to a person who thereupon sues upon the security, it cannot be argued that, though the right to enforce the security in the hands of the creditor may be barred by limitation, the assignee may proceed to enforce it if he brings his suit within 12 years from the date of the assignment. It may be that the right to enforce the security in his own name arises on the date of the assignment; but the limitation has already commenced to run and will not cease to operate just because the creditor has assigned the security to another person. An equitable assignee, in my opinion, stands on no better footing and can only enforce the security in the right of the creditor and, therefore, subject to the Law of Limitation that would affect the creditor. As has been pointed out, subrogation is, in most cases, rather an additional remedy than an additional right, and may exist concurrently with, and as a further security, to the right to a simple action for reimbursement, and the fact that a party entitled to reimbursement and also to subrogation is entitled to two distinct remedies, seems often to be overlooked, to the confusion of both doctrines. (See Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 5th Volume p. 5183).

That this is the right view is completely borne out by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the the case of Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (4). The facts are somewhat complicated and it is unnecessary to set all the different transactions which had to be considered by the Judicial Committee in order to enable them to decide points which do not arise here. But it is necessary to set out the following transactions.

On the 20th November 1874 certain persons who will be referred to as the mortgagors executed a zarpeshgi deed in favour of Girwar Singh by which they borrowed Rs. 12,000 from Girwar Singh and gave as security for the loan eight items of properties. The loan was for a period of 12 years from the date of the mortgage. On the 7th January 1888 the mortgagors executed a simple mortgage in favovr of Gajadhar for Rs. 2,500 and gave one of the properties already mortgaged to Girwar Singh as a security for the loan. On the 17th February 1888 they obtained a loan of Rs. 12,000 from Musammat Alfan for the express purpose of liquidating the zarpeshgi and executed in her favour a simple mortgage of the properties mortgaged to Girwar Singh including the property mortgaged to Gajadhar. On the 22nd September 1900, the appellants as successors-in-interest of Musammat Alfan commenced their suit to enforce the mortgage of the 17th February 1888, and they sought to have the benefit of the mortgage covered by the zarpeshgi, deed of the 20th November 1874, and they claimed priority to the various mortgages executed by the mortgagors between the date of the zarpeshgi and the mortgage of the 17th February 1888 including the mortgage in favour of Gajadhar. It was assumed that the plaintiffs by discharging the mortgage covered by the zarpeshgi deed were subrogated to the securities held by Girwar Singh, the first mortgagee; but the question still arose whether, having regard to the lapse of time, they were entitled to enforce those securities as against Gajadhar. If it be considered that their right to enforce the security of Girwar Singh arose on the 17th February 1888, that is to say, the date on which they discharged the mortgage debt of Girwar Singh, their suit was well within time: but the Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that the suit, in so far as it sought to enforce the security of the 20th November as against Gajadhar, was barred by limitation. In rejecting the contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs the Judicial Committee said as follows: "But as the Rs. 12,000 were under the zarpeshgi deed of the 20th of November 1874, re-payable in Jeth 1294 Fasli (September 1887), and this suit was not brought until the 22nd of September 1900, the claim of the plaintiffs to priority is barred by Art. 132 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877." I regard the decision of the Judicial Committee as a complete answer to the arguments advanced before us on behalf of the respondents. I hold that the present suit in so far as it seeks to enforce the security of the 13th December 1904 is barred by Art. 132 of the Limitation Act.

The question still remains whether the plaintiffs' action can be regarded as a simple action for reimbursement, and I am of opinion that it can be so regarded. All the necessary facts are stated in the plaint to enable us to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiffs and they expressly ask for a personal decree against the defendants, The Courts below have concurrently found that on the 17th April 1918, the plaintiffs paid Musammat Chandra Badan Kuer the sum of Rs. 1,546-14-5 and thereby discharged her mortgage. This money the defendants were bound by law to pay Musammat Chandra Badan Kuer, and the plaintiffs were undoubtedly interested in the payment of the money. The plaintiffs are accordingly entitled to be re-imbursed by the defendants, and the action regarded as an action for re-imbursement is well within time. The plaintiffs are also entitled to interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month from the 17th April 1918 to the date of the decree, and are also entitled to interest on the amount decreed at the rate of six per cent. per year from the date of the decree up to the date of realization.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and in lieu thereof give the plaintiffs a decree as against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for Rs. 1,546-14-5 with interest as already stated. There will be no order as to costs.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 20th August 1917, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Ludhiana, dated the 11th January 1917.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellant.

Lala Ganga Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Punjab Singh, a Jat of Raowal in Tahsil Jagraon in the Ludhiana District, had three sons, Rala Singh, Indar Singh and Jagindar Singh, of whom the first two died before their father. On the death of Punjab Singh in 1906 his land was mutated in favour of Jagindar Singh and the two widows of Indar Singh, viz., Musammat Santi and Musammat Ram Kaur. Musammat Ram Kaur married Jagindar Singh, and by him had a son Jagir Singh, who has brought the present suit against Musammat Santi for possession of the land standing in her name, disputing her right to succeed to a share in the land left by his grandfather. The First Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, but the District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit, holding that by custom a daughter-in-law is entitled to succeed along with a son. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal, having obtained a certificate from the District Judge under section 41

(3) of the Punjab Courts Act, and the only question for determination is the point of custom.

The principal piece of evidence in favour of the defendant is the entry in the riwaj-i-am (contained in Dunnett's Customary Law of the Ludhiana District, compiled in 1911) in which it is stated in answer to question No. 32 that the heirs to the land of a deceased owner are (1) his sons subject to a right of succession by the widow and a son's widow if sonless; (2) other male lineal descendants; and (3) his widows, son's widow, and mother. According to this statement of the custom a daughter-in-law succeeds along with a son, and although no instances of such succession are mentioned, except one among Hindu Rajputs at page 53, the entry is, in accordance with the ruling of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), sufficient to throw the onus on to the plaintiff to prove that a daughter-in-law is excluded by a son.

The defendant's case is also supported by a judgment of Khwaja Tasadduq Hussain, dated the 9th August 1917, in the case of Musammat Indo versus Supuran. It is true that the present defendants' succession to her father-in-law's property was cited in that case as an instance in support of the custom, but the judgment was based, not on that instance alone, but on other instances as well and, in particular, on a judgment given by Lala Ram Nath in 1907.

An instance of a widow succeeding to her father-in-law's estate is also mentioned by one of the defendant's witnesses, but we do not attach much importance to it.

Some judgments are relied upon by the plaintiff, but only two are in point, viz, a judgment of Mr. Kensington, Divisional Judge, of the year 1898 in Ratan Singh versus Musammat Bholi, and a judgment of Mirza Abdul Rab in 1915 in Partab Singh versus Musammat Daya Kaur. Very little weight can be given to either of these judgments, as Mr. Gordon-Walker's Customary Law of the Ludhiana District, which was in force at the time when Mr. Kensington's judgment was given, did not provide, as the Customary Law compiled by Mr. Dunnett does, for the succession of a daughter-in law in the presence of a son, while Mirza Abdul Rab's judgment makes no reference to the Customary Law at all, but mentions only the instances which were adduced in evidence. No reported cases relating to the Jats of the Ludhiana District have been cited.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the onus which the entry in the existing riwaj-i-am casts on the plaintiff of proving that a daughter-in-law is excluded by a son has not been discharged, and that the lower Appellate Court's decision is correct. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

ABDUL RAHIM v. SHEIKH KAWADOO.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint which started this suit states that in field No. 33, 29 acres 38 gunthas rental Rs. 31 of Mauza Basali alias Nagapur, Taluk Akot, Haji Mouzdarkhan wald Haji Delekhan held western 10 acres 0 gunthas, viz., Sub Division No. 1, Abdul Rahiman wald Muhammad Hanif defendant central 5 acres 18 gunthas now Sub Division No. 2 and Housdarkhan wald Jayankhan and Biramkhan son of Nawazkhan held the eastern 14 acres now Sub Division No. 3. These shares were made as between the above co sharers on 4th July 1911 and a kararnama was executed to that effect between the said sharers. They have from 1911 to 1916 been cultivating in accordance with these shares. Housdarkhan died and his heir, his daughter, Habibbi, wife of Rahimatulla and daughter-in-law, Rahimti wife of Muhammad Khan and Biramkhan owners of the eastern 14 acres share sold this share to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,500 on 3rd April 1916 by a registered document. They delivered possession. Haji Mouzadarkhan son of Haji Delekhan owner of the western share of the said field sold the above share now No. 33/1, 10 acres 10 gunthas to the plaintiff for Rs. 2,000 on 10th June 1918 by a registered document giving possession. By his purchase the plaintiff has become owner of the whole field with the exception of 5 acres 18 gunthas owned by the defendant in the middle of the field and defendant has wrongfully and illegally taken possession of 3 acres and 12 gunthas from the plaintiff's eastern 14 acres of land and taken the produce therefrom and hence the present suit for a declaration that the defendant has no right to these 3 acres 12 gunthas for possession thereof. The plaintiff asks for possession of this land.

The defendant admitted that there had been three sharers in the field, viz, Mouzadarkhan, Biramkhan and the defendant, and that he was the owner of the middle one third share, the area of that share being 9 acres 7 gunthas and not 5 acres 18 gunthas as alleged by the plaintiff. He states that he and his predecessors before have always been in possession of 9 acres and 7 gunthas of land as owners. As to kararnama, the defendant says he remembers nothing about it though it was signed by him, he being at the time 16 years old. The document is inadmissible in evidence, for want of registration and no effect was given to it as the field was not partitioned in accordance with it and the plaintiff's predecessor was never in possession of more than 10 acres 21 gunthas out of 14 acres referred to by the plaintiff and the defendant took forcible possession of the land now claimed. The case went to trial on the following issues:—

i. Whether defendant was a minor when the kararnama, dated the 4th July 1911, was executed by him? If so, what is the effect thereof?

ii. Whether the kararnama is admissible in evidence though unregistered?

iii. When was the field partitioned and when was the partition given effect to?

iv. Whether plaintiff's predecessor in-title was in possession of 14 acres of land till 1916 as alleged?

v. Whether Biramkhan, Rahimbi and Habibbi executed the sale-deed, dated 3rd April 1916 in plaintiff's favour?

vi. What is the area of the land ABCD in plaintiff's map, i.e., whether 3 acres 12 gunthas, or 3 acres 19 gunthas?

vii. Whether defendant and his predecessors have been in possession of the land ABCD for more than 12 years before suit?

viii. To what relief is plaintiff entitled?

The Trial Court held that at the date of the kararnama the defendant had attained majority. The kararnama was held to be a deed of partition and as such inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. It held that the plaintiff failed to establish the partition. The Record of Right shows as regards the share in dispute only 10 acres 21 gunthas and the plaintiff had failed to establish when defendant dispossessed him of the 3 acres 12 gunthas claimed in the suit. Biramkhan, Rahimbi and Habibbi were found to have executed the sale deed of 3rd April 1916 in plaintiff's favour. The area of the land in suit ABCD was found to be 3 acres 12 gunthas and the land claimed being in defendant's possession before the Record of Right enquiry took place. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

On appeal that dismissal was set aside and the plaintiff's claim decreed, the Court holding that the predecessors-in title of the plaintiff were not parties to the document. That was document between the owner of one portion of the field and the defendant and contents of this document can thus be proved as against them. The Judge finds that the evidence shows that the sharers cultivated the land separately some 17 or 18 years and that the arrangement of separate cultivation was agreed to by the defendant when he voluntarily executed the kararnama, Exhibit P-4. The eastern portion of the field was full of mango trees which affected the crops, therefore, the owner of that share was allotted a larger area. The claim was decreed and against that decision the present appeal has been filed.

It is clear that if the kararnama is not admissible in evidence the plaintiff's case fails. On the face of it, the appellant's share would be 9 acres and not 5 acres and some gunthas. It is not here denied that the value of the property was over Rs. 100, therefore, if the deed is one of partition registration would be necessary. There is also the question as to whether the partition was acted upon. The appellant argues on the strength of Ranjagamier v. Ranjagam Iyyar (1), Pothi Naicken v. Nagama Naicker (2), Thandavan v. Valliamma (3) and Upendra Nath Banerjee v. Umesh Chandra Banerjee (4), that the Kararnama is inadmissible in the present case, and it seems to me that there is force in this contention. It is produced here to prove no collateral purposes. The case is based really on the kararnama itself and as that is virtually a deed of partition affecting the property valued at over Rs. 100 it seems to me that without registration it is inadmissible in evidence. The evidence in the case does not go to prove that it was acted on. It seems that for many years the defendant held the 9 acres odd in the field and that the execution of this kararnama made no difference in the area held by him. It has been here argued that the document can be admitted on the ground that it is one for specific performance of the agreement to hold the entire Survey number in particular division, the agreement being based on an adjustment or mutual promises, or, in other words, the matter was like a family settlement which was final. I am not impressed with this argument. The document itself states: "We have amicably arrived at a settlement and have got our respective land divided in the following shares." It is clearly a deed of partition and as such inadmissible. The evidence without this document does not prove the plaintiff's case.

The result is, that I allow this appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Where moneys belonging to a judgment-debtor are attached before judgment in a number of suits against him by several creditors and they are realised before decree is passed in any of them, re-attachment is not necessary and the money should be held to the credit of all the suits and distributed between all the attaching creditors who subsequently obtain decrees if they obtain decrees before any of the others apply for payment. RAGHO v. SAKHARAM.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Thirumangalam, dated the 23rd October 1919, in Execution Appeal No. 576 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 651 of 1918.

Mr. S. R. Suthusami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Venkatasubramania Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I am of opinion that the order of the District Munsif is right. The petitioner and counter-petitioners attached the moneys in the hands of the District Board Engineer and the moveables before judgment and the money was remitted by the Engineer and moveables were sold before any of them had obtained decrees. There is, therefore, no reason why the money received by the Court from the District Board Engineer and the money realised by sale should be credited to one suit rather than another. Priority of attachment by itself confers no prior right. Under r. 11, O. XXXVIII it is not necessary to re-attach, and all that is necessary is for the decree-holders to apply for payment as nothing more remains to be done but to pay out the fund in Court.

I am of opinion that in a case like the present the money realised before any of the petitioners obtained decrees should be held to the credit of all the suits and distributed between all the attaching creditors who subsequently obtained decrees if they have obtained decrees before any of the others apply for payment.

The case is one of first impression and is not covered by any authority or by any provision of the Code and, giving it my best consideration, I think the proper procedure in such cases is for notice to be given to all the attaching creditors who obtained decrees and for division of the fund rateably. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 18th of March 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1921.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit for pre-emption which was filed on the 7th January 1920 has been dismissed as time barred. The facts found are as follows: On the 15th January 1918 the vendors contracted with the defendant to sell to him their share in a field. The defendant took possession of the property on the same day. The sale-deed was executed on the 25th December 1918 and was registered on the 8th January 1919. On the question of limitation the lower Appellate Court writes:—

"From what date should limitation run? I think it should run from 25th December 1918, the date of sale. The possession of defendant as under the sale is from that date. This view is supported by the case in Ram Peara v. Rup Lal (1). It is futile to argue that there is no effective sale until sale-deed is registered, and, therefore, possession must refer to sale only from 8th January 1919. Section 47 of the Registration Act is contrary to this view and I find, therefore, that defendant got possession on 25th December 1918 and that the suit is barred."

For a right of pre emption to arise the sale must be complete, that is, that must be an entire cessation of right on the part of the vendor. Bukshi Ali v. Tofer Ali (2). Until a registered deed is executed there cannot be such cessation of right and no right of pre-emption can arise. In fact if a suit had been brought between the dates of the execution and the registration of the sale-deed it would have been liable to be defeated by a plea on the defendant's part that no right of pre emption had arisen as the sale had not been perfected, that is, that the vendor's right had not ceased and the vendee's right had not come into existence. If the defendant could defeat the plaintiff's claim as above, I do not think that he could, when it suits him, plead that the right arose at the date of the execution of the sale-deed. It would be inequitable to apply section 47, Registration Act, in such a case to give rise retrospectively to a right of pre-emption. Moreover, if Art. 10 is strictly construed, as a matter of fact, no possession was taken under the sale, and the first part of that Article would be inapplicable. As the second part is also admittedly inapplicable, Art. 120 would be the only Article governing the case. I hold that the suit is within time. As no other issue than that of limitation was raised, the plaintiff's claim is decreed with costs throughout.

Let a decree be drawn up in terms of O. XX, r. 14 (1). First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. I fix the 12th September 1922 as the day on or before which the purchase-money shall be paid into Court.

Parties—Sale in insolvency proceedings—Appeal against order confirming sale—Auction-purchaser and Official Receiver, whether necessary parties.

In an appeal from an order confirming a sale in insolvency proceedings, the auction-purchaser and the Official Receiver are necessary parties and the omission to make them parties is fatal to the appeal.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 13th August 1921.

Bakhshi Sohan Lal, R. B, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Karnal confirming a sale effected in insolvency proceedings by the Official Receiver of the right, title and interest of the insolvent in property belonging to the joint Hindu family of which he is a member.

The auction purchasers and the Official Receiver have not been made parties in the appeal and a preliminary objection is taken that on this account the appeal cannot proceed. This objection must prevail. The persons who have purchased the property at the sale the validity of which is being contested, and the Official Receiver, who represents the insolvent's estate, are the persons principally interested and are clearly necessary parties and the omission to make them parties is fatal to the appeal. Mela Ram v. Narain Das (1) and Khaira v. Salem Raj (2) are in point so far as the case of an auction-purchaser is concerned. It is now too late to make the auction purchasers and the Official Receiver respondents as the appeal would be barred by time as against them.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58 (d), 60, 98—Mortgage deed, construction of—Usufructuary mortgage—Condition barring redemption before and after certain date—Anomalous mortgage—Clog on equity of redemption.

The mere fact that in a usufructuary mortgage that is a condition barring redemption within five years of the date of the mortgage would not take it out of the category of usufructuary mortgage, and make it an anomalous mortgage. [p. 718, col 2]

A condition in a usufructuary mortgage barring redemption (1) within five years, and 2 after twenty years, from the date of the mortgage amounts to a clog on the equity of redemption.

Per Oldfield, J.—The definition of a usufructuary mortgage in section 58 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act refers to payment of the mortgage-money, only in connection with the mortgagee's right to retain possession and includes nothing inconsistent with its application to mortgages, containing a condition for mere postponement of the right to re-pay. Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 277 of 1918, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Yellamanchilli, in Original Suit Nos 305 of 1917.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The terms of Exhibit A, the mortgage we have to construe, are given in the judgment of my learned brother, which I have had the advantage of reading; they need not be repeated. Shortly, the mortgage is usufructuary with conditions barring redemption, (1) within five years, and (2) after twenty years from its date. If there were only the second of these conditions, the case would be covered by the decision of the Full Bench in Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pillayi (1), the clog constituted by that condition on the equity of redemption being disregarded. The question is then whether, as defendants contend, the inclusion of the first condition deprives the document of its character as an usufructuary mortgage As we hold it does not do so, it is not necessary to consider whether the second condition must receive effect as one of the terms of the mortgage with regard to section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act.

If the condition postponing the re-payment of the mortgage money is regarded as intended for the benefit of the mortgagor, it will suspend only his liability to be sued, not his right to redeem before the date fixed, vide, Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam (2), and it clearly cannot affect the usufructuary character of the mortgage, so as to attract the operation of section 98. Here, however, it must rather be regarded with reference to the possessory character of the mortgage, as intended for the benefit of the mortgagee. No authority directly relevant in such a case has been cited. But the language of section 62 entails that postponement of the right to redeem to a date fixed in one way, with reference to repayment of the mortgage money from the profits, is not inconsistent with the usufructuary character of the mortgage; and we have been shown no reason why such postponement to a date fixed otherwise by actual specification should be so. In fact the simplest and the sufficient ground of decision is that the definition of a usufructuary mortgage in section 58 (d) refers to payment of the mortgage money in connection only with the mortgagee's right to retain possession and includes nothing inconsistent with its application to mortgages, containing a condition for mere postponement of the right to re-pay.

The conclusion must, therefore, be in plaintiff's favour and he must have a decree for redemption as proposed by the District Munsif, the respondent being at liberty to draw the money, which we understand, is in deposit in lower Court.

The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

RAMESAM, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The suit is for redemption of a mortgage (Exhibit I, dated 3rd February 1893). The District Munsif decreed the suit, but on appeal, the learned District Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. Hence this second appeal.

The portion of Exhibit I material for the purpose of this case runs as follows:—"We have borrowed from you Rs. 1,000, we have put you in possession of the 8 acres 25 cents of land comprising.....towards the yearly interest of Rs. 80 at 8 per cent, and the taxes payable to Sircar. Whatever might be the profits received from the said lands in every year they shall be taken in payment of interest aforesaid and the taxes on the land. You shall enjoy the profits from the said lands without having anything to do with the increase or decrease. You need not receive the said principal sum of Rs. 1,000 even though we should pay you the same within five years from the current year Nandana. It is settled that in case we should pay afterwards at one and the same time the said one thousand rupees on the 15th of Chitrai Sudham of any year, you should give up our land to us. If the principal sum be not paid within 20 years from this date you shall treat and enjoy these lands as having been sold to you absolutely."

The learned District Judge held that this mortgage is an anomalous mortgage as "the circumstance that an arbitrary term of five years has been fixed within which the mortgagor may not redeem is sufficient to take this mortgage out of the category of the usufructuary mortgages." It is clear that but for the special term he relies on, the mortgage would be, in his opinion, a usufructuary mortgage and I agree with him so far. The question, therefore, arises whether on account of the addition of a term providing for irredeemability within five years the mortgage ceases to be usufructuary. No authority has been cited in support of the learned Judge's view and it seems to me that the addition of other terms not inconsistent with the main feature of the transaction does not destroy its character. In my opinion, the mortgage is merely a usufructuary mortgage with a clog on the equity of redemption, cf. the first alternative of Spencer, J. in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3). I do not think there is a combination of two kinds of mortgages in this case. There is no covenant to pay as in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3) (according to the view of Sadasiva Aiyar, J.) and hence no simple mortgage. Nor is there a mortgage by conditional sale. The last clause which provides for an outright sale on non payment for twenty years cannot make the transaction a mortgage by conditional sale. Vide the observations of Sadasiva Aiyar, J, in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3) (last seven lines) and Kumaraswamy Sastri, J. in Patte Muhammad v. Sheikh Davood (4) with which I agree. For the same reasons there is no English mortgage.

The case in Patte Muhammad v. Sheikh Davood (4) is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the essential elements of all the unmixed kinds of mortgage were wanting (see Spencer, J. at page 1012* and Kumaraswami Sastri, J. at page 1016).*

In my opinion the document is not an anomalous mortgage and the suit for redemption ought to have been decreed [see also Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pillayi (1) and Perayya v. Venkata (5).]

In the view taken by me, the more difficult question what is the exact operation of section 98, i. e., whether it should operate subject to section 60 does not arise.

The appeal will be allowed with costs throughout, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

A contract contained in a solenama between a landlord and a tenant under which the tenant is liable to pay rent at a certain rate, cannot be affected by the settlement of rent at a different rate under the Diara Act (XXXI of 1858). But if the rent fixed under the Diara Act is also the rent settled under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenant, in spite of the contract is liable to pay the rent settled under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. When a document is admitted in evidence at the appellate stage and is relied upon by the Appellate Court in its judgment, it ought to record an order admitting the document in evidence and should also record its reasons for admitting it in the appellate stage. [p 720, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Faridpur, dated the 4th of April 1919, modifying that of the Third Munsif, Bhanga, dated the 4th of August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sib Chandra Paulit (with him Babu Nani Lal Dey), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. I claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 43 12·0 a year. The defence alleged that the rent payable was Rs. 5 in accordance with the terms of a solenamah made in a previous suit. The First Court decreed the suit in full. On appeal, however, the suit was decreed at the rate of Rs. 5 per year. The Judge held that I was bound by the solenamah. Now, a part of the lands in suit is Diara land, rent of which was settled at Rs. 43-12 0 under the Diara Act XXXI of 1858 which has also been recorded in the settlement record under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. My submission is that under such circumstances I am entitled to the rent as claimed and further Rs. 5 was not a fixed rate. The Judge admitted the solenamah which was put in the First Court or in the proper stage of the appeal either and without recording any reasons acted upon it. I submit that is wrong. There is nothing in the order sheet or in the judgment justifying the admission of the solenamah.

Babu Dwijendra Nath Mukherjee (with him Babu Promotha Nath Banerjee), for the Respondents.—There are good reasons for admitting the solenamah into evidence which was most important for the case. They did not object to it. As regards the other point the finding of the Judge is conclusive.

Babu Sib Chandra Paulit replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent at the rate of Rs. 43-12-0 a year. The defence was that the rent was Rs. 5. It appears that a part of the land which was held by the defendants under the plaintiff was Diara land and the rent of the Diara land was settled at Rs. 43-12 under the Diara Act XXXI of 1858.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 43-12 annas. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was bound by the contract contained in a solenamah under which the defendants were liable to pay rent only at the rate of Rs. 5 and that such a contract cannot be affected by the settlement of rent under the Diara Act. He relied upon the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (1) and there are several other cases on the point. See Mohendra Nath v. Shyam Lal (2), Pria Nath Das v. Ramtaran Chatterjee (3), Zamir Mandal v. Tarini Charan Singh (4), Pirthi Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (5) and Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (6). The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the cases referred to above do not apply to the facts of the present case, firstly, because the contract which was relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge was not produced before the Court of first instance, and although it was produced before the Appellate Court, that Court did not admit it, though it was relied upon in the judgment without recording any reasons for the same. Secondly, because the rent was not fixed for ever by the contract and there was, therefore, no bar to the plaintiff's getting a decree at the rate of Rs. 4 3 12 and thirdly, because the rent settled under the Diara Act has also been recorded under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The last question seems to us to be an important one, because even if the plaintiff is bound by the contract set up by the defendants the defendant is liable to pay the rent settled under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the rent was not settled under any provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif, however, states that the rent settled under section 2 of the Diara Act of 1858 has been recorded in the settlement records prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Some papers were shown to us from the records which would seem to support the statement made in the Munsif's judgment. Evidently the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge was not drawn to those papers. We think that there should be a finding upon the question whether the rent fixed under the Diara Act was also the rent settled under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

With regard to the first contention it appears that when the contract relied upon by the defendants was produced before the lower Appellate Court, the learned Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that it would be considered at the hearing, but no order has been recorded on the point either in the order-sheet or in the judgment.

We think the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have recorded an order admitting the documents in evidence when it relied upon them in its judgment, and also recorded reasons for admitting the document in evidence at the appellate stage. The learned Vakil for the respondents has contended that there are grounds for the admission of the document at the appellate stage; but if that be so, the Court below ought to have recorded its reasons for the same.

We, therefore, think that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court for a finding upon the question whether the rent claimed by the plaintiff was settled under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that Court will state the reasons why the document should be admitted in evidence at the appellate stage.

The appeal will be retained on the file of this Court, and the finding of the lower Appellate Court will be returned within two months from the arrival of this order in that Court. The other questions raised will be considered after the arrival of the finding from that Court.

Order accordingly.

Contingent contract—Contract to sell balance of goods, after satisfying certain other demands, if void for uncertainty—Damages, ascertainment of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 73.

Where a person agrees to sell the balance of certain goods in stock after satisfying the demands of certain other persons, but on account of a rise in the price of goods neither sells the goods to the buyer nor to those other persons within the time specified, the contract is not void for uncertainty but is a contingent contract enforceable in the ordinary manner and damages for its breach can be ascertained in the usual manner. [p. 721, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 23rd July 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1921.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, being afraid that, owing to the uncertainty of the season, there would not be a demand as seed grain for the grain he had in stock, protected himself by entering into a contract with the plaintiffs. The contract was that, if any grain should remain in the appellant's hands after he had satisfied the demands of his Asamis for seed grain, he would sell the balance of his stock, the amount of which was named, to the plaintiffs at a named rate. It is common ground that the contract was to be completed within a week. The defendant parted with no grain at all to his Asamis and failed to deliver any grain to the plaintiffs. There is a concurrent finding of both Courts that it was the defendant who deliberately broke the contract because grain suddenly rose in price. The defendant-appellant has failed to prove that any Asamis wanted grain from him or that the contract was broken through any fault of the plaintiffs or that the plaintiffs were in any way to blame for Asamis not coming forward. The District Judge has,on these facts, awarded the plaintiffs damages calculated in the usual manner according to section 73 of the Contract Act. It is urged in appeal that the contract was void for uncertainty ; and that the plaintiffs' loss cannot be measured according to the terms of section 73, because they had no idea what amount of grain they were likely to receive, the loss cannot be measured at all. I am unable to agree with these contentions. It appears to me that the right way of looking to the matter is this. The contract was an ordinary contract which was not to be carried out or only to be partially carried out if certain events occurred, namely, the taking of some of the grain by Asamis Those events have not occurred and hence the contract should be enforced, and it has been found that the plaintiffs did not break in any way and defendant has failed to prove that the events, which did not happen, did not happen, because of the plaintiffs' fault. It may be mentioned that not a single Asami has been called in support of the defendant's contention.

The question of measure of damages is one quite apart from the fact that the contract is a contingent contract. The contingency on which the contract was to be enforced has occurred and damages have to be ascertained in the usual manner

With reference to the second ground of appeal which is to the effect that the contract can be good only to the extent of 50 Manis, it has to be observed that the parties agreed that the [illegible] bond sell o the plaintiffs [illegible] balance, whether it was more or less than 50 Manis, although a conjecture was hazarded to the effect that possibly the balance might not be more than 50 Manis. Both parties were clearly bound by the contract that all the balance, even though more than 50 Manis, should be sold.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Mortgage—Consideration—Promise to abandon prosecution of non-compoundable criminal case.

Where the consideration of a mortgage-bond is an agreement on the part of the mortgagee to abandon the prosecution of the mortgagor in a non-compoundable criminal case the bond is void, even if part of the consideration of the bond was good in law.

Nujebar Rahman v. Muktashed Husain, 15 Ind. Cas. 259; 16 C. W. N. 854; 40 C. 113, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 18th of February 1918, affirming that of the Second Munsif, Berhampur, dated the 18th of December 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Panchanon Ghose for Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.—There is no dispute as regards the execution of the mortgage-deed. I submit that the plaintiff can recover the sum of Rs. 400 from defendant No. 1, as the primary Court has come to a distinct finding that the amount for which the mortgage-bond was executed was really due from defendant No. 1.

So far as it is a good consideration the plaintiff should have relief. Refers to HARI CHAND v. JUGAL KISHORE.

Williams v. Bayley (1), Flower v. Sadler (2), Kessowji Tulsidas v Hurivon Mul i (3), Rai Charan Durkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (4). Nujebar Rahman v Muktashed Husain (5) is clearly distinguishable.

I cannot dispute the proposition that the consideration for stifling a non-compoundable criminal prosecution is void.

The learned Munsif has found that so far as defendant No. 1 was concerned there was good consideration.

Babu Bansorilal Sarkar, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, sued the two defendants on a mortgage deed admittedly executed by them. The first defendant was the plaintiff's gomasta for four years up to Ashin 1318 B. S. The second defendant is the first defendant's brother. The first defendant was alleged to have embezzled a sum of Rs. 400 belonging to the plaintiff and was criminally prosecuted under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code. The finding of both the lower Courts is that the bond in suit was executed on an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to abandon the prosecution of defendant No 1. On this finding it has been held that the bond sued on is void under section 23 of the Contract Act. So far as the second defendant is concerned this decision has not been attacked in second appeal. But it is contended that the plaintiff can recover the sum of Rs. 400 from the first defendant since the first Court found that the amount for which the bond was executed was really due from the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff certainly cannot recover that amount treating this suit as a suit on the original debt. The plaint is not so framed as to seek this relief as an alternative remedy and it would appear that, at the time the suit was instituted, a suit on the debt alone would be barred by limitation, nor can we accept the contention that the bond so far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned is a good bond for a lawful consideration. Our attention has been drawn to several decisions, but we do not think it necessary to refer to any other case than that of Nujebar Rahman v. Muktashed Husain (5). There the facts, so far as the first defendant in this case is concerned, are very similar. The consideration of the bond having been found to be an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to abandon the prosecution of defendant No. 1 in a non-compoundable criminal case the bond must be void, even if part of the consideration of the bond was good in law.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

An account purporting to relate to Mutsaddi Lal was prepared up to the 14th June 1908.

The transliteration of it appears in the printed record at pages 5 to 14. The transliteration of a chitha, or balance-sheet, also prepared on that date, is given at pages 14 to 17 of the same record. Musammat Tohfa died in December 1917, and Hari Chand, the brother of Mutsaddi Lal, deceased, brought a suit against Jugal Kishore praying that the partnership between Jugal Kishore and Mutsaddi Lal may be deemed as dissolved or be dissolved and the accounts adjusted. This claim is based on the allegation that the death of Mutsaddi Lal in 1908 did not put an end to the partnership which was continued by the widow as representative of her deceased husband, under the same name on the same terms as before. The defendant pleaded that the old partnership had terminated on the death of Mutsaddi Lal; that it had not been continued by Musammat Tohfa, who had been paid what was due to her husband, and that, therefore, there were no accounts to be rendered nor was any sum due to the deceased. It was further pleaded that Musammat Tohfa had executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the defendant and also that the suit was barred by time.

The following were the only two issues framed:—

1. Whether the partnership business of Jugal Kishore and Mutsaddi Lal was continued after the death of Mutsaddi Lal by his widow and defendant?

2. Whether after dissolution the share of the deceased partner in the assets of the partnership was paid to Musammat Tohfa, the widow?

The plaintiff produced some evidence on issue No. 1, the onus of which lay on him, but no attempt was made by defendant to produce any evidence with regard to issue No. 2, the burden of proving which had been placed on him. It was stated on his behalf, however, by his learned Vakil, that issue No. 2, did not arise at that stage and did not need being dealt with. The Trial Court, therefore, left issue No. 2 undecided and on issue No. 1 it came to a conclusion against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit, holding that the partnership had come to an end in 1908. The plaintiff has come up in appeal to this Court against the above decision through Mr. Shamair Chand, whom we have heard at considerable length. We have also heard Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf on the respondent.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge in deciding the case against the plaintiff-appellant has taken into consideration the deed of relinquishment, dated the 30th November 1907, (Exhibit D-1), and is of opinion that this document is against the creation or existence of partnership between the defendant and Musammat Tohfa. The defendant evidently relied upon this document for two purposes, firstly, that it admits that there was no partnership between the defendant and, the widow of Mutsaddi Lal, deceased, and, secondly, that whatever, money was due to Mutsaddi Lal had been paid to his widow. We refrain to say anything about this deed, so far as it refers to the last mentioned point, because the Court below has left the point undetermined, but so far as the first point is concerned, we think it cannot be treated as any reliable evidence as to the non-existence of a partnership between Jugal Kishore and Musammat Tohfa. No evidence beyond the bare statement of the defendant himself has been given in support of this document. It is admittedly executed by a parda-nashin lady, who was, at the time of executing it suffering from illness, of which she died a few weeks after the deed was registered. She was at the time in the house of the defendant at Delhi and does not seem to have had any opportunity of consulting any of her relatives or the relatives of her deceased husband. It need hardly be pointed out that a deed obtained from a parda-nashin lady under such circumstances is open to grave suspicions, and it lies heavily on the person relying on the deed to show that it was properly obtained and that the lady understood what she was about. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum (1) "a Court, when dealing with the disposition of her property by a parda woman, ought to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her, and that she knew what she was doing." Similar views were expressed in Behari Lal v Habiba Bibi (2) on this question. The remarks made by Mr. Justice Mahmood, in the Allahabad judgment, show that parda-nashin women should be placed on a footing somewhat similar to that of persons non compotes mentis. He quotes from Story's work on Equity Jurisprudence, where the principle is laid down that, "wherever, from the nature of the transaction, there is not evidence of entire good faith, or the contract or other act is not seen to be just in itself, or for the benefit of these persons, Courts of Equity will set it aside, or make it subservient to their just rights and interests." Following the rulings quoted above, we hold that, considering the circumstances under which Musammat Tohfa was made to execute the deed of relinquishment, Exhibit D 1, no reliance can be placed on the recital in that deed that no partnership ever existed between her and the defendant We might add that there are intrinsic indications in the deed of the anxiety of the defendant by means of that deed to get over the circumstances which show the continuance of the old partnership relations between himself and the family of the deceased partner. It is rightly argued by Mr. Shamair Chand that if such relations did not exist, there is hardly any reasonable explanation of the attempt made by the defendant to get a deed of relinquishment from the widow more than nine years after the death of her husband and shortly before her own death.

Coming now to the chitha, Exhibit D 2, and the accounts printed at page 5 of the printed record, we find that they have a more than ordinary significance in favour of the case set up by the plaintiff. The one purpose for which they were relied on in the Court below, on behalf of the plaintiff was, that it was shown by means of these accounts that the partnership was continued, at any rate, up to the 14th June 1903, when these accounts were prepared and from that the plaintiff ought to raise a presumption, under section 109 of the Evidence Act, that the partnership which continued at least for some weeks after the death of Mutsaddi Lal must have continued after that. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge considered this circumstance standing by itself as insufficient for the purpose of raising such a presumption. We think there is more in this circumstance than has been recognised by the Court below and an inference of the nature which the plaintiff wishes to be drawn from it can legitimately be drawn. But that is not all. The accounts, having been thus restarted, continued for years and Musammat Tohfa in all the time being credited and debited with certain items. It is noteworthy that there is an item of cash payment on the credit side at page 5 which bears date corresponding to the 12th January 1910. This is a comparatively small item, but there is no explanation forthcoming of its being there about two years after the death of Mutsaddi Lal, unless it means that the widow was continuing to make certain payments to the firm whenever she liked and to receive payments. It is remarkable that there are numerous entries as to articles of jewellery received by her from the shop from time to time and the expenses of gold and silver used in making those articles, as well as the cost of getting them made, are debited to her account. Now, it is highly improbable that a widow would be taking so many articles of jewellery from time to time for her own use, while it is not unlikely that as the business of the firm was that of a sarraf and as her deceased husband was dealing in buying and selling articles of jewellery, she may have been helping the firm by doing some business of that kind herself. It is also in evidence that she used to live at Delhi, off and on, with the defendant. Admittedly, she is not related to the defendant in any way and, therefore, the likelihood is that her frequent visits to Delhi and to the house of the defendant, were because she wanted to take some interest in the partnership business. Added to this is the fact that the plaintiff Hari Chand was taken by the firm as a Munim soon after the death of his brother and continued to work in the shop in that capacity for about seven years. Hari Chand explains that this provision was made in order to enable him to watch the interests of his deceased brother, whose partnership was continuing through his widow, and we think that this is a statement which is believable and is fully borne out by all the circumstances of the case. The plaintiff produced four witnesses in support of his allegations. Their evidence has not been relied upon by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, who dismissed it in one word by calling it worthless.

It is urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the Court below erred in brushing aside the whole of the oral evidence in such a summary way. He draws attention particularly to the statement of Niadar Mal (P. W. No. 1). He admits that Umrao Singh (P. W. No. 3) does not say anything to the point and that the statement of Bulaki Das (P. W. No. 2) may be eliminated from consideration, as he had some enmity with the defendant. He adds, however, that there is nothing against Niadar Mal's evidence which should be believed. This witness states that when Mutsaddi Lal died his widow succeeded him in the partnership business with the defendant and that Ram Dyal sent the plaintiff to work at the shop. He also adds that the widow lived with Jugal Kishore and used also to visit Shahdara. Now, this witness is a man who is in the same line of business as Jugal Kishore, and states that he had had dealings with the firm and is, therefore, in a position to know something about that firm. There is nothing to impeach his credit and we see no reason for disbelieving him. There is thus the statement of Hari Chand on oath that the widow remained a partner and he continued to work for her and that the sum of Rs. 3,311-11-0 due from the shop to Mutsaddi Lal remained in the shop as a share of the widow. Along with the statement of Niadar Mal, and the circumstances above referred to, the evidence of Hari Chand is sufficient to prove that the partnership was continued either by virtue of a previous understanding that it should not be terminated by the death of one of the partners, or by reason of mutual agreement between the parties, on Mutsaddi Lal's death. In this connection Mr. Shamair Chand refers us to a decision of the Calcutta High Court published as Raghumull v Luchmondas (3), where it has been held, inter alia, that section 253, clause (10), of the Indian Contract Act which provides for the dissolution of a partnership on the death of a partner, must be read as qualified by the introductory words "in the absence of any contract to the contrary." He also refers to certain remarks made in Maharaj Kishen v. Hari Gobind (4), explaining the principle underlying section 253 (10) of the Indian Contract Act and holding that where the parties to a contract agree expressly or by necessary implication to continue the partnership, as if no dissolution had taken place upon the death of one of them the suit would not be barred under Art. 106 of the Limitation Act. He quotes another ruling of the Calcutta High Court, published as Gokul Krishna Das v. Shashi Mukhi Dasi (5), where a partnership was commenced in 1853 between the husband of the plaintiff and the defendants and where since 1887, when the husband died, the business had been conducted on the assumption that the plaintiff was a partner. It was held that the original partnership must be presumed to have been continued by common consent, and the founders of the partnership must have agreed that it was not to be dissolved by the death of any of the parties. This case is very much similar to the one before us, though some of the features of the Calcutta case are not to be found in it.

Mr. Moti Sagar in replying to the above arguments says that the chitha must be taken to indicate nothing more than a settlement of the previous account and that subsequent accounts between Jugal Kishore and the widow cannot necessarily be regarded as an indication of the continuance of a partnership and must be taken to be only an open and current account kept by Jugal Kishore with the widow of his late partner, out of regard for the latter. He also lays stress on the fact that no balance sheets have been prepared after 1908, in spite of the fact that Hari Chand himself was keeping the accounts for a long time, nor have any profits been credited to Musammat Tohfa. The first point raised by him as to the nature of these accounts has already been dealt with. With regard to the second point it is enough to say that as the widow was not capable of going into the accounts herself and as payments of money were being made to her from time to time no inference against her can be drawn from balances not having been struck at various intervals. Hari Chand too, though quietly watching her interests, could not insist on the striking of any balances, because he was getting a pay from Jugal Kishore as his Munim and thus had a position subordinate to him. As far as the third point relating to the profits is concerned, it is shown by the statement of Hari Chand that profits were being credited in the name of the firm, and as even in the lifetime of Mutsaddi Lal the profits had sometimes been credited to him and sometimes to the firm, there was nothing very extraordinary in the procedure adopted since 1908. The fact remains that the firm has continued under the old name all this time and that Jugal Kishore was anxious that it should do so. The evidence produced by the plaintiff, oral, documentary and circumstantial, is much more convincing than what Mr. Moti Sagar has said about certain circumstantial inferences to be drawn from the accounts. We have no hesitation in finding, therefore, that the partnership in this case continued till the death of Mutsaddi Lal's widow. The plaintiff is entitled to have the accounts of the partnership gone into and adjusted.

We, therefore, accept this appeal and direct the Court below to give effect to the above finding by passing a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff that he is entitled, as a representative of Mutsaddi Lal, to a rendition of the partnership accounts. After passing that preliminary decree the Court will go into the accounts and come to a conclusion as to what is due altogether by Jugal Kishore on the basis that the partnership continued till 1917. It will also have to find what sum, if any, has been paid by Jugal Kishore to the widow of Mutsaddi Lal between 1908 and 1917. The decree of the Court below is set aside and this case is remanded under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court below for a decision according to law.

RAM RATAN CHOWDHURY—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

UPENDRA CHANDRA DAS AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation (Act IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Incompetent appeal by judgment-debtor—Limitation, running of, whether suspended.

The running of limitation against a decree-holder is not suspended by reason of an incompetent appeal by the judgment-debtor, such as an appeal against an order dismissing his application for review against the decree.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Chittagong, dated the 6th of July 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.—The application for execution is clearly barred by limitation. See Art. 182, clause (3) of the Limitation Act. No appeal lay against the dismissal of the review application and the Court below is clearly wrong in deducting the period occupied by the incompetent appeal in calculating the period of limitation.

Babu Chander Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.—Rightly or wrongly an appeal was filed against the dismissal of the review application. Consequently, Art. 182, clause (2) of the Limitation Act applied and the application for execution was in time.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the judgment debtor against an order in an execution-case. It is argued before us on behalf of the appellant that the execution is barred. The original decree was obtained on the 1st June 1914 and the application for execution was made on the 17th December 1919. But it appears that against the original decree an application for review was filed on the 24th June 1914 and was not dismissed until 24th June 1915. Against the order of dismissal an appeal was preferred to this Court, which was dismissed on the 28th May 1917. The Court said that no appeal lay against such an order. Now, the learned Judge in the Court below has held that limitation did not begin to run until 28th May 1917. He is clearly in error with regard to this. Assuming that limitation did not commence to run until after the 24th June 1915, clearly limitation began to run after that date, as the appeal against the dismissal of the review application was incompetent.

In the result, the appeal succeeds and we hold that the execution is barred by reason of limitation.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2—Muhammadan Law—Guardian for marriage—Majority.

The age of majority of a Muhammadan guardian, so far as his capacity for giving a person in marriage is concerned, is to be determined by the Muhammadan Law, and such age under that law is fifteen years. [p. 727, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 3rd November 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 22nd August 1921.

Mr. Badr-ud Din Qureshi, for the Appellant.

Khan Amir-ud-Din, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that she was not the lawful wife of the defendant. She denied that any marriage had taken place between her and the plaintiff, and said that even if it did it was invalid because she was a minor at the time of the marriage, which had not been contracted by her lawful guardian. The defendant pleaded that he had married the plaintiff on the 16th March 1915, and that the plaintiff had been given in marriage by her brother, Bura, who was her lawful guardian, and that he, the defendant, had cohabited with the plaintiff. The first Court dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiff had been lawfully married to the defendant that she had cohabited with him for three years, and that she had, therefore, lost her right to repudiate the marriage.

The District Judge on appeal found that it was not proved that Bura was of age when he gave his sister in marriage to the plaintiff, the evidence on the point being unreliable and one of the defendants witnesses having stated that Bura was only 15 years' old at the time of the marriage. The learned District Judge, therefore, held that the marriage was invalid and gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant has come to this Court in second appeal.

The learned District Judge in finding that Bura was not proved to have been of age at the time of the marriage evidently meant that he was not proved to have attained the age of 18 at that time, being under the impression that the age of majority for a Muhammadan giving a minor in marriage was 18 under the Indian Majority Act IX of 1875. But section 2 of that Act provides that nothing in the Act shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage, so that the age of majority of Bura, so far as his capacity for giving the plaintiff in marriage is concerned, is to be determined by the Muhammadan Law, and the age of majority under that law would be 15. Whether or not Bura had attained the age of 18 at the time of the marriage, there seems no doubt on the evidence that he was over the age of 15 and was, therefore, competent to give his sister in marriage.

It is argued for the respondent that she was sui juris at the time of the marriage and that, therefore, her consent was necessary and there should have been no guardian acting for her, but this argument is opposed to the plaintiff's own case, which was that if the marriage took place at all she was a minor at the time and the marriage was not effected through her lawful guardian. I hold, therefore, that the marriage was valid.

The question whether the plaintiff can exercise her option of puberty or has lost her right has not been determined by the lower Appellate Court and I, therefore, remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, for a finding on this point.

Appeal from the judgment of the District Judge, Akola, dated the 5th April 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1921.

JALAL DIN v. MATHURAM.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellants.
Mr. M. Y. Shareef, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A suit instituted for possession of field Survey No. 20 of Mouza Mudhapur was instituted on the 9th April 1912 and dismissed on the 7th May the following year. On appeal the dismissal was set aside, and after re-trial an ex parte decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs was passed on the 25th March 1916.

The defendant applied to get the ex parte decree set aside and after two Courts had in turn declined to entertain the application the Appellate Court on the 4th May 1917 directed one of them to do so. The defendant failed to appear in that Court and the application for setting aside the ex parte decree was dismissed on the 20th July 1917.

The decree-holders attempted on the 20th June 1920 to execute their decree of the 25th March 1916, and the First Court entertained the application. On appeal the lower Appellate Court dismissed the application for execution as being made more than three years from the date of decree, holding that the time taken by the defendant in prosecuting his application for setting aside the ex parte decree could not be deducted nor could limitation be said to commence from the date the application of the defendant was dismissed in 1917. The decree holders appeal. The application falls under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, sub-section 1 which reads: "Three years from the date of the decree." There is no force in the respondent's contention that clause (2) of the Article applies for clause (2) cannot apply unless there has been an appeal, and when the Court refuses to set aside an ex parte decree and an appeal against such order is dismissed, time for executing the original decree is not enlarged under clause (2). The words "where there has been an appeal" of clause (2) of the Article contemplate and mean an appeal from the decree or order sought to be executed and do not include an appeal from an order dismissing an application to set aside an ex parte decree. The appeal made by the defendant in the present case was an appeal not from the decree but from the orders of the two Courts declining to entertain his application to set the decree aside.

The efforts of the defendant to set aside the plaintiffs' decree cannot have the effect of extending the period of limitation which the law allows the plaintiffs Sheo Prasad v. Anrudh Singh (1), Jivaji v. Ramchandra (2) and Baikanta Nath Mittra v. Aughore Nath Bose (3). The contrary view taken in Lutful Huq v. Sumbhudin Patwari (4) can no longer be accepted as good law.

The result is that this second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A notification made under section 7 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1905, excluding an area from the scope of the Act, is not automatically cancelled by section 6 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 191 , and continues in force by virtue of section 24 of the Punjab General Clauses Act until such time as Government sees fit to cancel it.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 30th January 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Chunian, District Lahore, dated the 13th June 1918.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.
Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point in this case is whether a notification made under section 7 of the Pre-emption Act of 1905, excluding an area from the scope of the Act, is still in force or was automatically cancelled by section 6 of the Pre-emption Act of 1913. The question is answered by section 22 of the Punjab General Clauses Act which lays down that any order, scheme, rule, form or bye-law issued under the repealed Act and not inconsistent with the new continues in force until it is superseded by any fresh order, scheme, etc.

Counsel contends that this section does not cover notifications because the word is not used. A notification is only the method adopted for communicating orders, rules, etc. to the general public. No inconsistency has been shown with the provisions of the new Act and, therefore, it is clear that the order stands until such time as Government sees fit to cancel it. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A security-bond given by a claimant in a claim case agreeing to be liable for a certain sum of money in case he failed to produce the property attached, should bear a Court-fee stamp of eight annas under Art. 6, Sch. II, of the Court Fees Act.

Reference under Stamp Act, 1899, In re, 20 Ind. Cas. 775; 37 M. 17; 24 M. L. J. 637, followed.

Reference under O. XLVI, r. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, made by the Munsif, Meherpur, forwarded to this Court by the District Judge of Nadia, with his letter No. 2259 XV-23. dated the 8th September 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakarbarty, Senior Government Pleader, for the Government.—The matter in issue is this. In a claim case the claimant filed a security-bond which was engrossed on a non-judicial stamp paper of 2-annas. The question referred to is whether that stamp is sufficient or Art. 6, Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act would govern the case. I submit Art. 6 Schedule II of the Court Fees Act would apply inasmuch as the security bond was executed in pursuance of an order of the Court. Refers to Reference under Stamp Act, 1899, In re (1).

No one appeared in opposition to the Reference.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under O. XLVI, r. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure made by the Munsif of Meherpur and forwarded by the District Judge of Nadia.

In a certain claim case the claimant filed a security-bond executed by one Yad Ali Ahmed who agreed to be liable for Rs. 10 in case he failed to produce certain attached goats. The question referred is, whether this bond had been rightly engrossed on a non-judicial stamp paper of 2 annas, or whether it is governed by Art. 6, Schedule II of the Court Fees Act in which case it would be liable to be stamped with Court-fee stamp of 8-annas. Art. 15 of the First Schedule to the Indian Stamp Act gives the stamp duty payable on bonds not being otherwise provided for by the Court Fees Act. Art. 6 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act applies to instrument of obligation given in pursuance of an order made by a Court under any section of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The same point arose in a reference made under section 60 of the Indian Stamp Act to the Madras High Court reported as Reference under Stamp Act, 1899, In re (1) and it was there held that a bond of this kind may be said to be given in pursuance of an order made by a Court under a section of the Civil Procedure Code, and it was held that the proper stamp was 8 annas stamp under the Court Fees Act. We are in agreement with this conclusion and we accordingly answer the question referred by saying that the deed in question is governed by Art. 6 Schedule II of the Court Fees Act and that the proper stamp is 8-annas Court-fee stamp.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 44, 144—Hindu Law—Alienation by co-parcener of minor co-parcener's share—Suit by minor to recover possession—Limitation.

A suit by a co-parcener in a Hindu joint family to recover possession of his share of the property alienated during the plaintiff's minority by another co-parcener who purported to act as, but was not in fact, the guardian of the plaintiff is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 44 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

JUDGMENT.—From the pedigree-table given at page 8 of the paper-book it would appear that one Nikka had five sons, one of whom being Gandhi, who had two sons, namely Ganga Ram, defendant No. 1 in this case, and Sunder, the plaintiff. Another son of Nikka named Dalipa left a son Udho. Ganga Ram, defendant No. 1, mortgaged 209 kanals 4½ marlas of land for Rs. 590 to Shyama and Giana on the 19th March 1907. He took Rs. 330 as an additional charge on the land and effected another mortgage on the 11th December 1907. Later on, on the 3rd September 1909 he sold 757 kanals. 8½ marlas of land for Rs. 937-8-9 to Ram Ditta and Munshi, defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Udho, the cousin of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, is said to have died some four years before the suit. Sunder, the plaintiff, preferred this claim for possession on the ground that his share in the land was one-fourth and that his brother Ganga Ram had no authority to mortgage and then sell his share in the land as the sale was not for his benefit. Both in the mortgage-deeds and the sale-deeds above referred to Ganga Ram described himself as the de facto guardian of the plaintiff. His Pleader, Lala Gurdas Ram, however, made a statement in Court on the 4th May 1918 denying the guardianship of Ganga Ram. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5, the mortgagees, pleaded that the mortgage in their favour was for consideration and necessity and the plaintiff was bound by it for the period of 12 years fixed in the mortgage-deeds. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pleaded that the suit was barred by time as the plaintiff was of the age of 24 years at the date of the suit and that the sale was for the benefit of the plaintiff minor. A plea of misjoinder was also put forward on the ground that a joint suit against the mortgagees and the vendees could not be brought. The Trial Court held that the suit as far as it related to a previous mortgage of 1893, Exhibt D.3, was barred by time but that it was within limitation as regards the rest of the alienations. It held the plaintiff to be bound by the mortgage of 1893 but not by the other alienations. It accordingly granted a decree, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that he was not bound either by the sale-deed or the mortgage. On appeal by the mortgagees and the vendees the learned District Judge held that, inasmuch as the suit was by a ward, who had attained majority to set aside a transfer of property by his guardians, it was barred by three years limitation under Art. 44 of the Indian Limitation Act. Hence this second appeal.

In order to apply the above Article it was necessary for the learned District Judge to have determined the question whether Ganga Ram was the guardian of the plaintiff. In the plaint it was clearly stated that Ganga Ram had no authority to transfer the share of the plaintiff and in the statement of the 4th May 1918 the plaintiffs' Pleader had clearly denied the fact of Ganga Ram's guardianship. The mere fact that Ganga Ram had described himself as the de facto guardian of his minor brother could not clothe him with the authority of a guardian and make Art. 44 applicable to the plaintiff's claim. The following observation made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (1) places the correctness of this proposition beyond any possible doubt :—

"It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the elder brothers were de facto guardians of the respondent, and, as such, were entitled to sell his property, provided that the sale was in order to pay his debts and was, therefore, necessary in his interest. It is difficult to see how the situation of an unauthorized guardian is bettered by describing him as a 'de facto' guardian. He may, by his de facto guardianship, assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it."

The plaintiff and Ganga Ram occupied the position of co parceners in a Hindu family, of which Ganga Ram was probably the manager, being the elder brother. This circumstance also could not clothe him with the character of a de jure or de facto guardian. The fact of his being the 'de facto' guardian of the plaintiff could have been proved by evidence but it was admitted by Dewan Mehr Chand, the learned Vakil for the respondents, that no attempt had been made by his clients to prove this fact by evidence.

In the case of Kalyan Singh v. Pitambar Singh (2) it was held that "a suit to set aside a sale executed by one member of a joint Hindu family, and for possession of the property was governed by Art. 144 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 44 or 91."

In the case of Asaram v. Ratnsingh (3) it was held by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur that "a suit by a minor co-parcener on attaining majority to set aside an alienation by a manager of joint family property is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 44 or 91."

In the present case it is, however, not made clear whether Ganga Ram was the manager of a joint Hindu family, but this fact cannot affect the decision of the question as the fact remains that it has not been shown that Ganga Ram was the guardian of the minor plaintiff. The principle enunciated in the two cases above-mentioned is fully applicable to the present case. Authorities bearing on this question may be multiplied, but it will serve no useful purpose to quote and discuss any more authorities, because on the facts of this particular case we are clearly of opinion that Art. 44 cannot apply. We must, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this preliminary point and remand the case to it under O. XII, r. 23, Civil Procedure, to be decided on the merits according to law. Costs will abide the result. Court fee paid on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded.

Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. D. Kale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Courts have taken quite a wrong view as to the burden of proof both on the subject of payment of consideration by the plaintiff's husband to Baliram and on the question as to whether Lachhmi Narayan, the 4th defendant, was a bona fide purchaser entitled to the benefits of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. Undoubtedly, the burden of proving want of consideration lay upon Lachhmi Narayan who could not be in a better position than his vendor Khemkaran, and Khemkaran could not be in a better position than his vendor Baliram. Baliram in his sale-deed admits the receipt of consideration, the burden of proof that consideration was not paid lay, therefore, on Lachhmi Narayan. The mere fact that the plaintiff had not taken possession under the sale-deed for a period of over 11 years would hardly be sufficient to prove that consideration was not paid.

As regards the provisions of section 41, Transfer of Property Act, it undoubtedly lies on Lachhmi Narayan to plead and prove that he took reasonable care to ascertain that his transferee Khemkaran had power to make a transfer and that he had taken the sale-deed from Khemkaran in good faith and for consideration. The observations of the District Judge on this point are quite erroneous. There are numerous rulings, which are unnecessary to quote, to show that it lies on the person pleading that he is a bona fide transferee for value to make out his case. But on the facts I have seldom seen a stronger case in favour of the person raising this plea, namely, Lachhmi Narayan. Admittedly the plaintiff and her husband have never been in possession. Admittedly after the sale to the plaintiff the vendor remained in possession. When the vendor sold to Khemkaran, Khemkaran was put in possession and was in possession for some years and was in possession when he sold to Lachhmi Narayan. He also held a registered sale-deed from the original owner of the property, that is to say, the plaintiff's own vendor. Lachhmi Narayan found his vendor holding a title deed and in actual possession and he was not put to any further inquiry. It is proved he paid consideration. It is urged for the appellant that if Lachhmi Narayan had searched the records of the Registration Department he would have found that there was a prior registered deed in favour of the plaintiff who was not in possession. It has been held by this Court in Sukhnandan v. Sadaram (1) that registration does not operate as constructive notice and that the purchaser from an ostensible owner whose title-deeds are themselves complete is not bound to search the registration office to see if the original owner may not have given a title to somebody else.

Though the lower Courts have taken a wrong view of the burden of proof, they have decided rightly on the facts found. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises the plaintiff's as representatives of the mortgagors, sued to redeem certain land from the defendants, the representatives of the original mortgagees. The land was jointly mortgaged by Qaim, Sheru and Jalal who were equal co sharers in it. On the 17th May 1901, Hashim son of Qaim having previously succeeded to his father's share, two mutations took place. By one of these Sheru purported to redeem the entire mortgage on payment of Rs. 185, and by the other he purported to sell the whole land to the same mortgagees for a consideration of Rs. 254. The lower Appellate Court has held that there was really only one transaction which was a sale by Sheru of the equity of redemption of the land to the mortgagees. It has dismissed the plaintiff's suit for redemption so far as the shares of Jalal and Sheru are concerned and there is no appeal against this part of the order. It has decreed the claim for the redemption of Hashim's share only and from this order the defendants have filed a second appeal, and it is contended on their behalf by Mr. Kureshi that on the 17th May 1901 there was a redemption of the original mortgage and that after the redemption there was a sale by Sheru and that after the sale the vendees' possession was adverse to Hashim, and that, therefore, the present suit is barred by time.

In my opinion the learned District Judge has rightly held that in 1901 there was only one transaction, namely, the sale of the equity of redemption. In accordance with the rules of the Revenue Department there had to be two mutations, one showing the redemption of the mortgage and the other the sale of the land. The sale by Sheru of Hashim's share to the mortgagees was illegal. Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthu Kumarasawmy Padayachi (1) and the other authorities cited by the learned District Judge support the proposition that the mortgagees cannot rely on the 12 years' rule of limitation in support of a plea of adverse possession unless they can prove a subsequent valid sale. Indar v. Asa Singh (2) is also in point.

In my opinion, the decision of the learned District Judge is clearly correct, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 134—Transfer of title by mortgagee—Mortgaged property under ownership of Hindu widow—Reversioner, suit by, to recover possession—Limitation—Reversioner's disability, nature of—Acquiescence by female owner, effect of—Art. 141, application of.

NARAYANASAMI NAICKER v. PERIASAMY ODAYAR.

Where the mortgagee of an estate in the ownership of a Hindu widow transfers absolute title to the same, the reversioner must bring a suit for recovery of possession under Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, as Art. 141 has no application to such a case. [p. 740, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—A reversioner's disability to sue for possession while a Hindu female is the owner in possession of the estate is not on the same footing as disability of a minor, an idiot, or an insane person in whose favour an extra period of limitation has been allowed for instituting their suits, whatever may be the Article applicable to a suit of the same description by a person not so disabled [p. 736, col. 2.]

A female owner's acquiescence in the transfer of an estate made by the mortgagee will not amount to an act of alienation which a reversioner on succeeding to the estate can sue to set aside. [p. 737, col. 1.]

The expression "hereby otherwise specially provided for" in Art. 141 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, indicates that that Article is the residuary Article for suits for the possession of immoveable property, but before a plaintiff can have resort to this Article, he must first show that Art. 134 is inapplicable. [p. 736, col. 2.]

Kannusami Thanjiroyan v. Muthusami Pillai, 38 Ind. Cas. 194; (1917) M. W. N. 5; 5 L. W. 250, referred to.

Per Ramesam J.—Art. 141 covers only those cases in which the cause of action is simply the death of the female and the only obstacle to the reversioner seeking to obtain possession is either an act of the female or her inaction—in either case resulting in the loss of possession to a stranger and the need of a suit on behalf of the reversioner. But this Article applies only when the suit is of a kind not described in Arts. 134, 135, 138, 140, 142 and 143. [p. 739, col. 2.]

Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai, 23 B. 725; 1 Bom. L. R. 607; 3 C. W. N. 621; 26 I. A. 71; 7 Sar. P C. J. 543; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 485 (P. J. 168 referred to.

The object of Art. 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act is to cut down the period available to the mortgagor under Art. 148 and to compel him to watch the conduct of the mortgagee and to intervene on a transfer [p. 740, col 1.]

Muthu v. Kambalinga, 12 M. 316; 13 Ind. Jur. 255; 4 Ind Dec. (N. S.) 570, Radhanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co., 14 M. I. A. 1 at p. 15; 15 W R. P. C. 24; 6 B. L. R. 530; 2 Suth. P. C. Though it is true that a reversioner cannot sue to redeem during the lifetime of a widow, yet if the intervening female's conduct is such as to raise an apprehension that the property will never be redeemed or altogether lost, a reversioner can maintain an action for the preservation of the property. Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam in Appeal Suit No. 195 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman, in Original Suit No. 35 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant.—Plaintiff is the appellant. He is the reversioner of the last male owner suing for possession. The whole property belonged to one Rangasamy Naick who died in 1867. He was possessed of 4/5ths suit land and a whole house. He had two wives. By the first wife, he had a daughter Ammalu Ammal who died in 1868. Plaintiff is her son. By his 2nd wife he had two daughters. One of them died in 1895 and another named Kaveri Ammal died in 1906. The property is found in the possession of one Vasudeva Naick, a cousin of Kaveri Ammal.

In 1866, Rangasamy Naick created a mortgage of 1/5th land and 1/5th house There was sale made by Vasudeva Naick in 1900. Art. 134 of the Limitation Act has no application: if it is applicable, my suit would be barred. I come specifically under Art. 141. (Suit by reversioner). There is no cause of action for me from 1900. My cause of action accrued only from 1906. Under the old Act XV of 1859, there are certain decisions against me: but in that Act, there is no Article corresponding to Art. 141 of the present Act under which my suit comes specifically. So the decisions under the old Act can have no application to my present suit. I must, therefore, be allowed to recover possession of 4/5ths land and 4/5ths house subject to the encumbrance created by Rangasamy Naick. Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), Venkataramayya v. Venkatalakshmamma (2), Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (3) were then quoted. With regard to another 1/5 house, which is the subject of neither mortgage nor sale, I must be allowed to recover possession free from any encumbrance Ram Chandar v. Kallu (4). The plaintiffs have no present interest in the property. Narayana Kutti Goundan v. Pechiammal 5). A reversioner cannot sue for redemption. Mitra on Law of Limitation, Vol. II, page 149.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastry, for the Respondent, holds that possession under an informal document would be enough to perfect the title. So this disposes of 3/5ths house and 3/5ths land. With regard to /5th house, the argument is put forward here for the first time. Before Art. 141 was enacted, the law was that the widow represents the estate fully for all purposes. That law had not come to an end by Art. 141 : where the cause of action arises personally to the widow, Art. 141 applies. Art. 134 appears for the first time in the Act of 1877. The rule of 60 years for redemption is peculiar to India and in England, the period is only 20 years. Since the period is very long in India, the Legislature, in order to protect bona fide purchasers for value, thought it necessary to cut down the period into 12 years in 1871. Then on account of certain criticism made, the term 'bona fide' was taken away in the Act of 1877. Even the suit under Art. 134, is in essence a suit for redemption. Art. 141 has no application to cases, where Art. 134 applies. Muthu v. Kambalinga (6) is overruled in Ahamed Kutti v. Raman Nambudri (7). Art 134 does not apply to Court sales. Radhanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co. (8), Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (9), Bava Khan v. Bhiku Sahu (10), Nobin Chunder v. Issur Chunder [Guru Purshad Doss] (11), Juggernath Sahoo v. Syed Shah Mahomed Hossein (12). JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—In the course of the full and able arguments on either side to which we have listened, no reported case has been cited in which a question arose of a choice between the application of Art. 134 or 141 of the Limitation Act. Kunnusami Thanikoyan v. Muthusami Pillai (14) was an instance of a conflict between Art. 134 and Art. 144. I then observed that it was clear that the plaintiff could not have resort to Art. 144 unless he first showed that Art. 134 was inapplicable, the reason being that Art. 144 is the residuary Article for suits for the possession of immoveable property, as is indicated by the words "hereby otherwise specially provided for."

There is no indication that Art. 134 should not be applied to suits for possession of immoveable property, which but for that Article might have been governed by the period of limitation prescribed in Art. 141. In Kulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (3) the learned Chief Justice after discussing the law of limitation applicable to similar actions under the English Act pointed out that Art. 34 of the Limitation Act was in its origin wholly self-contained and was not appended as a proviso to any other section. A reversioner's disability to sue for possession while a Hindu female is the owner in possession of the estate has not been treated by the Legislature on the same footing as the disability of a minor, an idiot, or an insane person, in whose favour by section 6 of the Act an extra period has been allowed for instituting their suits, whatever may be the Article applicable to a suit of the same description by a person not so disabled.

NARAYANASAMI v. PERIASAMY.

The transfer by the mortgagee, Vasudeva Naick. f the absolute title to the defendant was in 1900. A perusal of Exhibit I I leaves no doubt in my mind that it was an absolute sale for good consideration. Kaveri Ammal, the last female owner died in 1903. She had, 3 years before her death, to sue under Art. 134 to recover the property, and the plaintiff had 6 years after her death till 1912, but he neglected to move in the matter till 1914.

Kaveri Ammal's acquiescence during those first six years will not amount to an act of alienation which the reversioner on succeeding to the estates can sue to set aside Both were equally negligent in preserving the interests of the mortgagor which they in turn represented.

The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in holding that the present suit in respect of 1/5th share of lands and house mortgaged by the last male owner in 1866 and afterwards transferred by the mortgagee in 1900 was time-barred under Art. 134. The plaintiff's claim for a 3/5th share of lands and house alleged to have been sold in 1865 is barred by adverse possession that commenced during the lifetime of the last male owner, and he failed to prove that there was any other 1/5th share of the house still remaining unalienated. The result is that the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

RAMESAM, J.—The subject matter of the suit is a house and 4/5th share of certain lands. It is common ground that one Rangaswami Naicker was the original owner of 4/5ths share of the house and 4/5ths share of the lands. Whether he was also the owner of the remaining 1/5th share of the house will be dealt with later on. Rangaswami died in 1867 leaving three daughters, and the youngest of these who survived the others died in 1906. The 1st plaintiff, who is a daughter's son of Rangaswami being the sole reversioner, brought this suit in 1914, that is within 12 years after the death of the last daughter, to recover possession of the properties. The defense is: (1) As to 1/5th share in the house and a like share in the lands, they were mortgaged by Rangaswami in 1865 with possession to one Vasudeva who sold the property in 1900 to the defendant and hence the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 134 of the Limitation Act (2) As to 3/5ths share in the house and a like share in the land. They were sold with Rangaswami's consent in 1865 by Appavu, a mortgagee of Rangaswami, for discharging the mortgage-debt of Vasudeva, who sold them to the defendant in 1900.

It is suggested for the appellant that there is a 1/5th share of the house belonging to Rangaswami and left untouched by these transactions, and the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for this share as his suit is obviously not barred having regard to Art. 141 of the Limitation Act. It does not appear that the plaintiff made this claim in the Courts below. Having regard to the fact that the ownership in the village depended on the pangu right or share in a mirasi village and the share in the house generally corresponded with the share in the lands, and to the fact that Rangaswami purchased 1/5th share in the house and a like share in the land from his brother Ramaswami and had 3/5th share in both, in his own right, it does not appear that Rengaswamy had ever possessed the remaining 1/5th share in the house by purchase or otherwise. There is no evidence on record to support the right of Rangaswami to more than a 4/5th share of the house. On this ground, the last contention of the appellant must be negatived.

As to the lands said to be sold in 1865, it appears that the sale deed of 1865 was unregistered and the appellant also contends that the secondary evidence of the sale deed has been wrongly admitted. But there is other evidence in the case, including plaintiff's admissions from which it can be reasonably inferred that Vasudeva got into possession in 1865 under an attempted sale whether the sale was valid or not, and adverse possession began during the lifetime of Rangaswami, as found by the Subordinate Judge. If so, the appellant's case fails as to the 3/5ths share also.

The only portion that remains to be considered is the 1/5th share mortgaged in 1866 and this turns on a pure question of law, viz., whether Art. 141 or Art. 134 applies to the case. At the outset, I may point out that the transfer of 1900 was accompanied by possession—thus avoiding the difficult question discussed in Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (3). As it is clear that the language of Art. 134 applies literally, the argument for the appellant may be stated at its best in the form that where Art. 141 is applicable as well as another Article, the former prevails and as an illustration, the case in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parbatibai (1) was relied on, where it was held that Art. 144 did not apply and Art. 144 applied. The obvious reply to the argument so far as it relates to Art. 144 is that that case was not a case to which both Articles apply, as Art. 144 by its language can never be applied if there is another Article which is applicable. But the main argument has still to be considered as to other Articles. The Articles dealing with suits for recovery of immoveable property including, for this purpose, the suit described in Art. 148 also are Arts. 134 to 144 and Art. 148. Omitting Art. 144 from consideration, on the ground that it cannot apply where any other Article applies, those that remain are Arts. 134 to 143 and 148. As to them, it is contended for the appellant that wherever a suit falls under Art. 141 and also under any one of the other Articles, the former ought to prevail as, since the enactment of Limitation Act of 1871, the intention of the Legislature was to do away with the rule that prevailed under the Limitation Act of 1859, viz., that adverse possession against the widow is also adverse possession against the reversioner, [see Nobin Chunder v. Issur Chunder (Guru Pursad Doss) (11)], and to give the reversioner the benefit of a longer period of limitation. Now, the suits of Hindu reversioners which may fall under any of the Arts. 134 to 140, 142, 143 and 148 (and to which Art. 141 may seem also to apply) may be divided into three classes :—

(1) Suits where the cause of action has accrued during the lifetime of the last male owner or his predecessor-in-title and the period of limitation under the specific Article has expired during the lifetime of one of the intermediate female owners. Will Art. 141 help the reversioner in such a case and extend the period under the specific Article to twelve years beyond the death of the female and enable him to recover the property? The appellant's Counsel concedes that Art. 141 does not apply to such cases and the reason he gives is that the reversioner is not entitled, within the meaning of Art. 141, to recover possession, for the right would be already barred in these cases.

(2) Suits where the cause of action has accrued during the lifetime of the last owner or his predecessor in title, but the period of limitation under the specific Article has not expired during the lifetime of the intermediate female owners. In such a case, the period of limitation has only partly run leaving a balance of the period within which the suit may be brought by the reversioner successfully. In such a case, will the reversioner's suit be governed by Art. 141 so as to give him a period of 12 years from the death of the female which will be longer than the balance left under the other Articles, except in the case of a suit under Art. 143 when the result of applying Art. 141 may be even to cut down the period given by Art. 148? The appellant's Counsel concedes that Art. 141 does not govern such a case. But his former reason that the reversioner is not entitled on the death of the female is not available to him here, for, in this case, the reversioner is entitled to possession on the death of the female, whatever Article is applied. Why should Art. 141 be construed so as to exclude this class of cases if the appellant's contention that Article 141 should be applied to all cases to which it apparently applies is correct?

(3) Where the cause of action accrued, not during the lifetime of the last male owner or his predecessor-in title, but, after his death and during or at the end of the life of the intervening female, cases falling under this clause cannot be governed by Arts. 136 and 137, but the other Arts. (134, 135, 138 to 140, 142 and 143 and 148) may be applicable to them. As to these the appellant's Counsel contends that notwithstanding the applicability of any one of these specific Articles, Art, 141 applies also to the suit and prevails over the other Article if it is for the benefit of the reversioner. This last qualification has to be added, for, in a suit of the kind described in Art. 148, the application of Art 141 may have the effect of cutting down the period of 60 years. This argument of the appellant's Counsel depends on the construction of the words "entitled to possession" as meaning "entitled to recover possession or any cause of action," thus giving a wide scope to the suits described under Art. 141 and, further,—apart from the anomaly of giving no explanation why it should not govern the second class of cases mentioned by me—it involves the following two propositions:

(1) The Articles of the Limitation Act may be overlapping. Two Articles may be both applicable to the same class of suits.

(2) That the Court can pick and choose from the Articles that which ought to be applied to the case—sometimes one and sometimes the other, whichever gives the longer period of limitation with reference to the facts of each case. There is no warrant for these propositions and I do not understand the cases in Ishur Chunder v. Jibun Kumari (15) and Natesan Chetti v. Soundararaju Ayyangar (16) as supporting the first proposition. There is always one Article applicable to a case and the Court has to find it, though more than one may seem to be applicable and such a construction of the various Articles has to be adopted as to confine each Article to one exclusive category of suits. One principle in the working out of this process is the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant, specialia derogant generalibus.

The second proposition is still more untenable and the fact that the appellant's argument involves it is a very strong argument against it. It is true that this strong argument is furnished only by bringing in suits described in Art. 148 for consideration among the suits for recovery of immoveable property. If it is said that such suits are only suits to redeem and there is no analogy between Art. 148 and the other Arts. (134, 135, 138 to 140, 142 and 143), the reply is, that the suit under Art. 134 is certainly analogous to the suit under Art. 148. Both are based on a mortgage; even in Art. 148, the suit may be described as a suit to recover the property if it is the plaintiff's case that a mortgage is discharged; and even in a suit under Art. 134 the appropriate relief against a transferee in a decree for redemption as the transferee gets by the transfer at least the rights of his transferor. In this light I would construe Art. 141 to cover only those cases in which the cause of action is simply the death of the female and the only obstacle to the reversioner seeking to obtain possession is either an act of the female or her inaction—in either case resulting in the loss of possession to a stranger and the need of a suit on behalf of the reversioner. It does not cover cases where the cause of action includes something more beyond this, e. g., a transaction by the last male owner such as a mortgage (Art. 148), a mortgage by him and transfer by the mortgagee (Art. 134), a purchase in Court auction (Art. 138), a lease (Art. 139) or a carving by him, of life estates with a remainder or a reversion following it (Art. 140), or any transaction involving the possibility of forfeiture (Art. 143), or loss of possession by him (Art. 142). In these cases, the specific Article applies. This is the respondent's contention, and the result of accepting it would be that Art. 141 does not apply to the first two classes of cases,

(a) Of the Arts. 134, 135, 138 to 144 and 148, no two are overlapping.

(b) Art. 144 has to be applied last.

(c) Each of the other Articles has to be applied when the suit is of the kind described in it, even if it is a suit by reversioner;

(d) Only when the suit is of a kind not described in Arts. 134, 135, 138, 140, 142, 143 and 148, does Art. 141 apply to suits by reversioners—the discontinuance of possession in Art. 142 referring to a discontinuance during the last male owner's lifetime.

If the intention of the Legislature when it departed from the Act of 1859 and introduced Art. 141 in the later Acts was to give the reversioners the benefit of a longer period in all suits to recover possession—even where the suits are of the kind described in the other Articles, such intention would have been attained and expressed better, not, by the introduction of a separate Article like Art. 141, but a general section somewhat as follows:

"Where in the suits described in Arts. 134 to 144 and 148 the plaintiff is a person entitled to the right on the death of a Hindu female, and the cause of action

(15) 16 C. 25; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 17.

(16) 21 M. 141; 7 M. L. J. 275; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 456.

accrues during or at the end of the life of the female, the interval between the accrual of the cause of action and the death of the female shall be excluded from the computation of the period in the second column."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the suit is governed by Art. 134.

Another argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant is that such a construction will leave the reversioner remediless, for the intervening female may allow the suit to be barred and he himself has no right to bring a suit. Apart from the consideration that the fact that some possible hardship cannot stand in the way of accepting a construction of a Statute otherwise clear, I am unable to agree with the proposition that the reversioner cannot intervene for the protection of the actual reversioner if the widow neglects to take action. In support of this proposition, the learned Counsel for the appellant relied on the dictum of Srinivasa Iyengar, J. in Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (3): "Further the Article cannot, I think, apply to suits where at the time of the transfer the mortgagor was not entitled to sue for possession, etc." This dictum was not necessary for decision of the point before the Full Bench and I respectfully dissent from it. When we see the varying attitude of the Legislature in respect of the suit described in Art. 134 [see Radhanath Dose v. Gisborne & Co. (8) Act of 1859, Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (9) on the Act of 1871, Muthu v. Kambalinga (6)] it is clear that the object of the Article was to cut down the period available to the mortgagor under Art. 145 and to compel him to watch the conduct of the mortgagee and to intervene on a transfer—thus making the transfer a cause of action which otherwise did not exist.

The decisions in Ram Chandar v. Kallu (4), Meda Vengamma v. Mitta Chelamiah (17) hold that the reversioner cannot sue to redeem during the lifetime of the widow. Ordinarily this is true, but I do not understand the cases to lay down that in a case when the appropriate allegations are made and the facts proved to the effect that the intervening female's conduct is such as to raise the apprehension that the property will never be redeemed or altogether lost to a transferee, the reversioner cannot maintain an action for the preservation of the property, on the same principle that actions to restrain waste are allowed. [See Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 647 and cases cited therein, especially Nobin Chunder v. Issur Chunder (Guru Purshad Doss] (11), per Sir Barnes Peacock.]

I am, therefore, of opinion that Art. 134 applies to the 1/5th share of the house and of the land mortgaged in 1866.

The result is that the whole second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (e)—Appeal—Objection taken in grounds of appeal not mentioned in judgment—Presumption.

In illustration (e) of section 114 of the Evidence Act it is laid down that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed, a presumption which, like all other presumptions, may be rebutted but, unless rebutted, is conclusive. [p. 741, col. 1.]

Where it is the duty of a Court to do a particular thing it must be assumed that the Judge of that Court did his duty. [p. 741, col. 1.]

It is the duty of a District Judge to record a finding on all points argued before him, and where a judgment makes no mention of an objection taken in the grounds of appeal, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the objection was abandoned. [p. 741, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be desided in this appeal is, whether the appellant is entitled to have the case remanded in order that the evidence of one remaining witness may be recorded. The first ground of appeal runs as follows:—"The lower Appellate Court has erred in law in not ordering the evidence produced by the appellant to be recorded," and this, Counsel explains to mean that the defendant Abdul Karim was not given the opportunity for which he asked to have a witness re summoned. In clause 9 of the memorandum of appeal presented to the District Judge the appellant did state that the lower Court had not taken all his evidence. The judgment of the learned District Judge is silent on the point and Counsel urges that the point must have been pressed before the District Judge, who must have overlooked it or have failed for some other reason to record a finding. He concedes that it was the duty of the District Judge to record such a finding and he has not supported his ground of appeal by an affidavit from the Counsel in the District Court to the effect that he did not give up the point and did press it. In section 114 of the Evidence Act it is laid down that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed, a presumption which, like all other presumptions, may be rebutted but, unless rebutted, is conclusive. At page 747 of Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 7th Edition, a mass of authorities is quoted to the effect that if it be the duty of a Court to do a particular thing it must be assumed that the Judges of that Court did their duty. These authorities are precisely in point and, in the absence of any affidavit to the effect that the ground was not given up, and inasmuch as the presumption is that the Court did its duty, we must assume that the ground was definitely given up. The mere recital of the ground in the memorandum of appeal is no reason for making a contrary presumption and holding, as Counsel wishes us to do, in contravention of section 114, that the Court failed to do its duty. The position, therefore, is that the appellant did not ask the District Court to remand the case and abandoned any relief to which he might have been entitled. He cannot now claim to be given any further opportunity. There is no force whatever in any of the remaining grounds put forward in this Court as the questions decided are all questions of fact. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C. J.—It is necessary to state briefly the facts which have given rise to this second appeal. Certain property belonging to one Bapat, which may be described as the Kelghar property, was mortgaged by him to Paranjpe in 1890. Subsequently, in February 1900, Bapat mortgaged the same property to the present plaintiffs (Joshi brothers) for Rs. 2,000, which included the sum of Rs. 1,200 to be paid by the Joshis to Paranjpe in respect of the first mortgage. The present plaintiffs mortgaged certain properties belonging to them and their interest as mortgagees in the Kelghar property for Rs. 4,000 to Paranjpe in April 1900. The consideration was stated in detail, as including the sum of Rs. 1,186-1-6 which was mentioned as being the amount due to Paranjpe under the mortgage by Bapat to him. This mortgage was renewed in 1906 in the same terms. In 1903 the Kelghar property was sold in execution of a money-decree against Bapat and purchased by the Rodes, but it was subject to the mortgage of 1900 in favour of the Joshis. The Rodes filed suit No. 131 of 1904 against the Joshis and Paranjpe for a declaration that the said mortgage was "colourable, unreal and without valuable consideration" and for a declaration that the property of Bapat was liable to be sold free from that mortgage. The suit was brought in that form, as the property was already declared subject to that mortgage in miscellaneous proceedings before the suit. That suit was dismissed in the first instance, but in appeal (No. 292 of 905) it was held that the mortgage was colourable and unreal and without consideration, and that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 i.e., the Paranjpes) were entitled to a charge of Rs. 1,186-1-6 in respect of the earlier mortgage by Bapat in their favour. Accordingly, a decree was passed declaring the property in that suit (i.e., the Kelghar property) subject to that charge in favour of the Paranjpes and that the mortgage in favour of the Joshis by Bapat was not binding upon the plaintiffs in that suit. This decree was affirmed by the High Court in Ganesh v. Purshottam (1). Subsequently the Rodes filed another suit in 1909 to recover possession of the Kelghar property on the title acquired by them at the Court-sale against the Joshis and Paranjpe. The claim for possession was allowed ultimately by the Appeal Court, it is relevant to note that it was held in that litigation that the finding as to the true nature of the mortgage of February 1900 in the suit of 1904 was res judicata against them.

The Joshis filed the present suit against their mortgagee (Paranjpe) in 1917 for redemption of the mortgage of 1906. In the plaint they described all the mortgaged properties including their interest as mortgagees in the Kelghar property and stated the facts preceeding the suit. They prayed for accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and further prayed that in taking accounts the property at Kelghar and the amount of Rs. 1,186-1-6 should be excluded. The defendant filed a written statement in which the above facts were stated but the effect thereof was contested. The Trial Court found the first three issues in favour of the defendant and recorded no findings on the remaining issues. It held that the eight annas Khoti Takshim of Kelghar required to be included in the present suit, that the Rodes were necessary parties, and that by the judgment in Appeal No. 292 of 905, confirmed by the High Court in Second Appeal No. 186 of 1907 the defendant was not deprived of his right to claim Rs. 1,186-1-6 with interest from the plaintiffs.

GANESH MORESHWAR v. VASUDEO VITHAL.

The suit was dismissed as the plaintiffs refused to include the Kelzhar property in the suit and to join the Rodes as parties. The plaintiffs appealed, but the same view was taken by the learned Judge, who affirmed the decree of the Trial Court.

In the appeal before us it is contended that the lower Courts are wrong in holding that the inclusion of the Kelghar property and the non-joinder of the Rodes as parties are necessary steps. It is urged on behalf of the respondents that that view is right.

It seems to me, on a consideration of the arguments and of the plaint, that the suit is properly framed. It is really a suit for the redemption of the whole mortgage. The plaintiffs seek to establish that a part of the mortgage-debt should be excluded from the accounts on certain grounds. That is a question to be decided in the suit between the parties on its merits, on the terms of the mortgage bond and in the light of the subsequent events with reference to the mortgage by Bapat in favour of the present plaintiffs, but the suit is one for the redemption of the whole mortgage, treating the mortgage debt as one entire debt.

I do not think that the inclusion of the Kelghar property in the suit is a matter of any practical importance on the facts of this case. It has been referred to in the plaint, and all the necessary facts relating thereto have been stated. If it were absolutely necessary to include it in the suit, it may be treated as having been so included. Mr. Coyajee for the plaintiffs concedes that, if necessary, it may be so treated. But he contends that its inclusion is wholly unnecessary: and I think that that contention ought to be allowed. It must be remembered that the mortgage in suit includes the interest of the Joshis as mortgagees in the Kelghar property. It is clear that as regards the Kelghar property, the transaction in suit is a mortgage by a mortgagee of his interest in that property. The existence of that property depends necessarily upon the rights of the plaintiffs as mortgagees in that property. But it has been effectively determined as between the owner and the mortgagees that the mortgage was not real and that practically it had no existence. That adjudication was made in a suit to which the derivative mortgagee was a party. The derivative mortgagee derives his title from the mortgagee, and if the mortgagee is proved to have no interest as a mortgagee as against the mortgagor (the owner), I do not understand how the derivative mortgagee can now contend that the property (i. e., his mortgagor's interest as mortgagee) should be brought in the suit as part of the property mortgaged to him. The parties to the present suit, the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee, are bound by the finding that the present plaintiffs have no interest as mortgagees in the Kelghar property The fact of their being in possession of the Khoti Takshim of the village or a part of it, is disputed. The lower Courts have placed some reliance upon this fact. Even if it be a fact it does not appear to me to affect the question. The plaintiffs have stated in the plaint the fact that their interest as mortgagee is found to be non-existent. I do not see how the omission to include the Kelghar property (i. e., the plaintiffs' mortgage right therein, which is found not to exist) can be treated as any transgression of the rule that the mortgage should not be split up. This rule is stated in the last paragraph of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. I am unable to hold that the omission to bring the Kelghar property, by which the mortgage right of the plaintiffs therein is meant, can be held to contravene in any sense the terms of the last clause of section 60. The mortgagors here seek to redeem the whole mortgage, and have to pay the whole of the amount, which may be found due on taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, before they can redeem the whole of the property mortgaged, i. e., all the property except the mortgage right in the Kelghar property, which was supposed to have been in existence at the time of their mortgage to Paranjpe but which has been subsequently found to have never been in existence really.

In this view of the matter, the question of the non-joinder of the Rodes does not arise. But I may point out that in a suit by a mortgagee to redeem his sub-mortgage the original mortgagor is not a necessary party, though he may be a proper party. The following note in Seton on Decrees, page 2011 (7th Edition), is in point:—"The original mortgagee may redeem the derivative mortgagee and the latter may foreclose the original mortgagee without making the original mortgagor a party."

This view was accepted by this Court in Someshwar v. Naranbhai (2) which was a case of the sub-mortgagee suing his mortgagor (i. e. the original mortgagee) without joining the original mortgagor as a party. The same view is taken in Ram Shankar Lal v Ganesh Prasad (3).

As regards the third point which has been decided by the lower Courts as to Rs. 1,186-1-6, it is true that it is not res judicata. It is clear that the question as to the plaintiffs' liability to pay the sum to the defendant in spite of the fact that the mortgage in their favour of the Kelghar property was a sham and colourable transaction could not have been and has not been decided in the previous suits between the Rodes and the parties to the present litigation. But that is all, we think, that is decided by the lower Courts. We are not called upon to express any opinion, and we express none, as to the merits of the defendant's contention that he is entitled to recover that amount on the terms of the mortgage-bond in suit. That will have to be considered by the Trial Court when the question as to the amount due to the defendant under the mortgage, according to the terms of the bond and the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, is dealt with by the Court.

As there has been some confusion in the argument as to this sum of Rs. 1,186-1-6, which originally represented the mortgage amount under the first mortgage by Bapat to Paranjpe, it is desirable to point out that it appears from the judgment in Appeal No. 292 of 1904 that the charge of Rs. 1,186 1-6 was declared in favour of Paranjpe as representing the amount of the mortgage, to him by Bapat, and not on account of the subsequent transactions between (a) Bapat and the plaintiffs, and (b) the plaintiffs and Paranjpe. Only the amount was taken as settled on account of its having been mentioned in the subsequent mortgages.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the suit to the Trial Court for disposal on the merits. The plaintiffs are entitled to the costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The costs in the Trial Court to be costs in the suit.

Mr. Raj Krishna for Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present plaintiffs, Rup Chand and others, obtained a decree against the defendant, Allah Jawaya, on the 8th of August 1904 conditional on payment of Rs. 230 by the 15th of August. In November 1915 they instituted the present suit against the same defendants on the allegation that they had obtained possession in September 1904, and, after enjoying the land and building upon it in the interval, had been dispossessed in 1915 and, therefore, ask for a fresh decree for possession. The suit was decreed by the first Court but remanded by the District Judge on appeal for decision of two additional issues as to what was the value of the land and whether the sum of Rs. 230 had been paid or not.

The first point as to the valuation was dropped and on appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit, relying on Khub Ram v. Surat (1), in spite of the fact that his findings on the facts were as follows:—

(1) The condition that Rs. 230 was to be paid was fulfilled.

(2) The defendant in execution of the decree refused to deliver possession formally, and the decree was never executed legally.

(3) The site was, however, actually taken possession of by the plaintiffs, who let the execution proceedings drop.

(4) Latterly, the plaintiffs being negligent in the use of the property, the defendant took advantage deliberately of the imperfection of the execution proceedings trespassed on the property, and built upon it. In explanation of the slackness of the plaintiffs in pursuing the execution, it is to be noticed that the decree itself was a consent decree.

This second appeal is presented on the ground that the necessary result of the findings is that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree. The facts are that, after the sum of Rs. 230 had been paid, the successful plaintiffs applied for execution of their decree and to be put in possession of the land in suit. A bailiff was sent with the decree-holders for the purpose, and he appears to have been under a misapprehension as to the necessity of obtaining the signature of the judgment-debtor before he could proceed to put the decree-holders in possession of the vacant site. It is quite clear from his report that the judgment-debtor stated that he had no objection whatever and that he had given up the land, which was lying vacant. Thereupon the plaintiffs took possession and remained in possession for many years and, although it cannot be said that that possession was taken "in execution" in the sense that an official of the Court actually placed the decree-holders upon the land, it was taken in the course of execution proceedings and as a result of the decree which the plaintiffs had obtained. The authority relied upon by the District Judge deals with exactly the opposite set of conditions, that is to say, where a decree-holder has not obtained physical or actual possession, and relies only on the formal proceedings giving him symbolical possession and there it was held that if there be any flaw in those proceedings his proper remedy is to continue to execute his decree. Here the decree had been given effect to out of Court though it may not have been technically executed in the sense in which the word is used in the Code of Civil Procedure and, inasmuch as it had been satisfied, nothing further remained to be done in execution. The plaintiffs, therefore, having been in possession for many years and in lawful possession were fully entitled to bring this suit when they were ousted by the defendant. We, therefore, accept the appeal and give the plaintiffs a decree for possession. The defendant, however, must be given an opportunity to remove the malta which he has erected on the land in accordance with the decree of the first Court on which no appeal has been lodged in this Court, and we allow him six weeks for the purpose from the date of this decree. The costs of the plaintiffs will be paid by the defendant in all the Courts.

Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), s. 18—Panch, appointment of—Collector's powers of appointment—Appointment by Deputy Collector—Award, validity of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

On an application to a Deputy Collector for the appointment of a Panch according to section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, the Deputy Collector ordered the Mamlatdar to do so, and he, in turn, ordered his Head Karkun to get two Panches appointed by the parties, and appointed the Head Karkun to be Sar Panch: the villagers, however, refused to appoint the Panches whereupon the Mamlatdar directed the Head Karkun to himself appoint the necessary two persons: the Panch so constituted made an award which was approved by the Deputy Collector. In a suit on foot of the award, its validity was challenged:

Held, that the award was not a valid award, as the procedure adopted in appointing the Panches was not a substantial compliance with the terms of section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act; that the subsequent approval of the Deputy Collector gave no kind of validity to the award which at the time it was made had no validity, and that such approval was not in accordance with the proviso to the section. JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—By our interlocutory judgment of June 22, 1920, we sent down two issues for determination and we are now in possession of the findings of the lower Court upon those two issues and of the materials upon which those findings are based. The first issue was "were the Panchas and the Sar-Panch appointed in this case as required by section 18 of the Hereditary Offices Act?" and upon the facts stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court upon remand, I think that this question must be answered in the negative.

Section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act lays down the procedure to be followed in determining the rights and duties of certain classes of Vatandars, and it is necessary before the determination can be said to have been made under that section that the provisions of that section should have been complied with at least in substance. Now, what the section requires is that the Collector, if he takes action under that section shall cause the matter in dispute to be defined in writing by a Panchayat of five persons, whereof two shall be appointed by the villagers, two by the Vatandars, and one who shall be Sar-Panch by the Collector. That section further goes on to provide that in case the villagers or the Vatandars fail to nominate members within seven days, the Collector shall appoint such members as may be required to constitute a Panchayat of five.

It may be premised that the Deputy Collector who dealt with this matter had no doubt the powers of the Collector as explained in our previous judgment. It is clear, however, that the Legislature intends that the Collector shall himself appoint the Panchas in case the villagers or Vatandars fail to nominate members within seven days and also that the Sar-Panch shall be appointed by him.

Now, what happened in this case was that on August 1, 1911, a petition was made to the Deputy Collector by the Mhars and on November 3, 1911, the Mamlatdar wrote to the Deputy Collector soliciting the appointment of a Panch according to section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. Had the Deputy Collector proceeded to cause the appointment of a Panch to be made in the manner required by the section, all subsequent difficulties in the case would have been saved. But what he did was to write to the Mamlatdar directing him himself to take action in accordance with the suggestion made by him. From that time onwards he was in no way concerned in the matter. What appears to have happened afterwards is this. The Mamlatdar ordered his Head Karkun to get two Panchas appointed by each party and appointed the Head Karkun to be himself a Sar-Panch. The Head Karkun then reported to the Mamlatdar that the Mhars had appointed Panchas but that villagers had refused to do so. Thereupon the Mamlatdar ordered the Head Karkun to appoint the necessary two persons under section 18. It thus appears that the Sar-Panch was not appointed by the Deputy Collector but by the Mamlatdar and that the two Panchas whose appointment became necessary owing to the failure of the villagers were not appointed by the Mamlatdar, still less by the Deputy Collector but by the Head Karkun. We are unable to consider that the action here disclosed was a substantial compliance with section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, or that a Panch so constituted could make a valid award. The fact that after the award was made the Deputy Collector approved the action taken and the finding of the Panch, can give no kind of validity to that which had no validity at the time at which it was done. The approval of the Collector is not required by the Act in the case where the Panchas come to a decision. It is only where the Panchas fail to come to a decision that this approval is necessary and, therefore, the Deputy Collector's order cannot be considered as having been made in accordance with the proviso to the section. It follows that the award is invalid, in fact it is a nullity, not having been made in any respect whatever in accordance with the requirements of the Legislature. Therefore, the result must be that the case must be approached as though there was no such award.

Now what is the result? The suit was one by the Mhars to restrain the villagers from giving the carcasses of dead animals to the Mangs in contravention of the award which was thus passed, and if the award was a nullity it must of necessity fail. It was, however, suggested that, apart from the award, the question of the rights of the Mhars arises to be decided on the merits. But it has been held by this Court in Bhiva v. Vithya (1) following the decision in Parsha v. Lagmya (2) that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to determine a matter of this kind having regard to section 18 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act which provides the procedure whereby such disputes are to be determined. Following those decisions there is no other course possible except to allow the appeal and to dismiss the suit.

In view of the fact that this point was not raised until the case came before us in second appeal we direct that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

We wish to add that we regret the result in this case and that we trust that if the Mhar plaintiffs move the Collector for a fresh decision under section 18 of the Act, steps may be taken to ensure a speedy determination of the matter and that attention may be paid to the requirements of the Statute in order that so regrettable a result may not again occur.

Where a Court of Wards takes under its superintendence the property of a disqualified proprietor, and on the death of that person retains superintendence over the property under section 45 of the Court of Wards Act, the successor to the property of the deceased does not thereby become a Ward of Courts, and is not disqualified from incurring any liability which might affect the property after the debts and liabilities of the deceased have been discharged. [p. 748, col. 2.]

DALEEP SINGH v. KHURSEED HUSAIN.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Nehal Chand Vaish, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmed, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the recovery of money due on account of cloth supplied and money borrowed by the defendant. The defence, so far as it is material for the purpose of this appeal, was that the defendant was, at the time of the alleged transactions a ward of the Court of Wards and, therefore, incompetent to enter into a contract, to make him pecuniarily liable, under section 37 of the Court of Wards Act.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim; but the lower Appellate Court set aside the decree. The view taken by the Court of first instance was that the defendant was a ward as regards the property which he had inherited from Musammat Ahmadi Begam but was not a ward as regards the property which he owned in his own right. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that he was a ward with respect to both the properties.

It appears that Musammat Ahmadi Begam was the owner of certain property, the superintendence of which was taken over by the Court of Wards on the 22nd August 1911. She died in 1913 leaving certain heirs, one of whom was the defendant. The Court of Wards retained the property of Musammat Ahmadi Begam under its superintendence under section 45, because the debts due by the deceased had not been till then discharged. The property was eventually released on the 7th June 1918. The debts, now in question, had been incurred by the defendant between the 24th September 1916 and the 30th December 1916. Section 45 of Act IV of 1912 lays down that:

"When a ward dies.....before the liquidation is completed of the debts and liabilities with which the property is charged, the Court of Wards may either release such property or may retain it under its superintendence until such debts and liabilities have been discharged."

It further declares that:

"If the Court of Wards retains the superintendence, the person who has succeeded to the property.....shall not be competent to transfer or create any charge on, or interest in, any part of such property while it remains under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, nor shall any debts or liabilities previously incurred by any person who has so succeeded be chargeable on such property until the debts and liabilities due by the Court of Wards have been discharged."

It does not disqualify such a successor from incurring any liability which might affect the property after those debts and liabilities have been discharged.

Section 37 has no application, because that section is applicable in terms to wards, as defined by section 3. A ward is a disqualified proprietor whose person or property or any part of whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The disqualification is declared under section 8. The defendant was never so declared. He made no application under section 10. The property inherited by the defendant from Musammat Ahmadi Begam was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards but only for a specific purpose, namely, for the discharge of the debts and liabilities which were due by Musammat Ahmadi Begam at the time when the estate was taken over under its superintendence by the Court of Wards. After these debts were discharged and the estate was released, any liability, incurred by the successors of the lady, might be enforceable, except in so far as that liability creates a charge on the property which was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards while such debts and liabilities had remained undischarged.

The view taken by either of the Courts below cannot, therefore, be upheld. The defendant was not a ward of the Court, so as to disqualify him from entering into a pecuniary obligation of a kind, not forbidden by section 45, that is, of the nature of a simple money debt or liability, not amounting to a charge on any portion of the property which was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards,

In the lower Appellate Court no other plea was pressed. We allow the appeal accordingly and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of first instance with costs, including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Missellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 24th August 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 10th July 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, Messrs. Muhammad Rafi and D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Lala Kishen Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In 1914 one Fateh Muhammad, a convert to Islam, whose original name was Gurbakhsh Singh sold 96 kanals of his property, and the present suit was for a declaration by his reversioners that the sale was without necessity and consideration and should not affect their rights as reversioners.

A preliminary plea by Fateh Muhammad was to the effect that he was not without issue as alleged by the plaintiffs but that he had two sons and that the plaintiffs had no right to sue in the presence of those sons. Fateh Muhammad alias Gurbakhsh Singh, who was originally a Sikh, set forth as his case that he was converted to Islam and married to Musammat Rango, a Muhammadan woman, in 1893 and he produced in support of his contention a document marked Exhibit A. That document, the learned Judge of the Court below finds, has not been proved at all, and he holds for reasons given by him in detail that the marriage and conversion set up by Fateh Muhammad as having taken place in 1893 are disproved. He consequently came to the conclusion that the sons of Fateh Muhammad are not his legitimate sons and he directed the suit of the collaterals to proceed.

In second appeal on behalf of Fateh Muhammad's sons it has been contended before us that under Muhammadan Law the acknowledgment by Fateh Muhammad that the appellants are his sons has the effect of legitimating them. For the respondents it is admitted that the acknowledgment by a Muslim of his offspring is sufficient under Muhammadan Law to legitimate them provided that certain conditions are satisfied, the chief among which is that the marriage should not have been disproved. It is urged that the plea of legitimation was never mentioned in the Court below and that Fateh Muhammad's case reposed upon a definite marriage on a definite date, that the alleged marriage has been disproved and that consequently the rule of Muhammadan Law upon which the appellants rely has no application. In our opinion, the appeal must fail on the finding of fact of the Court below that the marriage in 1893 has been disproved, for no marriage other than that in 1893 has been alleged. The rule of recognition permitted by Muhammadan Law applies only when the alleged marriage is uncertain, that is, not proved, but no benefit can be derived from it when it is found as a fact that the alleged marriage did not take place.

For these reasons we hold that the recognition by Fateh Muhammad that the appellants are his sons does not legitimate them, and, therefore, they cannot stand in the way of Fateh Muhammad alias Gurbakhsh Singh's collaterals. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs and remand the case to the First Court for a decision on the issues that remain.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares.

Mr. Badri Narain, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants as his tenants on the allegation that the plaintiff is a transferee of one Mohammad Sadiq. Mohammad Sadiq had leased the premises to Rajjab for one year in 1865. On the expiry of the year, Rajjab held over, and it is found that his heir, Musammat Gujar, has been in possession ever since the death of her father and that they have held the premises between them since 1866.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit as barred by limitation and it seems to us rightly; while it is quite true that a tenant who holds over cannot set up an adverse title to the landlord, nevertheless it seems to us that Art. 139 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act provides that the landlord can only recover possession if he sues within 12 years. In this case it is quite obvious that Mohammad Sadiq could not have ejected the defendants after 1878. He could not give his transferee a better title than he himself had.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

After the award had been given one Sukhanand, a member of the defendant firm, objected, inter alia, that there was a minor member of the firm who had not been specifically impleaded or personally served, and that, therefore, the award was bad. A decree was eventually given in the terms of the award and an application for revision has now been presented by all four members of the firm including the minor, and the only point argued at the hearing is that the existence of the minor rendered it necessary for the Court to give special assent under O. XXXII, r. 7 to the reference to arbitration although his existence was not disclosed until after the award had been given.

There would be some force in this contention had the minor been impleaded as such. The suit, however, was brought against the firm, and the mere fact that there is a minor member of the firm, does not bring the suit, in my opinion, within the purview of O. XXXII. The procedure has been perfectly regular and no reason having been shown for interference on revision, I dismiss the application with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The only question argued in this case is that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the order of the Trial Court staying execution.

On the merits the lower Appellate Court's order is perfectly just and reasonable. On the law point, there is some conflict of view, but there is authority on both sides.

In my opinion, specific reference to stay of execution in section 47 of the Code was rendered unnecessary by the alteration of the opening words of the section as compared with section 244 of the old Code.

Under the present law, all questions without exception, i. e., all questions which determine the rights and liabilities of the parties in the matter of the execution of the decree are appealable.

Now, a decision that execution shall not take place does determine a right for the time being and may have very far reaching results.

Lala Nanwa Mal for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Devi Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Kheman and others, plaintiffs, residents of Nangal Kalan in the Hoshiarpur District, who are tenants in the village, brought a suit for an injunction to prevent Sarup Singh, defendant No. 1, who is one of the proprietors having a share in the shamilat, from enclosing an area of 92 kanals, 2 marlas over which they claim to have a right to graze their cattle. The Trial Court granted the injunction prayed for and on appeal by defendant No. 1, the decree of the Trial Court was confirmed. Sarup Singh has now come up to this Court in second appeal and we have heard Lala Nanwa Mal on his behalf and Lala Devi Das for the respondents.

A preliminary objection is raised by Lala Devi Das that the question as to the rights of grazing is one of custom and cannot be gone into in second appeal without a certificate. The learned District Judge has relied on the wajib-ul arz which gives the plaintiffs the right of grazing over the whole of the shamilat of which the plot in dispute is a part. He finds that this area fell to the lot of Sarup Singh by partition among the three then existing proprietors in 1877, and that the land has since continued to be entered in the revenue papers as uncultivated and grazing rights have never been obstructed by the defendant appellant till recently. He finds that the appellant has never enjoyed effective and exclusive possession of the plot which had fallen to his share and the first time when he claimed exclusive possession was in 1913-14. Lala Devi Das refers to paragraph 220 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, th Edition, to show that grazing rights are granted by custom to tenants as a body. He also refers to a decision of the Punjab Chief Court, published as Nanda v. Jai Chand (1) in which it was held that the rights of grazing being based on custom and there being no certificate a second appeal could not be entertained. We think that there is force in this objection and this appeal cannot be heard for want of a certificate. It may be added that on merits also this appeal is bound to fail, because it is concluded by findings of fact, which have been referred to above, and which cannot be questioned in second appeal.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

GHULAM RASUL v. RAMZAN BIBI.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I am clear that by he amendment made in the definition of 'actionable claim" in the Transfer of Property Act in 1900, the Legislature intended that when money is borrowed on mortgage of immoveable property, the creation of the security on the immoveables should be treated as material part of the mortgage transaction and that the mortgage-debt should not be treated as validly transferred if the conditions imposed by the Statute Law as requisite for the valid transfer of the security have not been complied with. I think that the latest pronouncement of the learned Chief Justice in Perumal Ammal v. Perumal Naicker (1) supports my above view.

The result is that the appeal has to be allowed and the respondent could be treated only as an ordinary creditor and not a secured creditor. The respondent will pay the appellants' costs in both Courts.

NAPIER, J.—I agree.

The mortgage-debt has not been legally assigned as correctly stated by the District Judge. Section 134 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application nor can any principle embodied therein be applied against the other provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

The appeal is allowed with costs here and in the Court below.

Musammat RAMZAN BIBI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1 (2)—Order permitting withdrawal of suit—Revision.

The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an order under O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code permitting the withdrawal of a suit, on the ground that the order was improperly made.

Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das, 46 Ind. Cas. 71; 40 A. 612; 16 A. L. J. 495, dissented from.

Nathuni Ram v. Sheo Koer, 46 Ind. Cas. 179; 5 P. L. W. 104; (1918) Pat. 220; 3 P. L. J. 460, Uchant Ahir v. Baswan Ahir, 61 Ind. Cas. 639; 6 P. L. J. 112; 2 P. L. T 634, Munna Lal v. Chhabil Das, 46 Ind. Cas. 181; 117 P. W. R, 1918, relied upon.

Petition, under section 44, Act IX of 1919, for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujranwala, dated the 14th November 1921.

Saiyed Mohsin Shah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In a suit by Musammat Ramzan Bibi against Ghulam Rasul, etc., which was instituted on the 12th October 1920, an order was passed by a Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujranwala, on the 14th November 1920, allowing the plaintiff to withdraw her suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, if necessary. There was nothing in that order to show that the requirements of O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) were fulfilled or that there were any grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit. Though that order refers to a deed of withdrawal, there appears to be none on the record and the order is in all probability granted on the oral suggestion of the Pleader for the plaintiff. The defendants have come up to this Court in revision on the ground that the Court below acted illegally or with material irregularity in allowing the plaintiff to withdraw her suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit without there being any justification for the order passed.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan, who appears for the respondent, raises a preliminary question whether any revision lies against an order of this nature. He refers to Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1) where it was held by the Allahabad High Court that as the Court below had jurisdiction to pass even a wrong order, an order under O. XXIII, (1) (2) could not be interfered with in revision on the ground that it was erroneous. But Mr. Mohsin Shah draws my attention to several other decisions in which a contrary view has been held. Nathuni Ram v. Sheo Koer (2) and Uchant Ahir v. Basawan Ahir (3) are decisions of the Patna High Court in which the learned Judges of that Court have interfered with an order under O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) on the ground that the order was improperly made and would prejudice the defendant. I am also referred to a decision of the Punjab Chief Court, Munna Lal v. Ohhabil Das (4), which held that a revision did lie in a similar case. I do not think, therefore, that the preliminary objection of Mr. Zafarulla Khan can prevail. As he himself admits, on the merits he cannot defend the action of the Court in any way. I do not think there was any ground, not to speak of a sufficient ground, for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit after withdrawing the existing one. The order, dated the 14th November is, therefore, set aside and it is directed that the suit should proceed on the merits and be disposed of according to law, the proceedings to be resumed from the stage at which the order now cancelled was passed.

Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 3, 34—Hindu married woman—Minor—Father, if "representative."

The father of a Hindu minor girl ceases to be her natural guardian on her marriage and if he has not been appointed her legal guardian, he is not her representative within the meaning of section 3 of the Registration Act. [p. 757, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Madras High Court (Abdur Rahim and Oldfield, JJ.) dated the 28th November 1917, in Appeal Suit No. 24 of 1916 reported as 44 Ind. Cas. 483, confirming a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 73 of 1914.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. and Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—The appellant, who sues in forma pauperis, is a minor and the second wife of the respondent. She was also the niece of one Krishna Kamathi, deceased, a man of considerable property, who died on the 14th April 1909. The respondent is the adopted son of this same Krishna Kamathi. The case made by the plaintiff was that Krishna Kamathi being anxious that his line should be perpetuated, pressed the respondent who was much attached to his first wife to marry the appellant, then a girl only eleven years of age, that the respondent reluctantly consented to do so, and that the marriage accordingly took place upon the 9th March 1908.

It was alleged to be the custom when these child marriages take place that the wife is not brought to reside in her husband's home till she has reached the age of puberty. However that may be, the respondent did not bring this wife of his to his home and in other respects was alleged to have treated her in a way of which Krishna Kamathi so strongly disapproved that he became somewhat incensed against his adopted son. He was the manager of the family property, and, although advanced in years, was admittedly an intelligent man, who managed this property well and looked after all legal matters, such as the institution of suits, etc. On the 30th April 1908 Krishna Kamathi wrote to the respondent a letter, in which he stated that the latter had recently become disobedient to him and had disregarded him, that it appeard to him the respondent would behave in the same manner in future, that it did not appear to him, Krishna, proper to live with the respondent hereafter as a member of an undivided family, and that he had divided the moveable and immoveable family property into two equal parts, had prepared four lists thereof, and proposed to divide it between himself and his son, in the complicated manner set out in this letter. The respondent, in answer to this letter, wrote to his adoptive father a letter bearing date 30th May 1908, in which, after defending himself against the accusations made against him, he suggested that relatives for interested motives had poisoned his father's mind against him, begged of the father not to break up the joint family and divide the family property, but stated that if his father had made up his mind to do so he was ready to take as his share of it the property mentioned in List No. 2.

Krishna Kamathi, in pursuance of the resolution he had formed, employed two Pleaders to draw up for him two deeds, dated respectively the 19th and 23rd May 1908. The first is a partition deed between him and his son, the respondent, in which he again sets forth the charges against the latter, as he had already done in the letter already referred to, stating that he had separated and delivered to his son the property in the aforesaid List No. 2, which the latter had accepted, and provided he, the respondent, should enjoy the immoveable and moveable property mentioned in that list from generation to generation, he paying the Sircar Terva and by the entry of Kudthala in his, the respondent's name. The second deed is a deed of gift to the appellant, his niece, by which, after reciting that he had effected a partition between himself and his son, of the moveable and immoveable property, he, Krishna, out of the part of the same which fell to his share, had made to his niece of his own free will, because of the love he had for her, a gift of the moveable and immoveable property described in a schedule attached thereto and estimated to be of the value of Rs. 15,000. This deed contains the following passage:—

"Though I have given up to you just now the full right of the undermentioned property, still as you are now a minor and unable to look to the management of the property, I shall look after the management of the property as your trustee till you become a major, and I shall myself take the rice and cash amount settled to be paid by you each year for my and my wife's maintenance and keep a regular account and spend the amount necessary for the due performance of the Mana Mariyade pertaining to this property and pay the remaining meane profits to you as soon as you become a major, or I shall get a document executed in your name for such an amount on the safe security of immoveable property and deliver the said document to you."

Both these deeds were executed by Krishna Kamathi alone. Neither the appellant nor her father executed them.

On the 1st June 1908, Krishna Kamathi duly presented both these deeds at the office of the Sub-Registrar of Vittal for registration. Registration, however, did not take place owing to some question as to the amount of stamp-duty leviable. This involved a reference to the Registrar of the district, which caused delay. The deeds meanwhile remained with the Sub-Registrar. The respondent having in the meantime learned that his father had presented these deeds for registration, requested him to obtain a return of them, and the latter accordingly, on the 5th June 1908, presented a petition to the Sub-Registrar praying for a return of the two deeds without their being registered. On the 9th June 1908 Krishna and the respondent entered into an agreement (Tahanama) to the effect that during their lifetime they would not partition the family property. This agreement was duly registered three days later, namely, on the 12th June 1908. On 10th June 1908, Ramayya Shanbhogue, the father of the appellant, presented on her behalf a petition to the said Sub-Registrar objecting to the return to Krishna of the two deeds aforesaid until they had been registered, and informing this official of his, the petitioner's intention to institute a suit to secure their compulsory registration.

In answer to this petition the Registrar, on the 19th October 1908, informed the petitioner that the two before-mentioned deeds would be returned to the presentant, AMBA v. SHRINIVASA KAMATHI.

Krishna Kamathi, by the Sub-Registrar of Vittal unless the claimant under the deed of gift obained an injunction order of a competent Court against their return within one month from the receipt of this notice. Accordingly the minor, Amba Bai, by her father as next friend, instituted a suit (No. 44 of 1908) against Krishna Kamathi and her husband to obtain the suggested relief. The 1st defendant, Krishna, then filed a long written statement which is significant in its terms. After admitting that he had executed the two deeds and had presented them for registration, and after stating that his adopted son left his own house and went to reside in the house of his father-in-law at Mangalore for many days, he alleged that Ramayya Shanbhogue, taking advantage of his, Krishna's, old age, disease and helpless condition, had represented to him that the conduct of his son, the 2nd defendant, amounted to deliberate disobedience and to a disregard of his, Krishna's, comforts; that his said son intended to abandon him altogether, and if necessary to marry a third girl or to himself adopt a son; that by these fraudulent misrepresentations the plaintiff, Amba Bai's father, had prevailed upon him, Krishna, to consent to a partition of his property and to make a provision for this girl, his niece, out of his own share; that in this way the two deeds in question were by fraud, misrepresentation and undue influence, procured from him, an old man struck with disease. He further alleged that he only became aware of the effect of the two deeds after he had presented them for registration and, therefore, was entitled to have them returned to him unregistered. And he made the point that the plaintiff, not being a party to the deed of partition, had no right to maintain a suit for its registration under the Registration Act. It clearly appears from these statements that Krishna Kamathi thus early clearly made the case afterwards strenuously insisted upon that the plaintiff's father, for the purpose of procuring for his daughter the benefis conferred upon her by the two before-mentioned deeds, exercised upon Krishna undue influence by the insidious method of poisoning his mind against his adopted son. This suit was dismissed as against Shrinivasa, the appellant's husband, but compromised as between her father on her behalf, and her uncle Krishna. The terms of the compromise were embodied in a deed dated the 29th March 1909, styled in the proceedings the deed of rectification. By this deed it was provided that Krishna would consent and thereby did consent to the registration of the two deeds dated 19th May 1908 and 23rd May, 1908, respectively, and further that the appellant should enjoy the partitioned property subject to certain amendments and conditions therein set out. These alterations and conditions seriously modified and diminished the provision made for Amba Bai by the deed of gift of the 29th May, 1908. For instance, it burdens the property given to her by the latter instrument with a liability to pay Rs. 360 annually to Krishna's wife, Devi. Though providing that he, Krishna, should continue to be her trustee till her majority, it provides that owing to his ill-health her father should manage the property given to her on her behalf. It further provided that though the property given to her by the deed of gift was to be enjoyed by her from generation to generation, if she and her husband came together and lived amicably, and had children, the property was to be enjoyed on that line in succession; but that if she should have no children, and her Savathe (co-wife) should have children, this property should be enjoyed by the latter's descendants after her, Amba's death. Numerous provisions are, in addition, introduced in reference to adoption contingent on the many events named, and then the important provision is introduced that Amba should have no right to alienate the properties given to her in any manner while she behaved herself according to the conditions contained in the deed. This deed was executed by Krishna Kamathi in the presence of many witnesses. It was not executed by Amba Bai nor by her father, Ramayya Shanbhogue, nor by her husband, the respondent. It is obvious that it supersedes the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908. Its aim, object and effect are substantially different. A decree by consent was accordingly made in the compromised suit on the 31st March 1909 in which, after reciting at length the effect of the compromise, it was ordered and decreed "that the partition-deed of the 19th May 1903 and the gift deed of the 23rd May 1908 in dispute be returned to the plaintiff's next friend for presentation before the Sub-Registrar of Vittal, that the Sub-Registrar do register them if they be duly presented before him for registration within thirty days from this date."

The deed of the 29th March 1909 was duly registered. The two deeds of the 19th and 23rd May 1908 were returned to the appellant's father and on the 14th April 1909, the day upon which Krishna Kamathi died, were presented by the appellant's father to the Sub-Registrar and registered.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was, on the 17th August 1914 brought by the appellant, suing in forma pauperis by her father as her next friend, to recover from her husband possession of the property given to her by the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908. On the 26th November the defendant filed a written statement in the suit in which the main defences relied upon were (1) that the execution of these two deeds of May 1908 was procured by the misrepresentation, fraud and undue influense of the father of the plaintiff upon Krishna Kamathi, by whish the mind of the latter was poisoned against the respondent and the said deeds were, therefore, inoperative and unenforceable and not binding upon him; (2) that the compromise of the Suit No. 44 of 1908, and the execution of the deed of the 29th March 1909, respectively, were instituted and procured by similar means, and that the decree made in said suit was void and of no effect; (3) that the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908 was cancelled and annulled by the execution of this rectification deed; and (4) that the registration of the two deeds of May 1908 was invalid and ineffective under the provisions of the Registration Act, and was, therefore, void ab initio.

The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the two deeds of May 1908 were procured by undue influense by the appellant's father exercised upon the respondent's aged father, and were, therefore, void; (2) that the agreement of the 9th June 1908 entered into between the respondent and his father was valid, that the deed of rectification was, therefore, invalid and void, that, therefore, the appellant was not entitled to recover possession of the properties mentioned in the plaint; and (3) that the two deeds of May 1908 were validly registered. He [in the result dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. On the appeal from this decree to the High Court of Madras, Abdur Rahim, J., concurred with the Subordinate Judge's finding that the two last mentioned deeds upon which the appellant's case rested, had been obtained by the undue influence of the appellant's father. Also that the two deeds were repudiated by Krishna Kamathi before they were registered, and that they were not properly presented for registration and were not validly registered.

Oldfield, J., differed from his colleague on the question of the procurement of these deeds by the exercise of undue influence on Krishna Kamathi, but agreed with him in the view that Krishna had the right to revoke the deed of gift of the 23rd May 1908 and had revoked it, and both of these learned Judges held that under the provision of the 32nd section of the Registration Act the two deeds of May 1908 were not validly registered. They accordingly affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships do not think it necessary to pronounce any decision on the question upon which these two learned Judges differed. It was not and is not disputed that these two deeds cannot be given in evidense or enforced if they have not been duly registered. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that as the appellant was not only a minor but a married woman, her father had ceased to be her natural guardian, and had never been appointed her legal guardian, and was not, therefore, her assignee or representative within the meaning of section 3 of the Registration Act, 1877. He was not an executant of the said deeds or either of them; neither was within the meaning of section 34 of that Act the representative, assign or agent duly authorised on the behalf of Krishna Kamathi, deceased, the only executant. The presentation by him of the two deeds for registration was in direct conflict with the express provisions of this 34th section. The deeds were consequently never legally registered. The registration of them which was procured was illegal, invalid and a nullity; and if that be so, as in their Lordships' opinion it must be held to be, it is not disputed that the deeds would be void and unenforceable, and this apart altogether from the question whether they have not been impliedly revoked by the agreement dated the 9th of June 1908 entered into between Krishna Kamathi and the respondent and duly registered by the former on the 12th of June 1908. It is, therefore, unnecessary for their Lordships to expressly decide this latter question. They are of opinion that owing to the invalidity of the registration of the two deeds of May 1908 the appeal fails and must be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Original Suit No. 66 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The oral agreement as to the effect of the cancellation of the contract by the Mills should not have been excluded. It was an independent agreement and related to a matter on which the original agreement, Exhibit A, was silent. It neither contracted nor varied from the terms of Exhibit A. Reference was made to Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (1), Jnanendra Mohan Chowdhury v. Gopal Das Chowdhury (2), Kamla Sahai v. Nandan Mian (3) and Jugtanund Misser v. Nerghan Singh (4).

Mr. V. V. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, (with him Mr. T. Krishnaswamy Aiyangar), for the Respondent.—The oral evidence of the contemporaneous agreement is inadmissible. The damages were fixed by the parties at Rs. 5,000 and the appellants undertook unconditionally to pay it. The effect of letting in the alleged agreement of the respondent with the Mills would be to make the written agreement, Exhibit A, defeasible. The finality of the original agreement would be impaired. See Hitchings and Coulthurst Co. v. Northern Leather Co. of America (5).

SUBBAYYAR v. SUBBARAYALUA IYER.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The appellants, who belong to a trading family, contracted to purchase from the respondents, a similar firm, 50 bales of yarn manufactured by the Madura Mills and actually took delivery of 6 bales. Owing to a fall in prices in the market the appellants were unwilling to receive the remaining 44 bales on the terms agreed upon. The contract was thereupon cancelled on the condition that appellants paid Rs. 5,000 to the respondents to make good their losses upon their contract with the Mills. These Rs. 5,000 were included in a larger sum of Rs, 10,800 which represented the aggregate amount found to be owing by the appellants to the respondents on a settlement of accounts made on February 2nd, 1919, and an unconditional promise to pay Rs. 10,800 to respondants' order on demand was written in the appellant's ledger, (Exhibit A), kept by the respondents and was signed by the appellants.

At the trial in the Sub-Court the appellants sought to prove by oral evidence that there was a contemporaneous agreement, that, in the event of the Mills consenting, to cancel their contract with the respondents, the appellants should be excused from their liability to pay Rs. 5,000 to the respondents.

The Subordinate Judge refused to admit such evidence, holding that to do so would be tantamount to admitting parol evidence of an agreement in defeasance of the written contract contained in Exhibit which was an unconditional contract to pay Rs. 5,000 on demand.

He held that the evidence sought to be admitted was made inadmissible by section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. He further held that the letter (Exhibit II) written on the same date as the promise to pay in Exhibit A did not amount to a written agreement varying the terms of the first agreement.

Mr. Anantha Krishna Iyer argued that the evidence that was excluded was evidence of a separate oral agreement as to a matter on which Exhibit A was silent and which was not inconsistent with its terms. He drew our attention to the case of Motabhoy Mulla Essabhoy v. Mulji Haridas (6) as being an instance of the application of proviso (2) of section 92. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in that case went into the evidence observing that it would not be satisfactory to decide against the defendant on a view which might have been obviated by a mere amendment of the pleadings. So in this case I have considered, whether, if the respondents' suit had not been based on the accounts but had been brought to recover damages on account of the appellant's breach of countract in respect of the 44 bales which they refused to receive, it would have been open to them to plead in mitigation of the damages due upon their breach of contract that the respondents had not suffered to the extent claimed by them owing to the Madura Mills having excused them from their liability to receive the remaining bales from the Mills. After full consideration I have come to the conclusion that the result would be the same. When the promise in Exhibit A to pay Rs. 10,800 to respondents' order on demand was signed there was an unconditional agreement to pay Rs. 5,000 as liquidated damages for the cancellation of the order for the remaining 44 bales. No doubt Exhibit A is not a very formal document and there are no calculations to show how the firgure Rs. 5,000 was arrived at. But on the strength of the promise to pay on demand, the respondents might have called on the appellants to pay the sum of Rs. 10,800 the next minute after they had signed Exhibit A and it would then have been inconsistent with the unconditional nature of that promise to set up a contemporaneous undertaking that the respondent would re-pay the sum of Rs. 5,000 paid as compensation in the event of the Mills allowing them to countermand their order, as to do so would be to destroy the finality of the settlement then made which was irrespective of the respondents' liability to the Mills. In the respondents' letter, Exhibit I, there is no acceptance of the proposal in Exhibit II that the compensation should be returned if the Mills were prepared to cancel the order for bales of quality Nos. 50 and 44. In Motabhoy Mulla Essabhoy v. Mulji Haridas (6) the separate oral agreement that the money paid on December 23rd, 1907, should be treated as a pre-payment in lieu of the advance due on January 30th, 1908, and that in satisfaction of the promissory note of December 23rd the payee should give the holder an acknowledgment of the receipt of the instalment due on the later date was held to be an agreement which could be proved under proviso (2) to section 92. There the oral agreement was quite distinct from the agreement under the promissory-note and not inconsistent with it. The facts of the case before us are more analogous to those in Hitchings and Coulthurst Co. v. Northern Leather Co. of America (5) where Bailhache, J. held that an oral agreement that the defendant would not pay if the goods supplied to his Company should be unequal to sample was an agreement in defeasance of the contract to pay contained in the promissory note, and evidence to prove it was inadmissible.

In Ramjibun Serowgy v. Oghore Noth Chatterjee (7) there was an attempt to set up an oral agreement restricting the absolute engagement in a promissory note to pay on demand and to bring it under proviso (3) which relates to agreements constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of an obligation under the contract, and it was ruled out as being an agreement to postpone the legal obligation to perform a promise which was absolute in its terms.

Although the alleged agreement in the present case not to enforce the absolute promise to pay on demand is not put forward as a condition precedent to the attaching of the obligation to pay, it is an agreement which would have the effect of converting an absolute unconditional promise into a conditional, defeasible one.

The other cases cited in the arguments are not of much assistance. Goseti Subba-Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (1) is an authority on the application of proviso (4). Jnanendra Mohan Choudhury v. Gopal Das Choudhury (2) is an authority on section 91. Kamla Sahai v. Nandan Mian (3) deals with an agreement de hors section 92 altogether, as it provided for the discharge of a debt secured by a mortgage deed by means of putting the mortgagee in possession and letting him enjoy the profits of the mortgaged property. Jugtanund Misser v. Nerghan Singh (4) simply laid down that evidence of part performance of a contract negatived a plea that there was an oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the contract becoming enforceable.

I think that the appellants' contentions are not acceptable and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree both with the conclusion of my learned brother and with his reasons for arriving at that conclusion.

MADHO DAS v. GOKAL DAS.

JUDGMENT.—On 14th June 1919 Fateh Din got a decree for possession of certain property against Waris under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. On the 1st December 1919 Waris in a regular suit against Fateh Din was granted a declaratory decree to the effect that part of the property which was the subject of the suit under section 9 belonged to him. Subsequently Fateh Din applied for execution of his decree and the Munsif rejected the application on the ground that his decree had been set aside by the declaratory decree obtained by Waris. Fateh Din appealed and the Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal accepted it and directed that the First Court should execute Fateh Din's decree in respect of the portion of the site as to which no declaration had been given. Waris has filed a second appeal to this Court and it is contended on his behalf that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge from the order of the Munsif rejecting the application for execution. It was held by a single Judge of the Chief Court in a case reported as Mohfuz Ali v. Birji Nand Kerat (1) that an order passed in execution of a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act was not appealable. This decision was based upon Thomas Souza v. Gulam Moidin Beari (2). Kanai Lal Ghose v. Jatindra Nath Chandra (3), in which the Punjab ruling and the Madras ruling were approved, is to the same effect. I, therefore, hold that no appeal from the order rejecting Fateh Din's application for execution was competent and that the Senior Subordinate Judge in hearing the appeal acted without jurisdiction. As no appeal lay I hold that no second appeal lies from the order of the lower Appellate Court, but revision is competent under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad for the respondent contends that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge does substantial justice and that, therefore, this Court should not interfere on the revision side. There is force in this contention. I have myself perused the records, both of the suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act and of the declaratory suit, and I find that the latter was not in regard to the whole of the land about which the first suit was brought. There is no reason why Fateh Din should not be allowed to execute his decree in respect of that portion of the site which was not the subject of the declaratory suit. The Senior Subordinate Judge says that Lala Iqbal Rai's decree covers only the red portion of the property shown in the "plan attached to the plaint in that case." It is doubtful whether this is correct. The Executing Court should itself examine the plans and the measurements given in both the suits and should decide to what extent Fateh Din can execute his decree.

No second appeal lies, and for the reasons given above I decline to interfere in revision. Costs of this Court shall be borne by the parties.

The question as to what is and what is not earnest money turns on the construction of the document which contains the contract, but where there is no written contract, the question must be decided

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted a suit for the recovery of a sum of money which, he stated, he had paid in excess to the defendants. The facts, as found by the Courts below, are that the plaintiff agreed to purchase 20 bales of cloth from the defendants; that he broke his contract to the extent that he refused to take delivery of 11 bales of cloth. He took delivery of 9 bales and refused to take delivery of the remainder. It is further found that the plaintiff paid Rs. 1,000 on one occasion, Rs. 1,000 on a second occasion before he received any cloth, and that he subsequently paid Rs. 4,950, Rs. 4,675 and Rs. 1,236. He thus paid Rs. 12,861 in all and took delivery of 9 bales of cloth which were priced at Rs. 11,305-15-0. This left a balance of Rs. 1,556-1-0 which the plaintiff has sued to recover from the defendants. The lower Courts have dismissed his suit holding that he had agreed to pay Rs. 2,000 earnest-money and that he had actually paid Rs. 2,000 earnest-money and that, inasmuch as he had broken the contract, he forfeited his earnest-money and was, therefore, not entitled to recover anything. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff, who appeals before us, has scrupulously confined himself to the points of law which are open to him in second appeal. He does not contest, in addition, the findings of the Courts below in every particular. He admits the facts as we have stated them with the exception that he denies that Rs. 2,000 were paid as earnest-money. He says that Rs. 1,000 only were paid as earnest money. Thus he has argued before us only in favour of a relief of Rs. 556-1-0 with interest. The law in respect of what is and what is not earnest-money, in a contract of such a nature as the present, and the liability to forfeiture of such earnest-money in respect of a failure to perform the contract, is laid down in the leading case of Howe v. Smith (1). There the decision as to what was and what was not earnest-money, turns on the construction of the document which contained the contract, and it was stated by Bowen, L. J., at page 97, that in each case it is a question of construction. When, as is the case here, there is no written contract, the point as to determination of what is and what is not earnest-money, must be decided according to the evidence on the record and becomes a point of fact. This being the case, the finding of the lower Appellate Court, which we can only interpret as a finding that Rs. 2,000 were paid as earnest-money, would conclude the matter. It has, however, been argued with skill by the learned Counsel for the appellant that, in view of the defendants' own written statement, it was not open to the defendants to suggest that more than Rs. 1,000 had been paid as earnest-money, and his plea at first sight finds support from the wording of the second paragraph of the written statement. The wording of this paragraph is not, however, such as to exclude the possibility of the plea that Rs. 2,000 had been paid as earnest-money. Reading paragraphs 1 and 2 together, we understand the plea to be that Rs. 2,000 were paid as earnest-money, and it is perfectly clear from the proceedings that as soon as the suit came to trial, the defendants urged that Rs. 2,000 had been paid as earnest-money and based practically the whole of their defence upon that plea. In these circumstances, we consider that it was open to the Courts below to decide as they have decided, that Rs. 2,000 were paid as earnest-money and we cannot interfere with that decision as it is a decision of fact. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delbi, dated the 1st August 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhajjar, District Rohtak, dated the 14th January 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Jogan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the landlords in this case and they sue for possession of the occupancy land held by the late Sarjit. The defendant Hardat is a collateral of Sarjit and claims that he has a right to succeed to his occupancy land by reason of adoption. If the adoption is a valid adoption in Hindu Law, then, admittedly, the defendant has a right to succeed to the land: while if it is not a valid adoption, then it can count no higher than the customary adoption of an heir, and in this case the defendant cannot succeed. The First Court decreed the claim holding that the adoption was merely one under Customary Law and was equivalent to the appointment of an heir. The learned District Judge noting that the parties reside in the Rohtak District in which District adoptions under Hindu Law are commonly found, held that the adoption was one under Hindu Law, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court and on their behalf Mr. Shamair Chand argues that the adoption cannot possibly be recognised as valid under Hindu Law, because the adopted person was a married man.

The parties are Jats, and Counsel on both sides are agreed that they must be regarded as Sudras. There are rulings of the Bombay High Court to the effect that marriage is no bar to adoption among Sudras provided that the person adopted is of the same gotra as the adopter. [See Dharma Dagu v. Ramkrishna Chimnaji (1).] The Madras and Allahabad High Courts, however, hold a different view. In Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan (2) it is held that a married person cannot be adopted. The learned Judge referred to the Bombay cases and stated that they proceeded on texts which have no authority in the Madras Presidency and that, apart from the Bombay cases, no text or other authority were cited to justify an adoption taking place after marriage. The learned Judges held further that even among Sudras, an adoption, in order to be valid, must take place before the marriage of the adopted son. The same view as regards the higher classes is held in Rup Chand v. Jambu Parshad (3) where their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "There is no longer any question that by the general Hindu Law applicable to the twice-born classes, a boy cannot be adopted after his marriage," and in Jhunka Prasad v. Nathu (4) the learned Judges held that an adoption, in order to be valid even among Sudras, must take place before the marriage of the adopted son. The rule seems to be as laid down in Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 141, that among the twice-born classes a boy may be adopted at any time before his investiture with the sacred thread and that among Sudras an adoption is valid only up to the time of marriage and not later.

(4) 18 Ind. Cas. 960; 35 A. 268; 11 A. L. J. 293,

Counsel for the defendant urges that Hindu Law is not strictly followed in the Punjab and he cites as an instance Hari Kishen v. Chandu Lal (5) where it is laid down that a son cannot compel partition in the lifetime of his father. The ruling in this case, however, seems to follow the provisions of the Punjab Civil Code. As regards adoption, I know of only two forms in the Punjab, viz., adoption amongst agriculturists of the greater part of the Province, which is, strictly speaking, not an adoption but merely the customary appointment of an heir, and adoption under Hindu Law as practised in the south-east part of the Punjab. In order that the adopted person may succeed to the occupancy land left by the adopter, the adoption must be under Hindu Law, and must, in my opinion, comply with the requirements of that law as applicable to the parties concerned.

According to the Benares School the adoption of a married man even among Sudras is invalid, I do not say that a custom could not be pleaded as applicable to the parties concerned and authorising an adoption of a married person, but certainly no such custom has been proved in the present case for the simple reason that no such special custom was ever pleaded. The plaintiffs pleaded generally that there was no adoption and the defendant pleaded an adoption, and the issue framed by the lower Court was whether the defendant had become legally an adopted son. Thus it was for the defendant to prove an adoption legal according to the Hindu Law. He has failed to do so, and I think the plaintiffs must succeed. At the same time the particular question which has been raised before me, namely, the question of marriage being a bar to adoption under Hindu Law does not seem to have been pleaded specifically in the lower Courts, and, therefore, I shall not allow costs. I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge dismissing the suit, I restore the decree of the First Court but leave the parties to bear their own costs in all Courts.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, and Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have heard Counsel on both sides in this appeal and have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong and must be set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored.

The suit was a suit in ejectment brought by two plaintiffs, Baijnath and L. Bankey Lal.

It appears that there is in Agra a body known as the Islamia Committee which is entrusted with the duty of looking after the Jama Masjid.

It appears that attached to the Masjid there are certain shops and for the purpose of providing funds for the upkeep of the mosque, it has been the practice of this Committee to make arrangements for the leasing out of these shops so as to secure a ragular income.

In their plaint the plaintiffs stated that they were the lessees of these shops on behalf of the Islamia Committee under a lease executed in their favour for a period of five years with effect from the 1st April 1919. The allegation was that Muhammed Ismail was in possession at the time the lease was granted in favour of the plaintiffs. He was told to quit but refused to give up possession: hence this suit for ejectment and also for damages in the way of rent for occupation.

The defendant took a number of pleas. He asserted, in the first place, that the plaintiffs had no title to bring a suit as they were not lawfully lessees on behalf of the Islamia Committee. It was pleaded that the Islmia Committee had no power to give these plaintiffs a lease for the shops for a period of five years. The defendant also denied that he was the tenant of the plaintiffs. Further, it was pleaded that, in any case, if he was deemed to be the plaintiffs' tenant, the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as no proper notice to vacate had been given to him. The Court of first instance decreed the suit but the lower Appellate Court has reversed the First Court's decree, and the first question we have to consider is the legal position of the plaintiffs in the present case.

The view taken by the Judge was that according to Muhammadan Law the mutwalli of a trust property has no authority to grant a lease of house property for a period exceeding one year. In the view of the learned Judge the Islamia Committee stood in the same position with regard to the property in question as a mutwalli. Consequently the learned Judge was of opinion that the lease in favour of the plaintiffs conveyed no valid title to them.

In our opinion this view of the learned Judge is erroneous.

We have to refer, in the first instance, to the Bengal Regulation XIX of 1810. That was a Regulation passed in order to secure the due appropriation of rents and produce of lands granted for the support of mosques, Hindu temples, colleges and other pious purposes, and from the preamble to the Regulation it is made to appear that this legislation was undertaken by reason of the fact that there was mismanagement or want of management on the part of persons responsible in connection with property which had been endowed for the upkeep of religious buildings such as those which we have mentioned. It was declared, therefore, by the Regulation (section 2) that the general superintendence of all lands granted for the support of mosques, Hindu temples, colleges and for other pious and beneficial purposes was vested in the Board of Revenue and Board of Commissioners in the several Districts subject to the control of these Boards respectively.

The words of this section are as general as they can be, and it is to be noticed that the language of the section itself imports no restriction on the power of the Board of Revenue in the management of the lands referred to in the section. We may also in this connection refer to the terms of section 4 of the Regulation which lays down that in cases where buildings have fallen into decay and cannot be conveniently repaired, the Boards shall recommend that they be sold by public auction or otherwise disposed of as may appear most expedient.

This arrangement for the management of property dedicated to the support of religious institutions remained in force for many years but was ultimately put an end to by the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act XX of 1863. It was then declared that it was no longer expedient that the Board of Revenue should be entrusted with the powers of management assigned to it under the Bengal Regulation, and arrangements were made whereby the duties and powers of the Board of Revenue were to be assigned to Committees, or, in cases where there were properly appointed trustees of the property for the transfer of the Board's powers to these trustees. The relevent section we have to consider in this connection is section 7 which lays down that in all cases described in section 3 of the Act the Local Government shall once for all appoint one or more Committees in every Division or District to take the place and exercise the powers of the Board of Revenue and local agents under the Regulation hereby repealed.

There can be no doubt that the Islamia Committee is a Committee which was appointed under section 7 of Act XX of 1863, and, consequently, it must be taken that they were appointed to take the place of and to exercise the powers of the Board of Revenue.

The learned Judge, as we have said, was of opinion that when the Board of Revenue took over the duties of superintendence under Regulation XIX of 1810, it was necessarily governed by the rules of Muhammadan Law relating to the powers of a mutwalli to lease trust property. We can find no warrant for this opinion in the language of the Regulation itself, and indeed, as we have pointed out, the language of section 4 which directed that the Board should in certain cases recommend the sale of religious buildings, is altogether inconsistent with the provisions of Muhammadan Law. It seems to us that the proper view is that in taking over the duties of management of these trust properties the Board of Revenue was entrusted with all reasonable powers which might be exercised for the benefit of the trust.

We may mention, moreover, that the provisions of the Muhammadan Law are not quite so rigid as the learned Judge seems to have understood. It is quite true that there was a rule laid down with regard to house property that a mutwalli should not in general be authorised to make a lease of such property for a period longer than one year, but there was this qualification attached to it, namely, that in all cases the Qazi might empower the mutwalli to grant leases for longer periods if he thought that such a grant was for the benefit of the trust estate.

If we were really called upon to decide whether the action of the Islamia Committee in leasing out this property for a period of five years to the plaintiffs was justifiable we should have no difficulty in finding that this course is really in the best interests of the property. It could hardly be expected in modern times that any person would be willing to take a lease of a shop from which he would necessarily have to be removed at the expiry of one year. Further, it is not to be doubted that this arrangement by which the Committee hands over the control of the property to thekadar for a period of five years, is, from their point of view, a most convenient arrangement. It secures to the Committee a regular income which they can collect without any trouble. The Committee is saved the expense and trouble of maintaining a staff to collect the rents and otherwise look after the property, and, further, it seems to be quite clear that by this arrangement they are enabled to get as high a rent as they could possibly expect to obtain. The procedure seems to be that the Committee puts up the theka for auction for a period of five years and hands over the theka to the highest bidder.

We are of opinion, therefore, that no question can possibly arise regarding the right of the present plaintiffs to maintain this suit in ejectment. We have read the document by which the theka was granted to the plaintiffs and from that it is apparent that they have been vested with full control over the shops in dispute. They are under an obligation to pay monthly to the Committee a sum of Rs. 700 and it is declared in the deed that the lessees are to be entitled to get any rents they can from the persons to whom they let out the shops. They are given full powers to eject tenants and to make all arrangements which are necessary for the renting out of the property.

The next question that arises is, whether the defendant was entitled to raise a plea that he could not be ejected without notice. It is perfectly clear from the pleadings and also from other evidence in the case that the defendant has denied the right of the plaintiffs and he has been maintaining that he is a tenant not of the plaintiffs but of the Islamia Committee. As regards this latter contention, there is no evidence whatever and it seems to us to be clear on all hands that he has never been at any time, regarding which we have any evidence, a tenant holding directly under the Committee.

It seems to be true that the defendant has been in occupation of some of these shops for a number of years. On the other hand, we have evidence to show that for the last 15 or 20 years at least the Islamia Committee has been in the habit of giving these five years' leases to thekadars, and the obvious inference is that the defendant must have been admitted to occupation of these shops under a grant made by the thekadars. We cannot for a moment allow the plea that the defendant is a tenant holding directly from the Committee.

Then as regards the present plaintiffs whose lease, as we have said, dates from the 1st April 1919, it is clear on all hands that the defendant is nothing more than a trespasser. Some stress has been laid in the Courts below upon a previous litigation between the defendant and previous thekadars. It seems that prior to the date of the lease in favour of the plaintiffs, attempt had been made by the previous thekadars to eject the defendant. The case was compromised under some arrangement by which the defendant vacated some of the shops in his possession and came to an understanding with the then thekadars that the rent for the remaining shops was not to be enhanced nor was he to be ejected from them before the 31st March 1919, that being the date upon which the lease of the previous thekadars expired.

The fact that this arrangement was made with the previous thekadars cannot help the defendant in the present case. The previous lessees were in control of the property only for the period of the lease which had been given to them by the Committee and they could not, either by agreement or otherwise, confer upon the defendant a right to occupy the shops beyond the period of their own theka, which, as we have said, came to an end on the 31st March 1919. The result, therefore, is that when the lease of the present plaintiffs came into existence, the defendant was in possession under some arrangement made with the earlier lessees—an arrangement which the present plaintiffs are in no way bound to recognize. The defendant cannot, therefore, be heard to say that any tenancy exists which under the law must be put an end to by the giving of a regular notice as required by the Transfer of Property Act. He has besides denied the title of the present plaintiffs. He is nothing more than a trespasser and he is in no way entitled to notice.

We hold, therefore, that the rights of the case are with the plaintiffs and we allow this appeal accordingly, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore the decree of the Court of first instance.

As a general rule, a grandson of a first cousin has no right to succeed to the rights of a non-proprietor in a village.

(Case-law reviewed.)

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpore, dated the 7th November 1918, affirming that of the Honorary Munsif, Second Class, Shamasabad, District Attock, dated the 12th January 1918.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to a house in a village which was occupied by one Aziz Ullah. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of the site. Aziz Ullah, the non-proprietor, has died and Sher Dil, whose grandfather was a first cousin of Aziz Ullah, has taken possession of the house. The plaintiffs sued for possession and the lower Court has decreed the suit, and the District Judge has dismissed the appeal holding that by custom Sher Dil is not entitled to succeed. Sher Dil has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

On behalf of the plaintiffs a preliminary objection is raised that the appeal cannot be entertained as there is no certificate. It is to be noted that the District Judge has treated Sher Dil as a collateral in the 5th degree, whereas according to the proper method of computing degree of relationship Sher Dil must be regarded as a collateral in the third degree, being a great-great-grandson of Sharaf, the grandfather of Aziz Ullah. It is urged that this mistake on the part of the District Judge has vitiated his judgment and, consequently, a second appeal lies. It is urged that the real question is whether a collateral in the third degree is entitled to succeed and that this is not the question which has been decided by the District Judge who has treated the question as if it were one whether a collateral in the fifth degree is entitled to succeed. Whether the flaw in the District Judge's judgment is such as to absolve the appellant in this Court from the necessity of producing a certificate for second appeal seems to me a question of some difficulty. I have, therefore, given the appellant the benefit of doubt and have heard arguments on the merits.

Both sides produced witnesses but no instances of succession relating to this particular village have been cited. The decision must, therefore, rest on cases already decided in Court. Firstly, there is a Division Bench case in Sher Jang v. Munshi Ram (1). This is a recent ruling bearing date 16th November 1921. I fail, however, to see how it helps me as it is a case relating to a village in the Hoshiarpur District, and the claimant whose claim to succeed was then disallowed was a collateral in the fourth degree.

In Kalu v. Pir Bakhsh (2) the claim of a brother was allowed.

In Kala v. Hasham (3) the claim of nephews was allowed. This was a Gujrat case.

In Beli Ram v. Umar Bakhsh (4) an uncle was allowed to succeed. This was a case from the Gujranwala District.

In Ata Ali Khan v. Kala (5), a first cousin was allowed to succeed. This case, like the one before us, came from the Attock District.

Then there are the four rulings quoted under Art. 138 A in Rattigan's Digest.

In Attra v. Moda (6), collaterals in the fourth degree were held to be not entitled to succeed.

In Wali Muhammad Khan v. Surji (7), a first cousin was allowed to succeed.

In Karam Chand v. Hakam Singh (8), collaterals in the sixth and seventh degree were held to be not entitled to succeed.

Bug v. Asad Ali (9) does not seem to me a relevant ruling.

The rulings seem to sum up to this that no collateral in the second degree has even been barred and that no collateral beyond the third degree has ever succeeded. We have the case of an uncle succeeding [Beli Ram v. Umar Bakhsh (4)] and two cases of first cousins succeeding [Ata Ali Khan v. Kala (5) and Wali Muhammad Khan v. Surji (7).] There is no case apparently of a first cousin having been held to be not entitled to succeed, but the claimant in the present case is not himself the first cousin but is the grandson of a first cousin. No doubt according to the method of computation adopted in the Punjab he must be called a collateral in the third degree. According to the method adopted in England he would be described as a first cousin twice removed.

Now, as regards the succession to proprietary rights, the principle of representation generally recognized in the Punjab is that if a man be dead his place is taken by his son, or, if the son also be dead, by the grandson and in such a case the son or grandson is in just as good a position as the father or grandfather. But I am not at all sure that it can be said that this principle of representation applies to all cases including cases of succession to the rights of a non-proprietor in a village. It is not for me to draw analogies and to guess what the custom is or should be; I can only go by evidence and see what custom is really proved to exist. I have been unable to find a case in which the son or grandson of a first cousin has ever been held to be entitled to succeed, and, therefore, I am not prepared to hold that a grandson of a first cousin has any right of succession. I, therefore, think that the learned District Judge's decision is correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

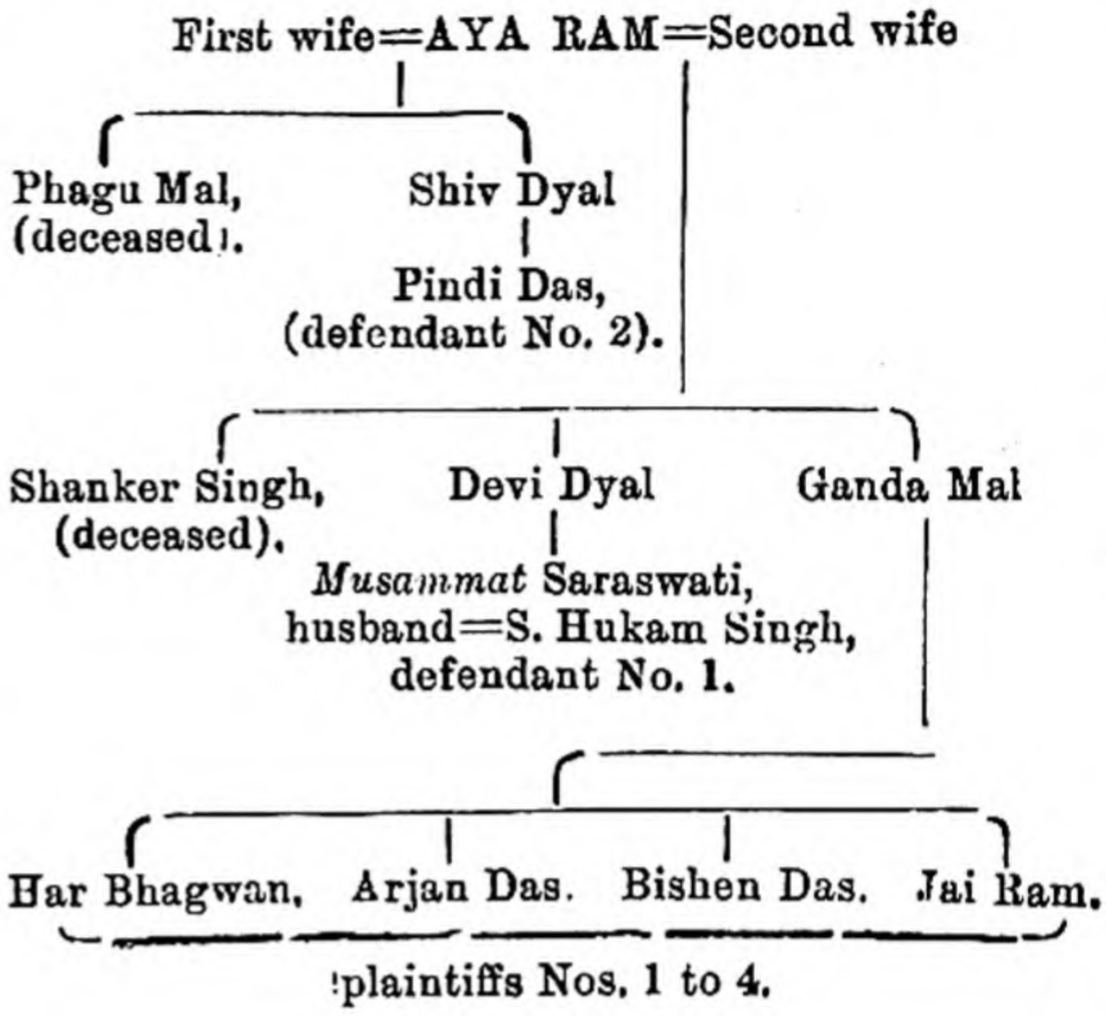
JUDGMENT.—The pedigree-table given below illustrates the relationship between the parties:—



Devi Dyal, son of Aya Ram, was murdered on the 27th December 1907, along with his wife, Musammat Jamna Devi. It was found that Ganda Mal, real brother of Devi Dyal, was responsible for this double murder and he was tried for this offence and convicted. He was sentenced to be hanged and the sentence was duly executed. He left four minor sons behind him, two of whom have now attained their majority and have brought this suit, on their own behalf and on behalf of their minor brothers, for possession of four squares of land in the Lyallpur District which belonged to Devi Dyal deceased They have also sued for the recovery of Rs. 8,000, as mesne profits for four years and for future mesne profits. Their suit has been dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge and they have preferred this appeal against the orders of the Senior Subordinate Judge through Mr. Moti Sagar. Certain cross objections with regard to the findings of the Court, regarding two side issues in the case, relating to the alleged adoption of one Balwant Singh by Musammat Saraswati, daughter of Devi Dyal, and to a Will made by her in favour of the former have been filed on behalf of the respondents by Pandit Sheo Narain and this order will dispose of the appeal as well as the cross-objections. We have heard Mr. Moti Sagar for the appellants and Mr. Sheo Narain for Hukam Singh respondent and have also heard Mr. Tek Chand who represents Pindi Das, the son of step-brother of Devi Dyal, deceased, who had been impleaded as a defendant, because he was a possible heir and also on the ground that he had executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs transferring his rights, if any, in the property of the deceased, to the plaintiffs for Rs. 500, but he denied the receipt of any consideration for this document and contended that it was not admissible in evidence.

Another brief reference to the history of the case may be made before considering the various points which are in dispute between the parties. On the death of Devi Dyal the whole of his land was mutated in favour of his daughter, Musammat Saraswati, on the 6th June 1908 and she continued to be in possession of it till she died on the 8th May 1914. She had no children of her own, but it is stated by her husband Hukam Singh, defendant No. 1, that she had adopted Balwant Singh, son of Gopal Singh, brother of Hukam Singh, as her son, and had executed a Will (Exhibit D-1) in Balwant Singh's favour on the 6th May 1914, i. e., two days before her death. It is also said that she had the power to adopt him and to leave the whole property to him, because she had got an absolute estate on the death of her father, by virtue of a letter dated the 26th Decemer 1907, written by Devi Dayal making her the owner of the whole of his property, which may be taken to amount to a Will in her favour. On the death of Musammat Saraswati the land in dispute was mutated in favour of her husband, Hukam Singh, who is still in possession of it. On the 21st May 1918 the plaintiffs brought their suit relying on their relationship with the deceased and claiming to be entitled to succeed to the property after Musammat Saraswati. They alleged, that their father and Devi Dyal deceased were members of a joint Hindu family and that the property had been acquired by Devi Dyal by paying for the proprietary rights in the squares in question out of the joint family funds. They denied that there was any Will in favour of Musammat Saraswati or that Hukam Singh had any right to hold the property. They also added that Pindi Das had no rights in the property and that if he had any they had now purchased the same from him. Hukam Singh pleaded in reply that the plaintiffs had lost all rights to inherit the property of Devi Dyal, deceased, because their father had been guilty of murdering him and joined issue with them on the other points urged by them and added that Balwant Singh should also have been impleaded. For reasons given in his judgment the Senior Subordinate Judge did not add Balwant Singh as a party to the suit and the points in dispute have been fought between the plaintiffs on the one hand and Hukam Singh and Pindi Das on the other.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge framed no less than ten issues in this case and subsequently added two more at a very late stage, but it does not appear to be necessary to discuss most of those issues at any great length in this judgment, because some of them are no longer disputed, while others are not very seriously pressed, and the case hinges practically on the decision of Issue No. 7, as to the sons of Ganda Mal being excluded or not from inheriting the property of their deceased uncle, who met with his death at the hands of their father.

Perhaps, it would be convenient to take up first the issue which can be easily disposed of before taking up what is now the main issue in the case. The issue as to the existance of a joint Hindu family has not been proved by the plaintiffs. In fact it is noted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs' Counsel gave up this contention while arguing the case. Before us also this issue has not been urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants. The fact that the property was self-acquired is also not disputed before us and cannot be disputed, because the existence of no joint funds is proved. Issue No. 2 has thus been rightly decided against the plaintiffs. Under these circumstances, it is conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellants that so far as the succession of Musammat Saraswati to the property of her father is concerned, it was perfectly in accord with Hindu Law, by which the parties are admittedly governed. He contends, however, that all that Musammat Saraswati had, was a limited estate for life and that since her death the succession has opened out for the reversioners of Devi Dyal and that the plaintiffs as his nephews are entitled to it. He denies that Musammat Saraswati ever got an absolute estate or obtained any rights under the so called Will dated the 26th December, 1907. This brings us to a consideration of the question whether this document is genuine or not and whether it amounts to a Will. Mr. Moti Sagar argues that this letter is a piece of forgery and was regarded with suspicion by the Sessions Judge when it was produced before him in the trial of Ganda Mal for the murder of Devi Dyal and has been similarly suspected and rejected by the Senior Subordinate Judge in the present suit. It is marked as Exhibit D 3 and is printed at page 26 of the printed record. It is written in Urdu in the handwriting of one Gurdas (D. W. No. 13) and purports to have been signed in Hindi by Devi Dyal, deceased. It is addressed to Hukam Singh and desires him to come to take charge of the land, declaring Musammat Saraswati to be the owner of it and authorising Hukam Singh to treat the letter as a Will, as Ganda Mal was troubling him (Devi Dyal) very much. D. W. No. 13, Gurdas, while admitting that he wrote this letter, states that he did so after the death of Devi Dyal, at the instance of Hukam Singh and the Sub-Inspector of Police. Gurdas also states that the Hindi signature at the end of it was not put there in his presence. Pandit Sheo Narain argues that the Court below has erred in insisting on any formal proof of this document, as a Hindu Will does not require any technical evidence to prove it and does not stand in need of any attestation. He also urges that there was no motive to fabricate this letter, because the proof against Ganda Mal in the murder case was so clear that this letter could hardly strengthen the case against him and there was no occassion at that stage to fabricate any evidence in advance for the purposes of civil litigation which might follow. We are not, however, pressed by the argument of the learned Counsel in support of this document. Much technical proof may not be necessary for a Hindu Will, but there must be some evidence to show that a document purporting to be a Will by a Hindu was executed by him. Here that evidence is absolutely wanting. It is true that the witness Gurdas, in his statement in the murder case before the Sessions Judge, deposed that the letter was dictated to him by Devi Dyal and was signed by him in his presence, but when he was confronted with that statement he explained that he had made it under undue influence. Whatever may be the truth, so far as the two statements of Gurdas are concerned, he has, at any rate, shown himself to be a man on whom no reliance can be placed and yet he was the only men who was produced to prove this so-called Will and failed to do so. Moreover, there are, as pointed out by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, many other things which make this document open to serious suspicion. It is curious that it was addressed to Haranpur and not to Sargodha where the addressee was living. It was at a late stage of the investigation in the criminal case that it was produced by Hukam Singh and the explanation he and his father gave of the way in which its delivery to either of them was delayed is far from satisfactory. We think that this document is not genuine and has been rightly rejected. The questions as to the adoption of Balwant Singh and of the execution of a Will by Musammat Saraswati have also been argued before us, but in view of our finding given above as to the alleged Will in favour of Musammat Saraswati herself, we think it unnecessary to discuss the pros and cons of these two questions. Her right to adopt depended on her having an absolute estate and as we find that there was no Will in her favour and that she had nothing more than a limited estate, an adoption by her, even if it were proved, would hardly be of any consequence. We agree, however, with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in thinking that the adoption has not been established. With regard to the Will of Musammat Saraswati in favour of Balwant Singh it has been found by the Trial Court that the Will was probably approved of by Musammat Saraswati, but it is open to doubt that she had a disposing mind at the time, owing to her extremely week condition at the time the Will was prepared. It has been rightly observed that if Balwant Singh had been adopted, there was no necessity to have a Will in his favour and it seems that Hukam Singh in his desire to retain the property of his deceased wife in his hands, has been resorting to various devices and the idea of getting a Will from Musammat Saraswati shortly before her death was one of those devices. Thus the pleas of the defendants as to the Will, Exhibit D-3, and the adoption of Balwant Singh and the Will dated the 6th May 1914, fail, and we come to the important issue relating to the rights of the plaintiffs as the nephews of Devi Dyal and to the question whether they are affected or not by their father having murdered Devi Dyal in order to take his land.

Mr. Moti Sagar started his argument on the main issue by questioning the finding of the Court below as to Ganda Mal having murdered his brother with the object of taking his land. He argues that it is not enough for the purposes of a case like the present to show that a man has been convicted of the offence of murder by a Criminal Court, the findings of which are not in any way binding on the Civil Courts, and that it must be shown by positive and reliable evidence that the murder was committed by the man whom it is sought to deprive of any property he would have otherwise inherited or whose descendants are to be shut off from their heritage on grounds of public policy. This proposition is correct so far as it goes. The finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge is in no way based on that of the Sessions Judge in the criminal case but is arrived at independently after considering the evidence on this record about the facts of the murder. Three witnesses have been examined on this point. Dittu (D. W. No. 14), Musammat Bhagwan Devi (D. W. No. 17) and Arura (D. W. No. 18). The last named witness professes to have seen Ganda Mal giving toka blows to Devi Dyal and afterwards to strike Musammat Jamna Devi. He is a man who made a statement to the Police on the day of the occurrence and gave evidence at the Sessions trial and was believed. Musammat Bhagwan Devi is the mother of the plaintiffs and the widow of Ganda Mal. She says that her husband killed Musammat Jamna Devi and that on the same day Devi Dyal was found killed, though she came to know of it after witnessing the murder of Musammat Jamna Devi. Dittu (D. W. No. 14) heard the outcry of Musammat Jamna Devi and went to the spot. She was murdered in his presence, but Devi Dyal had been killed already in the same house. Mr. Moti Sagar's contention is that this evidence is hardly sufficient to prove that the father of the plaintiffs was the murderer of Devi Dyal. We do not see, however, any force in this contention and have no hesitation in believing the statement of Arura, who saw the whole of the occurrence, and the statements of Musammat Bhagwan Devi and Dittu, who saw the latter part of the occurrence and whose evidence clearly points to Ganda Mal being the perpetrator of the double murder. We have no doubt that Ganda Mal murdered his brother, with the object of taking his land.

From the above question of fact Mr. Moti Sagar passes on to a point of law and argues that even if it is found that Ganda Mal was the murderer of his brother this should not deprive the plaintiffs of their rights to the estate of Devi Dyal, because under Hindu Law they do not derive those rights from their father but they have their own rights from the moment of their birth and are heirs to their uncle. He says he is aware that the Punjab Chief Court has ruled in Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1), that the descendants of a murderer are precluded from inheriting the property of the person murdered, where the sole object of the crime was to secure the property of the latter, as such a succession is opposed to public policy. He also to refers an unpublished* Division Bench ruling of this Court, Jind Kaur v. Indar Singh, Second Appeal No. 252 of 1919, which has followed Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1) but adds that both those rulings are under Customary Law and an heir under the Hindu Law stands on a different footing from that of a reversioner under the Customary Law of the Punjab. It is contended that so far as the texts of the Hindu Law are concerned there is no prohibition against even a murderer succeeding to the property of the man whom he has murdered, but an inference has been drawn from one or two texts and it has been held that the murderer himself may be excluded under Hindu Law on the ground of public policy. It is urged that it would be wrong to extend the disability to the sons and other descendants of the murderer simply on the ground of public policy in cases where the personal law of the parties does not justify such an extension and where such descendants were absolutely innocent of the offence in question, as they admittedly were in this case.

Mr. Moti Sagar cites the Mitakshara, translated by Macnaghten and Colebrooke, page 373, where Yajnawalkya thus propounded an exception to the ordinary rule of succession. According to Hindu Law "an impotent person, an outcast, and his issue, one lame, a madman, an idiot, a blind man, and a person afflicted with an incurable disease" are excluded from participation. He points out that the murderer is not excluded and that even if the word 'outcast' were to be taken as including a man who has committed a heinous crime and his son is to be excluded according to the above text, there is ample authority in Hindu Law for the view that the exclusion of the son of an outcast applies to sons born after the commission of the act, which resulted in the excommunication of the father, but not to sons born before the father became subject to any taint. It is further argued that if the sons of Ganda Mal had tried to succeed Devi Dyal immediately after his death and if there had been no daughter of Devi Dyal to intervene between them and their succession it might possibly have been urged with some reason that they should be excluded, but they now claim to come in when succession has opened out to them by the death of Musammat Saraswati, and they come in under Hindu Law not as sons of their father but as nephews of their uncle in which capacity they claim under their personal law a right independently of their father. Reliance is placed for this contention on Brojo Mohun Thakoor v. Gauree Parshad Chowdhry (2), where it was held that a nephew succeeds under the Mitakshara not as the heir of his father, but as the direct heir of his uncle. We are also referred to another decision of the Calcutta High Court, Nilmadhab Mitra v. Jotindra Nath Mitra (3), where a son who was excluded from inheritance by reason of his murdering his father, had served out the punishment inflicted upon him and claimed maintenance from his son who had got the inheritance, and where it was held that the murderer was entitled to maintenance and so his after-born son. He also referred to Girimallappa Channappa v. Kenchava (4) where a murderer was disqualified from inheriting the estate of the person murdered as a case that might possibly be considered against him. He argued that even that case was no authority for extending the disqualification farther than the murderer himself. We think the two rulings relied upon by him cannot be of much help to him in this case. Brojo Mohun Thakoor v. Gauree Parshad Chowdhry (2), may be an authority in ordinary cases of succession under the Hindu Law to determine whether a nephew has an independent right of inheritance from his uncle but it cannot furnish any guidance in a case where the question is, whether the direct lineal descendants of a murderer are to be allowed or not to benefit by his crime. Similarly Nilmadhab Mitra v. Jotindra Nath Mitra (3), is a clearly distinguishable case. No doubt the son of a murderer does appear in that case to have succeeded to the estate of his murdered grandfather, because no objection appears to have been raised by any one against his succession, but the point that was directly before the High Court related to the right of maintenance which the convict had against his co parcener, which has nothing to do with the point involved in the present case. It is generally recognised that the exclusion of the murderer is not based on the principles of either Hindu, Muhammadan or Customary Law, but on public-policy and justice and it is from this standpoint rather than that of the personal law of the parties that the question before us is to be approached. This was held by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Shah Khanam v. Kalandhar Khan (5) where the learned Judges laid down that public policy and justice demand that no criminal should benefit by the result of his crime, and that it is unnecessary to consider either the Muhammadan or Customary Law on the point. The same view was expressed in Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedam- mal(6) and Vedammal v. Vedanayaga Mudaliar (7). Both the decisions related to the same case. The learned Judges observed in Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (6) in remanding the case for re-trial of the question of fact, whether the person sought to be excluded from inheritance on the ground of having committed a murder had actually committed that offence or not :

"The question whether a Hindu who has been party to a murder is prevented from succeeding to the estate of the person murdered is not answered by the Hindu Law. But the principle that no one shall be allowed to benefit by his own wrongful act is of universal application."

The same principle was adopted in Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1) by Mr. Justice Chatterji and Mr. Justice Kensington, who held that if the son of a murderer is allowed to succeed, the law excluding the father will be stultified altogether. In the unpublished ruling of this Court in Jind Kaur v. Indar Singh, Civil Appeal 252 of 1919, a case decided by a Division Bench, the same principle has been further emphasised. The following observations in the last mentioned ruling are worthy of attention :—"The murderer's right in such a case is swept away and with it is carried away the right of every one who claims through (and not merely from) him..... ..... If this were not so, the object of this principle of exclusion would be, in many cases, rendered nugatory : an aged father who had a right of reversion to a large estate could murder the holder of that estate and suffer the extreme penalty cheerfully knowing that by his action he had benefited his sons very materially. Ram Singh was not the source of Indar Singh's right of succession but he was the channel through which his right went to Indar Singh, and when the channel becomes tainted, or blocked, the right to succeed ceases to flow on to the son." As noticed already, Mr. Moti Sagar tries to distinguish the present case from Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1) and Jind Kaur v. Indar Singh [Civil Appeal No. 252 of 1919*] on the ground that they were both rulings under Customary Law and that they should not be applied to cases falling under Hindu Law, as the rights of a Hindu heir are on a different footing from those of an heir under the Customary Law. In the first place we fail to see that there is much appreciable difference between the position of the two heirs, so far as the question of deriving their title through a person is concerned. For instance, the sons of Ganda Mal may be the heirs of Devi Dyal independently of their father but they certainly derive their status as heirs through that relationship and, as observed above, if the channel through which that right to succeed was to flow is blocked, they cannot assert their relationship, which was created through the murderer and which has been tainted by his criminal act. In the second place, on consideration of public policy, it seems to be quite unjust to allow the sons of a murderer to derive any benefit from their father's crime, because in that way the public policy on which the rule of exclusion is based would be defeated. Our attention is drawn by Mr. Tek Chand to certain principles of English Law on which the principles of public policy propounded by the Indian Courts seem to be based. He cites the following passage from Jones Blackstone, page 254, in this connection :—

"There is yet a further consequence of the corruption and extinction of hereditary blood, which is this, that the person attainted shall not only be incapable himself of inheriting or transmitting his own property by heirship, but shall also abstract the descent of lands or tenements to his posterity in all cases where they are obliged to derive their title through him from any remoter ancestor. The channel, which conveyed the hereditary blood from his ancestors to him is not only exhausted for the present, but totally dammed up and rendered impervious for the future. This is a refinement upon the ancient law of feuds, which allowed that the grandson might be heir to his grandfather, though the son in the intermediate generation was guilty of felony. But by the Law of England a man's blood is so universally corrupted by attainder, that his sons can neither inherit to him nor to any other ancestor, at least on the part of their attainted father."

The law of attainder in England may be different to the law in India relating to murder but we think that the principle enunciated above is one which can stand should apply to cases where the descendants of a murderer claim to benefit by his crime. As remarked already, the question involved in this case ought to be decided on broad principles of public policy and we think that it is compatible with justice, equity and good conscience that the exclusion of a murderer from the inheritance of the man whom he had murdered must be taken to include his direct lineal descendants, and, holding that view, we are of opinion that the suit of the plaintiffs has been rightly dismissed.

As to the part of the case relating to Pindi Das (defendant No. 2), who was made only a pro forma defendant without any relief being sought against him, there seems to have been no adjudication between the rights of the defendants inter se and the only points decided with regard to him are those involved in Issues Nos. 1, 11 and 12. The point raised in Issue No. 1 was, "did Pindi Das alienate his share in the estate of Devi Dyal deceased in favour of the plaintiffs?" It has been found that though he had executed the deed dated the 8th January 1918, Exhibit P 3, in favour of Har Bhagwan, plaintiff, that deed was void for want of consideration, that it was very suspicious in its nature and invested the plaintiffs with no title to claim possession of any part of the property in suit on the basis of that deed. With regard to this it has been contended by Pandit Sheo Narain that this deed was inadmissible in evidence, as it was registered at Haranpur where no part of the property concerned was situated and that, therefore, the registration was without jurisdiction and the deed was inadmissible in evidence. He refers to Udit Narain Chowdhury v. Mathura Prasad (8) where the Calcutta High Court has held that the Registrar of a district has no jurisdiction to register the bond where the person giving the bond has no property in the district. He refers in the same connection to Harendra Lal Roy Choudhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (9) and Ram Lal v. Musammat Tamkin Bano (10). He also points out that the authority followed by the Court below for holding that the deed was admissible, i.e., Basheshar Das v. Bhagwan Das (11), was based on the Allahabad case, the decision in which has been reconsidered since by the Allahabad High Court. He draws attention to the Privy Council ruling Amba v. Shrinivasa Kanathi (12) which lays down that a deed which was not legally registered is invalid and a nullity. We are inclined to think that this contention is correct and the deed is inadmissible in evidence. We also agree with the clear finding of the Court below that the deed was without consideration. In fact it is admitted before us by the learned Counsel for the appellants that no part of the consideration has been yet paid and as far as we can see the transfer has been rightly characterised as a nominal one, because it is evident that no one could have parted with title to so valuable a property for such a paltry sum as Rs. 500. It is not proved, therefore, that there was any valid transfer of any rights which Pindi Das may have in the property in dispute.

As regards Issue No. 11, the finding of the Court below is that the parties are governed by Hindu Law under which the brothers and nephews of whole-blood exclude those of half blood and no custom to the contrary is shown and the issue is, therefore, decided against Pindi Das, but in view of what we have held regarding the claim of the plaintiffs, who are the whole blood nephews of the deceased, the result of this issue hardly affects the case. Similarly the pronouncement of the Court below on Issue No. 12, does not require any decision from us. The issue was whether the plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct from claiming preference over Pindi Das, and it has been held that there was no conduct of theirs which could operate against them by way of estoppel. This is again a decision with which we have no concern, as the suit of the plaintiffs fails. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. The cross-objections filed on behalf of Hukam Singh, defendant, are also dismissed. They related only to the findings of the Court below regarding the adoption of Balwant Singh by Musammat Saraswati and the Will made by her in his favour which points have been duly disposed of above.

BIND BAHADUR SINGH v. RITURAJI.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 122 OF 1920.

RITURAJI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Succession—Widow, death of—Next reversioners, not seeking to obtain possession of estate—Remoter reversioners, right of.

One K. died leaving a widow after whose death a dispute arose as to succession. K.'s daughter sued for declaration and obtained a decree against next reversioners. Upon a suit brought by the remoter reversioners who alleged a custom excluding daughters from inheritance, which they said, the next reversioners being in collusion with the daughter had failed to urge in the previous suit:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as even if the custom as alleged were found to exist, the persons entitled to succeed would be the next reversioners and if the latter did not choose to avail themselves of their right to the possession of the property, such inaction on their part would not confer any right on the remoter reversioners.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha with him Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellants.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen (with him Mr. Gulzari Lal), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances under which this appeal has arisen are as follows:—One Kunj Behari Singh died many years ago leaving a widow Musammat Jamna Kunwar. She died in the year 1914. After her death, two persons, Sheo Narain Singh and Chotku Singh, applied for mutation as next reversioners. Their application was opposed by Musammat Rituraji, the respondent No. 1, who represented herself to be the daughter of Kunj Behari Singh, and said she was as such entitled to the property. She lost her case in the Revenue Court and afterwards brought a suit for declaration of her title as the heiress of Kunj Behari Singh as against Chotku Singh and Sheo Narain Singh, the next reversioners. Her suit was decreed by the Court of first instance and that decree was confirmed, on appeal, by this Court, in 1919.

The present plaintiffs, who allege themselves to be remoter reversioners, as compared to Sheo Narain Singh and Chotku Singh, commenced this litigation on the 17th of June, 1919, claiming possession of the property of Kunj Behari Singh against Musammat Rituraji Kunwar, and Chotku Singh and Sheo Narain Singh, the immediate reversioners. After stating the facts, of which we have given a brief resume, the plaintiffs say that the Chotku Singh and Sheo Narain Singh did not bring forward evidence in the previous suit to prove that under a custom set out in the present plaint Musammat Rituraji Kunwar, even if she was the daughter of Kunj Behari Singh, was not entitled to succeed. It is suggested, but there is no evidence to support it, that Chotku Singh and Sheo Narain Singh did not set up this custom as a defence in the previous suit, possibly because they were in collusion with Musammat Rituraji. It may be mentioned that in this case they gave no particulars to lay the foundation of any such custom, and these would have been necessary if the plaintiffs had been able to get over the plea that their plaint disclosed no cause of action. The plaintiffs say that their cause of action arose on the 2nd of January 1914, and subsequent dates, and also on the 13th of January, 1919, when the High Court confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in favour of Musammat Rituraji Kunwar.

The point raised in the defence was that, on their own case, as put forward in the plaint, the plaintiffs had no cause of action to maintain the present suit. The main defence was that, on a careful reading of the plaint it disclosed no cause of action, and it was to this matter that the Judge addressed himself in the first instance and has decided that question adversely to the plaintiffs-appellants, and dismissed their suit.

The plaintiffs come here in appeal and challenge the judgment of the lower Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has, in a very careful judgment, discussed the various pleas put forward before him, and we agree with him in his conclusions. This is not a case in which a remoter reversioner is suing by reason of the action or inaction of a nearer reversioner to set aside an alienation by an owner with limited powers. In this case it is a suit by a person alleged to be entitled to certain property because some person with better title to that property has failed to take advantage of the rights which he had. In this case, as soon as Musammat Jamna Kunwar died in the year 1914, the succession opened out. If the ordinary Hindu Law applied, the next heir would be the daughter, Musammat Rituraji Kunwar, provided she succeeded in proving that she was the daughter of the deceased and if she succeeded in meeting the alleged custom excluding daughters. If she did not succeed because of either of the two reasons aforesaid, the property would go to Sheo Narain Singh and Chotku Singh, and if Sheo Narain Singh and Chotku Singh did not choose to avail themselves of their right to possession of the property, such inaction of theirs would not confer any rights on the plaintiffs who do not claim to be his heirs. The reasoning on this question cannot be put better than it has been put by the learned Subordinate Judge at pages 12 and 13 of the paper book. We agree with the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that the pliantiffs are not entitled to maintain the present suit. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

MALAWA RAM—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 122, O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal, second—Limitation—Time spent in obtaining copy of First Court's judgment, whether can be excluded—Extension of time—Sufficient cause.

Under section 12 of the Limitation Act the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the judgment on which the decree appealed against is founded can alone be excluded in computing the period of limitation. In the case of a second appeal, therefore, the period spent in obtaining a copy of the First Court's judgment cannot be excluded under the provisions of this section, even where the Rules of the High Court require a copy of the First Court's judgment to be filed along with the memorandum of appeal

A High Court has power to alter, amend and add to rules of procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure according to section 122 of the Code, but it has no power to alter the period of limitation provided by the Limitation Act.

Narsing Sahai v. Sheo Parsad, 42 Ind. Cas. 855; 40 A. I; 15 A. L. J. 835, relied upon.

A Court is not bound to show indulgence to an appellant under section 5 of the Limitation Act who has not been prompt in applying for copies.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 21st April 1921, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 8th February 1921.

Lala Badri Das, R. S., for the Appellant.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. — This appeal is clearly barred by time. The judgment appealed against was given on the 21st April 1921. The appeal was lodged in this Court on the 12th October 1921. The period of 90 days allowed under the law expired on the 20th July 1921. Therefore, the appeal was clearly barred by time on 12th October 1921; but the appellant was entitled to time occupied in obtaining copy of judgment which he was required to file with the memorandum of appeal. The application for copy of judgment was made on 4th July 1921. The copy was ready for delivery on 6th July 1921. Thus appellant was entitled to three days on this account. Mr. Badri Das, however, has contended that the copy was actually delivered on the 11th July 1921. This would give to the appellant 8 days for obtaining copies. The appeal according to this calculation would be within time up to the 28th July 1921 and it ought to have been filed then. The long vacation commenced on the 29th July 1921. Thus the period of limitation had expired before the commencement of the long vacation. Therefore, the appeal of the appellant cannot be treated as within time.

Mr Badri Das for the appellant has argued that as, according to the rules of this Court, it is incumbent upon appellant to file a copy of the judgment of the First Court also, the appellant in this case was entitled to the benefit of the period spent in obtaining copy of the judgment of the first Court. The application for copy of the first Court's judgment was made on the 20th July 1921 and it was not delivered till the 29th of July 1921. If this period were to be allowed to the appellant his appeal would certainly be within time. It is provided in clause (3) of section 12 of the Limitation Act that where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded. Now, in this case the decree appealed from is the decree of the Appellate Court. Therefore, only the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the judgment on which the decree appealed against is founded should be excluded. I am aware that this Court has framed a rule making it necessary to file a copy of the First Court's judgment with the memorandum of appeal. This Court has power to alter, amend and add to rules of procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure according to section 122 of the Code; but it has no power to alter the period of limitation provided by the Limitation Act. This view of the law is supported by the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Narsingh Saha v. Sheo Prasad (1). Mr. Badri Das has asked me to extend the period of limitation in this case under section 5 of the Limitation Act and treat the appeal as within time, but I see no sufficient reason for doing this. The judgment appealed against was delivered on the 21st of April 1921 and the appellant did not apply for copy of judgment and decree till the 4th of July 1921. A Court is not bound to show indulgence to a litigant who is not prompt in seeking his remedy.

The appeal is clearly barred and is dismissed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 23—Contract, enforcement of—Stranger—Equity.

A stranger to a contract is, as a rule, not entitled to sue, but relief may sometimes be granted in his favour on principles of equity. [p. 779, col. 2.]

B. contracted to sell certain property to N. in order to satisfy a money-decree obtained against him by S. The consideration was fixed at Rs. 2,900. Out of this B. actually received Rs. 300 and the balance of Rs. 2,600 was left with the purchaser for payment to S. The sale, however, was not carried out, and eventually S. himself got a sale-deed from B. of the same property and out of the price fixed appropriated Rs. 3,000 to the satisfaction of his decree. Subsequently N. sued B. for specific performance. The suit was decreed and S. lost possession of the property. S. brought the present suit to recover from N. Rs. 3,000 being the amount appropriated in satisfaction of his decree. The lower Courts held that although N. was not liable to pay Rs. 3,000 he was liable to the extent of Rs. 2,600, being the amount which under his contract with B was left with him for payment to S. In second appeal N contended that S. being not privy to that contract was not entitled to enforce any covenant under the same:

Held, dismissing the objection, that though S. was at the outset a stranger in dealings between N. and B., nevertheless by reason of the subsequent proceedings terminating in the decree for specific performance, S. was brought into a degree of privity with N. so as to be entitled to relief on principles of equity. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Mainpuri.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been argued at considerable length before us but we have come to the conclusion that the decree of the lower Court ought to stand.

The suit was a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 3,034-6 alleged to be due from the first two defendants, Kunwar Nehal Singh and Kunwar Dwarka Singh. The plaintiffs in the suit were Lala Fateh Chand and Lala Hira Lal who admittedly are the brothers and survivors of one Lala Sewa Ram.

It is necessary to set out in some detail the earlier history of this case. Sewa Ram had obtained in the year 1908 a simple money-decree against a judgment-debtor, named Kunwar Bhawani Singh, who is impleaded in the present suit as defendant No. 3.

In execution of that decree Sewa Ram attached certain immoveable property on the allegation that it belonged to his judgment-debtor.

This attachment produced an objection on the part of Bhawani Singh's wife, Musammat Durga Kunwar, who put forward the plea that the property had been transferred to her.

This objection of Musammat Durga

Kunwar was allowed. Thereafter Sewa Ram brought a declaratory suit for the purpose of establishing that the property which he had got attached was, in fact, the property of his judgment-debtor. Sewa Ram won this case and, thereafter, began execution proceedings.

Meanwhile, on the 19th February 1910, Bhawani Singh entered into an agreement with Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh to sell to them certain Zemindari property, his object being to pay off the decree which was outstanding in favour of Sewa Ram.

There can be no question that by this agreement Bhawani Singh undertook to sell the property to Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh for a sum of Rs. 2,900, Rs. 100 was given as earnest money, Rs. 200 was paid in cash, and the balance of Rs. 2,600 was left with the purchasers for payment to Sewa Ram in satisfaction of his decree.

This sale, however, was not carried out, and on the 7th June 1910, Sewa Ram, the decree-holder himself, got a sale-deed from the judgment-debtors, Bhawani Singh and his wife, Durga Kunwar. The consideration of this deed was a sum of Rs. 3,300. Out of this Rs. 3,034-6 were appropriated by Sewa Ram in satisfaction of his decree. Sewa Ram certified satisfaction to the Court. The rest of the money was paid to the vendor in cash.

Following on this in the year 1912 Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh brought a suit for specific performance of the contract for conveyance which had been executed in their favour on the 19th February 1910. They lost this suit in both the Courts below but in second appeal this High Court gave a decree directing that specific performance of the contract to sell should be enforced. It was directed by this Court that Sewa Ram, the subsequent purchaser, and Bhawani Singh should join in executing a conveyance in favour of the successful plaintiffs, Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh, and that conveyance was ultimately executed on behalf of Sewa Ram and Bhawani Singh by the learned Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri. The terms embodied in this conveyance were the terms which had been agreed upon by the parties to the contract of the 19th February 1910. After this conveyance had been executed by the Court in favour of Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh, Sewa Ram lost possession of the property, and now we have this present suit brought by the survivors in interest of Sewa Ram to recover from Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh a sum of Rs. 3,034-6, that being the amount which under the sale-deed executed in favour of Sewa Ram was appropriated in satisfaction of Sewa Ram's decree.

The suit was contested on every imaginable ground. The main plea with which we are concerned was that there was no privity of contract between Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh on the one side and the plaintiffs or their predecessor on the other. Great reliance was placed upon the fact that Sewa Ram was a stranger to the contract of the 19th February 1910, and it was pleaded that, being a stranger to that contract, neither he nor his successors were entitled to sue for the purpose of enforcing any covenant entered into between the defendants and their vendor.

The result has been that both the Courts below have decreed the claim though not to the extent to which the plaintiffs desired. Both the Courts have held that although the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are liable to these plaintiffs, they are only liable to the extent of Rs. 2,600, that being the amount which under the contract of 19th February 1910, was left with them for payment to Sewa Ram. Interest on this sum to the amount of Rs. 144-11 has been allowed.

It has been strongly argued before us that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as Sewa Ram was no party to the contract of the 19th February 1910. There can be no doubt that the general law is that a stranger to a contract is not entitled to sue, but there are cases in which the Courts have granted relief in favour of a stranger to the contract on principle of equity. We have been referred to a great many cases of various Courts but we shall content ourselves with referring to the case of Debi Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal [Ohunnilal Ghose] (1) There the whole law on the subject has been lucidly laid down in the judgment of Jenkins, C. J. We consider that there is a close analogy between the facts of the present case and the facts of the case with which the Bench of the Calcutta High Court was dealing in the reported case, and we think, when all the facts are examined it is not possible to maintain the plea that Sewa Ram or his successors-in-interest, the present plaintiffs, are altogether strangers to the dealings between Bhawani Singh on the one side and Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh on the other so as to preclude them from asking for the relief which has been asked for in this case. We start with the fact that Sewa Ram was outside the contract of 19th February 1910; but then we have the fact that Sewa Ram was impleaded as defendant in the suit for a specific performance of that contract which was brought by Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh, and we have the fact that under the decree of this Court Sewa Ram and Bhawani Singh were both directed to convey the property in dispute to Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh. Further, it is not to be doubted that it was the intention of this Court that this conveyance to be executed both by Sewa Ram and Bhawani Singh was to be executed upon the very terms which were embodied in the contract of the 19th February 1910, and one of those terms was that Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh were to be liable to pay Rs. 2,500 to Sewa Ram in discharge of the debt owing to him from Bhawani Singh under the decree. In other words, although Sewa Ram was at the outset a stranger to the dealings between Bhawani Singh and his purchasers, nevertheless by reason of these subsequent proceedings terminating in a decree for specific performance passed by this Court, Sewa Ram was brought into a degree of privity with Nehal Singh and Dwarka Singh which, in our opinion, justifies us in holding that this is a case in which the equitable relief ought to be granted as it was granted in the Calcutta case to which we have referred. There the relief was granted on the ground of certain subsequent dealings between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 5, dealings by which the parties were brought into a relation of privity, and it was upon that basis that the Calcutta Court considered that the plaintiff was entitled to equitable relief. Similarly, in the present case we think there can be no doubt that in equity the plaintiffs are entitled to the sum which was awarded to them by the Court below. In our opinion no question arises of res judicata or of the application of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case is to our mind a straightforward case in which the plaintiffs had a cause of action arising out of a decree which was passed by this Court for specific performance and out of the conveyance which followed upon that decree.

The result, therefore, is that we affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 21 OF 1921.

August 27, 1921.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Panton.

BALEY MAHAMMAD SAHI AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANTS

AIJANMAI AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Decree-holder seeking to certify payment made to him out of Court—Limitation—Application to certify payment, if must be distinct from application to execute decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2 (1)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 174, 181, application of.

Where a decree-holder seeks to certify a payment made to him out of Court by the judgment-debtor under sub-rule (1) of r. 2 of O XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Article of the Limitation Act applicable to an application for the purpose is Art. 181, and the right of the decree-holder to apply accrues as soon as he receives payment. [p. 781, col. 2.]

The Code of Civil Procedure does not prescribe that an application to certify payment by a judgment-debtor must necessarily be distinct from an application for execution of the decree: there can be no objection to a combined application embodying a two-fold prayer, namely, first, that the alleged payment be recorded, and secondly, that the decree be executed for the balance of the judgment-debt. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the decree holders from an order of dismissal made on an application for execution of a mortgage-decree. The preliminary decree in the mortgage-suit was made on the 8th May 1912. This was followed by the final decree on the 15th January 1916. On the 11th August 1919, the decree-holders applied for execution. This application was prima facie barred by limitation under Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. Consequently, the decree-holders sought to escape from the bar of limitation by reference to a payment alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtors on the 25th October 1917. The Court of first instance held that the alleged payment, which had not been certified or recorded under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, could not be recognised, and dismissed the application as barred by limitation. This decision of the primary Court has been affirmed by the District Judge. We are of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below cannot be supported.

O. XXI, rule 2 consists of three sub-rules. Sub rule (1) deals with the case where the decree-holder seeks to certify a payment made to him out of Court by the judgment-debtor. The sub-rule provides that where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly. Sub rule (2) deals with the case where the judgment-debtor seeks to inform the Court of a payment alleged to have been made by him out of Court to the decree-holder. In this event, the judgment-debtor may inform the Court of such payment and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause on a day to be fixed by the Court why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified; and if after service of such notice the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly. Sub-rule (3) finally provides that a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, that is, at the instance of either the decree holder or the judgment-debtor, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree Let it be conceded that sub-rule (3) is expressed in wider terms than the corresponding provisions of the Code of 1882, which laid down that a payment or adjustment not certified should not be recognised as payment or adjustment of the decree. But this does not solve the problem raised before us. The question is, whether the decree-holder can certify the alleged payment in the manner attempted in his application for execution. In this connection it is important to observe that Art. 174 of the Limitation Act is applicable only to a case under sub rule (2) of rule 2. That Article provides that an application for the issue of a notice under the Civil Procedure Code to show cause why any payment made out of Court or any money payable under a decree or order should not be recorded as certified shall be made within 90 days from the date when the payment or adjustment is made. This is clearly not applicable to a case under sub rule (1). We must consequently consider, whether there is a period of limitation for an application by a decree-holder who has received payment from the judgment-debtor out of Court, to record the payment. Plainly, the only Article applicable is Art. 181, which provides that an application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this Schedule shall be made within three years from the time when the right to apply accrues. The right of the decree-holder to apply accrues as soon as he receives payment, because from that moment he is under an obligation to certify the payment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree.

In the case before us, the alleged payment was made on the 25th October 1917. Consequently it was open to the decree-holder to apply to the execution Court within three years from that date to record the payment. The Code does not prescribe that such application must be distinct from an application for execution of the decree and there is obviously no objection to a combined application embodying a two-fold prayer, namely, first, that the alleged payment be recorded, and secondly, that the decree be executed for the balance of the judgment-debt. This view has been adopted by this Court in the cases of Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (1), Eusuffeeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2) and Harendra Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Gagan Chandra Das (3). That the decree-holder is not bound by the rule of limitation applicable to the judgment-debtor has also been recognised in a series of decisions of this Court, namely, Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (1), Eusuffeeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2), Harendra Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Gagan Chandra Das (3) and Jotindra Kumar Dass v. Gagan Chandra Pal (4). A similar view has not been adopted by the Patna High Court in Sheik Elahi Bux v. Nawab Lall (5) by the Madras High Court in Masilamani Mudaliar v. Sethuswami Aiyar (6) and by the Bombay High Court in Pandurang Balkrishna v. Jagya Bhau (7). Our attention has, however, been drawn to the decision of this Court where an apparently different conclusion was reached. The first of these cases, Bireswar Mookerjee v. Ambika Charan Bhattacharjee (8) need not detain us, because the ex parte judgment in that case was re-called on an application for a re-hearing by the opposite party in the Rule upon whom no notice has been served and the case was subsequently decided on another ground. But we may point out that the facts of that case were of a very special character and even on the view which we take the result would not have been different. In that case, the decree was made on the 24th November 1909. The application for execution was presented on the 7th June 1916, and was prima facie barred by limitation. To escape from the bar of limitation the decree-holder relied upon two payments alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor on the 8th October 1912, and 9th June 1913. In respect of the first payment dated the 8th October 1912, the prayer to have it recorded (as contained in the application for execution dated the 7th June 1916) was barred by limitation under Art. 181. In respect of the second payment, dated 9th June 1913, the application was not so barred, but that payment, even if recorded, would clearly be of no avail by itself to save from the bar of limitation a decree dated 24th November 1909. The second case brought to our notice is Bahuballav Roy v. Jogesh Chandra Banerjee (9) where it was ruled that the decree holder can certify payment made at any time, subject to the ordinary rule of limitation that the certification must take place within such time as is required to save the application from being barred by limitation. It may be doubtful whether the application mentioned is the application for execution, or the application to have the payment recorded; the latter interpretation would be in harmony with the provision in Art. 181, which prescribes the only restriction upon the rights of the decree-holder to bring the payment to the notice of the Court. In these circumstances we must hold that the balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that the present application for execution is not barred by limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed,

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 63—Acceptance of smaller sum than amount due—Discharge—Presumption—Question of fact

Where a plaintiff agrees to accept a smaller sum in full payment of the amount due to him, it is not open to him to go behind that admission and claim the recovery of the balance. On the other hand, if he does not agree to accept that amount in full satisfaction of his claim, he cannot claim the benefit of section 63 of the Contract Act, for that section only applies where a promisee agrees to remit wholly or in part the performance of a promise made to him or accepts instead of it any satisfaction which he thinks fit. [p. 784, col. 1.]

Where a debtor sends to his creditor a cheque for a smaller amount than what he owes, the mere retention and encashment of the cheque by the creditor, who at the same time refuses to receive the amount in full discharge of the payment of the debt, does not raise any conclusive presumption that he had accepted the cheque as a conditional offer by the debtor. [p. 784, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. Narayan Prasad Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Second Appeal No. 862 and Second Appeal No. 960 of 1921 are connected appeals arising out of the same suit. The plaintiff's firm brought a suit to recover a sum of Rs. 1,265-13-0 with interest, on the following allegations. Their case, devoid of all unnecessary details was that the plaintiffs, as agents of the Standard Oil Company, sold 900 tins of Kerosine oil to the defendants the price of which was Rs. 3,982-13 0, that the defendants paid only a sum of Rs. 2,717 and that the balance of Rs. 1,265-13-0 was still due. The plaintiffs' claim to recover this amount with interest.

On behalf of the defendants it was contended that the sum of Rs. 2,717 had been paid in full payment of the plaintiffs' claim and that having accepted that amount, the plaintiffs are no longer entitled to claim any balance. It was further pleaded that a sum of Rs. 500 had been paid by the defendants as advance money for the oil contract and should be deducted.

The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim for the recovery of Rs. 1,265-13-0 and disallowed the defendants' objection as to the payment of Rs. 500. There were two appeals filed before the learned District Judge who has affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendants have come up here in second appeal, and, on their behalf, it is contended that it is not now open to the plaintiffs to ignore the conditions under which the amount of Rs. 2,717 was paid under a cheque and to claim the balance.

It appears that the defendants sent a cheque for Rs. 2,717 with a condition that this sum was being paid in full discharge of the total amount due to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs retained this cheque and ultimately cashed it and two days after this they sent a letter to the defendants intimating that they had cashed the cheque but that they did not agree to receive the amount in full discharge of the payment of the sum due to them. The learned Advocate for the defendants contends that this is really a case of accord and satisfaction and he relies strongly on section 63 of the Indian Contract Act which embodies that principle. Now, if the plaintiffs had really agreed to accept a smaller sum in full payment of the amount due to them, then there can be no doubt that it would no longer be open to them to go behind that admission and claim the recovery of the balance. On the other hand, if they did not agree to accept that amount in full discharge of the payment of the amount due to them, section 63 of the Indian Contract Act would have no application, for that section would only apply where a promisee agrees to remit wholly or in part the performance of the promise made to him or accepts instead of it any satisfaction which he thinks fit. The main question, therefore, was whether the plaintiffs did, in fact, agree to accept the money sent in full satisfaction of their claim. The finding of the learned District Judge on this point is against the appellants and prima facie that finding is a finding of fact which cannot be interfered with in second appeal.

The learned Advocate for the defendants-appellants, however, contends that the plaintiffs took time in retaining the cheque which was sent under an express condition that the money was being paid in full discharge of the amount due to the plaintiffs and that this was a conclusive proof of their having agreed to accept that offer; and it is strongly contended that the sending of the money by the defendants must be deemed to be a conditional offer made by them and the retaining of the cheque by the plaintiffs was an acceptance of that offer, and it is, therefore, urged that the plaintiffs, having accepted the defendants' offer to pay the sum of Rs. 2,717 in full discharge of the amount due, are not entitled to go behind it. This contention, if well-founded, would convert the question into one of law. We are, however, of opinion that the mere fact that the plaintiffs retained the cheque and cashed it and at the same time refused to receive the amount in full discharge of the payment of their debt, does not raise any conclusive presumption that they had accepted it as a conditional offer made by the defendants. Every case is to be judged on its special circumstances, and in this particular case the lower Appellate Court has come to a finding that the plaintiffs did not really agree to accept the amount in full discharge of their debt. This is really a question of fact.

On behalf of the defendants reliance is placed on the analogy of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and it is contended that inasmuch as the sum was paid in full discharge of the amount due, the principle underlying that section applies. Reference was also made to the case of Ram Chandra Marwari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari (1). But the perusal of that judgment would make it clear that that case proceeded entirely on the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act which distinctly provides that the money so deposited would have to be accepted in full discharge of the amount due. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case referred to above lay stress on the fact that the mortgagee was bound to comply with the requirements of the Statute under which the money was paid into Court and that there was no jurisdiction in the Court to permit the money deposited to be drawn out of Court on any terms other than those imposed by the Statute. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. The rule of English law undoubtedly seems to be in favour of the respondents' contention, and lays down that if the sum of money sent by a debtor to a creditor is less than the amount actually due, the creditor is not bound to refuse it and may accept the debtor's offer without prejudice to his claim such as it may be. The case of Miller v. Davies which is an unreported case but is referred to in the judgment in the case of Day v. McLea (2) is a case which is very much similar to the case before us. In that case a Solicitor was entitled to a sum of

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 935; 6 A. L. J. 617; 10 C. L. J. 1; 6 M. L. T. 1; 11 Bom. L. R. 765; 13 C. W. N. 1102; 36 C. 840; 19 M. L. J. 419; 36 I. A. 85 (P. C.).

£50 as costs. The defendants, however, sent a cheque for £25 with a letter stating that in order to put an end to the matter he sent the cheque for £25 on the terms that the plaintiffs would receive it in full settlement. The plaintiff kept the cheque and cashed it but wrote to the defendant that he declined to accept it in full satisfaction of the payment of the amount due and that he required a cheque for the balance. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the balance and the defendant pleaded that there was an accord and satisfaction of the claim but it was held that it was a question of fact on what terms the cheque was kept. The verdict of the jury was that there was no accord and satisfaction, and that was held to be final in the matter. The same principle was accepted in the reported case of Day v. McLea (2) which also was a similar one. In that the plaintiffs were claiming damages, and the defendants sent a cheque to them for a sum less than the amount claimed which cheque the plaintiffs retained. Nevertheless it was held that this did not amount to full accord and satisfaction of the claim. It was further remarked that "If a person sends a sum of money on the terms that it is to be taken, if at all, in satisfaction of a larger claim, and if the money is kept, it is a question of fact as to the terms upon which it is so kept. Accord and satisfaction imply an agreement to take the money in satisfaction of the claim in respect of which it is sent. If accord is a question of agreement, there must be either two minds agreeing or one of the two persons acting in such a way as to induce the other to think that the money is taken in satisfaction of the claim, and to cause him to act upon that view. In either case it is a question of fact."

Both on authority and principle, therefore, it is clear to our minds that the mere fact that the plaintiffs retained the cheque and cashed it, cannot be a conclusive proof in law that they had agreed to accept the amount on the condition offered by the defendants. The question was primarily one of fact and the view taken by the District Judge is binding on us. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 19 —Appeal dismissed for default—Re-admission—Sufficient cause—Counsel engaged in other Court.

It is the duty of Counsel to see that their clients are properly represented when their cases are called on for hearing. If a Counsel is unable to appear himself he should arrange for another to take his brief for him when the case is called on for hearing. Courts cannot be expected to await the convenience of Counsel.

Miran Bakhsh v Rattan Chand, 71 P. R. 1890, Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein, 13 B. 12; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 8, referred to.

An appeal was dismissed in default, and upon an application for its re-admission on the ground that when the appeal was called on for hearing Counsel for the appellant was engaged in arguing a case before another Court at the time and had sent word to the Reader of the Court asking to be allowed ten minutes' time:

Held, that this was not a sufficient cause within the meaning of r. 19 of O XLI of the Civil Procedure Code for re-admitting the appeal.

Petition, under O. XLI, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code, for restoration of the appeal noted above dismissed in default on the 28th November 1921.

Lala Lachhmi Narain, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul and Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The appeal was dismissed for default on the 28th November last. Application is made for its re-admission on the ground that Counsel for the appellant, Dr. Nand Lal, was engaged in arguing a case before the 3rd Bench at the time when the appeal before us was called on, and had sent word to the Reader of this Court asking to be allowed ten minutes' time.

The Court cannot, however, be expected to await the convenience of Counsel, and it is time that Counsel should understand that it is incumbent on them to see that their clients are properly represented when the case is called on for hearing. It appears from an affidavit of the respondent, Hasan Din, that Dr. Nand Lal had specially arranged to have the appeal in question put higher up on the list, so that he knew that it was likely to be called on early in the day. If he was unable to appear himself he could have arranged for another Counsel to take his brief for him. The observations contained in Miran Bakhsh v. Rattan Chand (1) and Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein (2) are pertinent to the present case.

In our opinion no sufficient cause is shown for re-admitting the appeal, and we dismiss this application with costs.

Trust—Right of founder to provide for management—Trustee, removal of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, applicability of, to suits between rival claimants.

The founder of a trust is entitled to provide for the management of the trust and to reserve to himself and his heirs the power to appoint trustees, and if, in the exercise of that power, he appoints a trustee, the latter cannot be removed except in the manner prescribed in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Siddhan Lal v. Gauri Shankar, 40 Ind. Cas. 165, referred to.

Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the institution of a representative suit by beneficiaries to secure the proper administration of a public trust either by the removal of the existing trustees or by the settlement of a scheme by which the object of the trust can be properly carried out. A trustee cannot be removed except on the ground of a breach of trust. The section does not apply to a suit between persons who individually claim a right to succeed to the office of trustee.

A suit by a person claiming to be the mutwalli of certain property against another who has taken possession of the same does not fall within the purview of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry, 33 C. 789; 10 C. W. N. 581, Muhammad Abdul Majid Khan v. Ahmad Saeed Khan, 20 Ind. Cas. 37; 35 A. 459; 11 A. L. J. 673, relied on.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to act as the Sarbarahkar of a certain temple and of the property appertaining thereto and for possession of the said property. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he had been appointed Sarbarahkar of the said property and temple by Ganga Prasad, the founder of the trust, by a deed executed by him and registered on the 27th February 1901. By virtue of that deed Ganga Prasad had dedicated certain property for the benefit of the temple which he had constructed in his lifetime and appointed himself a trustee for his life and nominated the plaintiff as his successor in that office. By a subsequent document, executed by him on the 22nd May 1919, he appointed his nephews as trustees after him. These nephews are the defendants to the present suit. They succeeded in getting mutation of names effected on the death of Gange Prasad in the revenue papers. The plaintiff contended that the defendants had obtained the deed from Ganga Prasad under undue influence, but they failed to prove that allegation. The Courts below, however, decreed the claim of the plaintiff on the ground that, by virtue of the deed of waqf of the 27th February 1901, Ganga Prasad had appointed the plaintiff as his successor in the office of trustee and that he had no power thereafter to appoint another man in his place. The view taken by the Courts below is supported by the decision in Siddhan Lal v. Gauri Shankar (1). Ordinarily, the founder of a trust is entitled to provide for the management of the trust and to reserve to himself and his heirs the power to appoint trustees; but if he exercises that power and appoints a trustee, the trustee cannot be removed except in the manner laid down in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendants entered into possession of the trust property under the subsequent deed executed by Ganga Prasad, by virtue of which they were appointed trustees in the place of the plaintiff. But Ganga Prasad had reserved no power to himself by the earlier deed to alter the scheme of management there laid down, and the subsequent appointment of other persons cannot, therefore, be upheld.

It is urged, on behalf of the defendants, that the suit ought to have been brought under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but that section provides for the institution of a representative suit by the beneficiaries to secure the proper administration of a public trust either by the removal of the existing trustees or by the settlement of a scheme by which the object of the trust can be properly carried out. The removal of the trustees can be claimed on the ground of an alleged breach of trust, but no such ground is alleged here in regard to the defendants. All that is stated is that Ganga Prasad had committed a breach of trust by appointing new trustees in the place of the plaintiff. It is not stated that the defendants had committed any breach of trust. On the other hand, the suit is, as the Courts below point out, between rival claimants to the office of trustee. The plaintiff claims that office in his own right by virtue of the earlier deed executed by Ganga Prasad. The defendants claim the same office by virtue of a later deed, which, so far as it is inconsistent with the earlier one, is not enforceable. As pointed out by Woodroffe, J., in the case of Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (2), in order to bring a case within the purview of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure the suit must be a representative one, brought for the benefit of the public and to enforce a public right in respect of an express or constructive trust upon a cause of action, alleging a breach of trust or necessity for directions as to its administration against a trustee of such express or constructive trust Such trustee may be a trustee de jure or a trustee de son tort. But if the suit is between persons, who individually claim a right to succeed to the office of trustee, section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application. The right here set up is a personal right to act in a particular office. In Muhammad Abdul Majid Khan v. Ahmad Saeed Khan (3), it was held, in somewhat similar circumstances, that a suit by a person claiming to be a mutwalli of certain property against another who had taken possession of the same, did not fall within the purview of section 92.

We see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the decree passed by the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE LIQUIDATOR, PUNJAB TANNERY COMPANY, LIMITED, IN LIQUIDATION —RESPONDENT.

Companies—Contract entered into on behalf of Company before incorporation—Company, ratification by—New contract.

A contract entered into by the promoters of a Company prior to its incorporation, is not binding on the Company; nor can a Company ratify or adopt such a contract: it may enter into a new contract embodying the terms of that contract or adopting it. [p. 788, col. 2.]

The mere affixing of a copy of an agreement to the Articles of Association is not equivalent to effecting a new contract by the Company and would not estop the Official Liquidator from objecting to a claim on behalf of the persons with whom that contract was entered into. [p. 789, col. 2.]

SURRENDRO AND COMPANY v. LIQUIDATOR, PUNJAB TANNERY CO. LTD.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the learned District Judge of Rawalpindi passed in the matter of the winding-up of the Punjab Tannery Company.

A preliminary objection is raised that the appeal is barred, service not having been effected on the respondent within three weeks of the District Judge's order as required by section 169 of Act VI of 1882. The District Judge's judgment is dated the 14th June 1921. Copy was applied for on the 24th June 1921 and supplied on the 30th June 1921. The appeal was lodged on the 6th July 1921 along with an affidavit that delay was due to the fact that cholera had broken out in the appellant's family, his brother-in law having died and his sister-in-law being dangerously ill. Extension of time was, therefore, prayed for and granted subject to all just exceptions. In the absence of any counter-affidavit I take it that the statement as to cholera having broken out in the family was correct, and I think extension of time may be allowed in this case.

The question for decision in this case is whether a debt due to Surrendro and Company can be enforced against the Punjab Tannery Company. The firm of Surrendro and Company consisted of Lala Maya Das and Mr. Hans Raj Bhandari and these two persons were amongst the promoters of the Company. An agreement was drawn up on the 11th September 1908 between Maya Das and Hans Raj Bhandari on one side as proprietors of Surrendro and Company, and Harbhagwan and Beant Singh on the other side as promoters of the Punjab Tannery Company. According to this agreement, the Punjab Tannery Company was to buy up the stock and good-will of Surrendro and Company, though in the agreement the space for entering the amount of money, which the Punjab Tannery Company was to pay to Surrendro and Company, was left blank. The Company was registered on the 26th October 1908. A copy of the agreement of the 11th September 1908 was attached to the Articles of Association. On various meetings of the Directors the question of the amount due to Surrendro and Company and of the steps necessary for checking the stock in hand taken over or to be taken over from the Company was discussed. On the 4th April 1909 a general meeting was called at which the agreement with Surrendro and Company was approved and confirmed, but, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, this meeting was attended only by seven persons, two others also being present by proxy, and so there was no quorum, and the meeting was invalid according to paragraph 26 of the Articles of Association which lays down that no business excepting the declaration of a dividend can be transacted at any general meeting unless a quorum is present consisting of ten members of whom not less than five should be personally present. There was another general meeting on the 20th January 1910 when a bare quorum was present. At this meeting there was a further discussion as to the accounts and as to taking over the stock from Messrs. Surrendro and Company, but I agree with the learned District Judge in holding that nothing was done at this meeting which constituted an agreement between the Punjab Tannery Company and Surrendro and Company. The learned District Judge has held that any contract entered into before incorporation of the Company is not binding and that no new contract was entered into by the Company after its incorporation and that, therefore, the Company is not liable under the agreement, but that Surrendro and Company can, if they so wish, fall back upon the original promoters who signed the agreement.

Messrs. Surrendro and Company have appealed to this Court and Mr. Ghulam Mohai-ud-Din has taken me through the proceedings as recorded in the Minute Book, but he has nowhere succeeded in pointing out to me anything which I can possibly regard as amounting to an agreement subsequent to incorporation of the Company between the Company and Surrendro and Company. There is ample authority for holding that a Company cannot ratify or adopt a contract entered into by a person on its behalf before incorporation, though it may enter into a new contract embodying the terms of the old one or adopting the old one. The cases in question are all cited on pages 211 to 213 of T. A. Row's edition published in 1910 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882. Here, as I have stated, I can find nowhere any fresh contract entered into by the Company after its incorporation. All that seems to have happened is that the Directors and the body of share-holders generally, so far as the latter took any interest in the proceedings, seems to have thought that the old contract entered into before the incorporation of the Company was binding and that no new contract was necessary. If the Directors after incorporation had entered into a new agreement and if the Company had acquiesced in the action of the Directors, then, I think, it might be right to say that the Company would be bound even if the Directors had acted beyond their legal powers; but, as I have already stated, I can find nothing on the record showing that the Directors ever entered into any fresh agreement with Surrendro and Co. after the incorporation of the Company. The Directors included Maya Das and Hans Raj, who were the proprietors of Surrendro and Co. so it would be difficult for them to enter into an agreement with themselves. The whole business of the Company seems to have been conducted in an utterly slipshod way, no notice being paid to the important fact that at the first general meeting the necessary quorum was not present. Even at the next general meeting a bare quorum was present, though I am informed that the number of share-holders was not far short of 100. In fact the share-holders seem to have taken very little interest in the proceedings and to have left matters entirely to the Directors. Had the Directors other than Maya Das and Hans Raj entered into a fresh agreement with Surrendro and Co. and had the share-holders agreed to such an agreement then, as I have already said, that agreement would probably have been binding on the Company; but there is no evidence of any new agreement and Mr. Ghulam Mohai-ud-Din has stated before me that he is unable to assert that the Directors entered into a new agreement. But he argues that the Directors took over the stock from Messrs. Surrendro and Co. and the Company ratified this action and is thus liable to pay to Surrendro and Co. the price of that stock. When the stock was actually taken over and by whom or whether it was really taken over at all are matters on which I am unable to come to any clear finding. If the stock was taken over by the promoters before the Company was incorporated then it seems to me that Surrendro and Co. have their claim not against the Company but against the promoters. In such a case as the present, where the promoters of Surrendro and Co. were two out of the five Directors it may well be that there was no formal taking over of the stock. As might have been expected, the Company soon came to grief and stopped work in March 1912. I need not, however, go into the question of the Company being liable, apart from any contract, to pay for the value of the stock taken over, as this was not raised in the grounds of appeal. The first ground of appeal is merely that the lower Court has erred in holding that the resolution passed at the meeting of the share-holders held on the 4th April 1909 is void in law. The decision of the lower Court on this point is undoubtedly correct.

The next ground of appeal is that the contract entered into by the Company with Surrendro and Co. was subsequently ratified and acted upon. But, as I have already stated, there was no contract between the Company but merely a contract entered into by the promoters prior to incorporation of the Company.

The third ground of appeal is that in the general meeting held on the 20th January 1910 certain persons were appointed to check the stock and the accounts were passed in which Surrendro and Co.'s debt was included. This, however, does not constitute any contract between the Company and Surrendro and Co. but is merely evidence that the persons attending that meeting were under the impression that there was a contract existing between the Company and Surrendro and Co.

The fourth ground of appeal is simply that the Official Liquidator is estopped from raising objection to the claim of Surrendro and Co., because a copy of the agreement was incorporated in the Articles of Association. But affixing a copy of the agreement to the Articles of Association is not equivalent to effecting a new contract between the Company and Surrendro and Co. and I fail to see how the respondent can be estopped from objecting to the claim on behalf of persons with whom the Company entered into no contract.

The fifth and last ground of appeal is that the Directors had legal authority which they rightly exercised. But, as I have pointed out already, the Directors did not enter into any contract with Surrendro and Co. They merely seem to have been under the mistaken idea that the agreement entered into prior to incorporation was sufficient and that no new contract was necessary.

In conclusion I note that Mr. Ghulam Mobai ud-Din in his arguments cited Ganesh Flour Mills Company Limited v. Puran Mal (1), a case referred to on page 211 of T. A. Row's Indian Companies Act (Edition of 1910) as laying down that a contract entered into prior to incorporation even though embodied in the Articles of Association cannot bind the Company when formed, unless it has after its formation ratified and adopted it. This ruling does not, however, lay down that such an agreement is binding if ratified by the Company. The fact is that this ruling was first published in the Punjab Record with an incorrect head-note, and this seems to have misled the author of the above book. Pages 11 and 12 of the Punjab Record for 1905 were subsequently re-printed with an amended head-note.

I uphold the order of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66—Auction sale—Notification of mortgage—Auction-purchaser, whether estopped from questioning validity of mortgage.

Under O. XXI, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code, if a mortgage-deed is notified, that notification is in no way conclusive as between the decree-holder or the purchaser on the one hand, and the holder of the encumbrance on the other, as to its validity, and where a sale is not effected subject to a mortgage but the mortgage is simply notified at the time of the sale, the auction-purchaser is not estopped from questioning the validity of the mortgage. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage-deed dated the 30th of August 1907. It appears that the defendant held a simple-money decree in a suit No. 192 of 1898 which was in execution. On the 30th of July 1907 the property in dispute in this case was attached in execution of the simple money decree; while this attachment was subsisting, the judgment-debtor, on the 30th of August 1907, executed the mortgage-deed which is the subject-matter of dispute in this appeal. On the 20th of August 1908 the subsequent mortgagee seems to have made an application to the Execution Court praying that his mortgage should be notified. An order of the 14th of November 1908 passed by the Execution Court, shows that inasmuch as no objection was preferred, notification was ordered. The property was put up for sale on two occasions but those sales were set aside. On the 20th of August 1909 the property was again put up for sale and was ultimately sold to the attaching decree-holder himself for a sum of Rs. 1,800. The subsequent mortgagee has now brought a suit to enforce the mortgage of the 30th of August 1907 and, on behalf of the defendants, it was contended that inasmuch as this mortgage-deed had been executed at a time when the attachment of the decree in Suit No. 192 of 1898 was in force, the mortgage was invalid and unenforceable as against the defendants.

The Court of first instance held that the attaching decree holder had, in no way, been prejudiced by the execution of this mortgage-deed and that the attachment was no bar to the validity of this mortgage.

On appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to enforce their mortgage as against the defendants who have purchased this property in execution of a decree under which the property was under attachment at the time when the mortgage-deed was executed.

The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in second appeal, and, on their behalf, it is argued that the finding of the learned District Judge is not correct. It is contended on their behalf that, inasmuch as the defendants had full notice of the existence of the plaintiffs' mortgage, they are estopped now from saying that that mortgage is not valid. In the first place, there is nothing on the record to show that any notice was actually issued to the decree-holder on the application of the 20th of August 1908. In order to succeed on a plea of estoppel, it was obviously incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove this. In the second place, the proceeding relating to the notification of the mortgage-deed was merely a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the order passed in that proceeding can in no way be conclusive as to the validity of the mortgage which was going to be announced.

It is next contended that under section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure the mortgage is not absolutely void but that it is valid so long as the attaching decree-holder was not prejudiced. It is true that under the new Act this section has been slightly altered. In the old section 276, the words "during the continuance of the attachment" were too wide and might have made all transfers "during the pendency of the attachment" absolutely void. Under the new Code, however, that expression has been substituted by the expression "contrary to such attachment." It is clear, therefore, that a transfer during the pendency of the attachment would be void only as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It cannot be disputed that it was open to the attaching decree-holder to ignore the subsequent mortgage and to proceed to sell the whole property and not only the equity of redemption, and that if he did so, the auction-purchaser would get the whole property free from the incumbrance, the mortgage not creating any lien on the property sold. There is nothing to show that the property sold was anything less than the absolute interest in it, and there is nothing to show that it was only the equity of redemption subject to the subsequent mortgage which was put up for sale and purchased by the defendants.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has strongly relied on the case of Dinobundhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmoya Dasi (1). In that case there were, first of all, two previous mortgage-deeds and the equity of redemption was attached in execution of a money decree. While the property was in the course of being sold, a third mortgage was created by the mortgagor in lieu of the amount due under the previous mortgages. The auction purchaser, in execution of the mortgage-decree, claimed that the provisions of section 276 of the Code rendered the subsequent mortgage wholly void as against him. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, held that inasmuch as the intention of the parties was to keep alive the earlier mortgages, it was impossible to hold that the effect of that section was to give an execution creditor an unincumbered fee simple instead of an equity of redemption against the intention of the parties. In our opinion that case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. The case of Abdul Rashid v. Gappo Lal (2) is also clearly distinguishable, because in that case the subsequent mortgage was held to be valid only in respect of that excess share which was not legally saleable in execution of a prior decree. The case of Bhagwan Das v. Ahmad Jan (3) was a case where ultimately the subsequent mortgage was not upheld. But it was clearly pointed out in that case that under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, if a mortgage-deed is notified, that notification is in no way conclusive as between the decree holder or the purchaser on the one hand and the holder of the encumbrance on the other as to its validity, and it was pointed out that where a sale is not effected subject to a mortgage but the mortgage is simply notified at the time of the sale, the auction purchaser is not estopped from questioning the validity of the mortgage.

It is next contended that the mortgage-deed in dispute was executed in order to pay off the money due to another attaching creditor, namely, Sheo Mukh Rai, and that, therefore, this mortgage was invalid. In the first place, this point was not taken before the learned District Judge, and we have no pronouncement of his opinion on this point. In the second place, Sheo Mukh Rai did not hold any decree for sale. He was a simple money decree-holder, and as soon as his amount was paid out of Court, the attachment ceased to exist, and we are of opinion, that that fact cannot in any way help the appellants. In our opinion the view taken by the learned District Judge on this point was correct. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 284—Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 169—Winding-up commenced under old Act—Appeal—Notice.

Under section 284 of the Companies Act, 1913, where proceedings for the winding-up of a Company have commenced before the commencement of the said Act, all subsequent proceedings connected with such winding-up, continue to be governed in all respects by the provisions of the Companies Act of 1882. Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 14th June 1921.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

Sardar Kharak Singh, (for Official Liquidator) and Mr. Sundar Das, (for Lahore Bank), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover the connected appeal filed by Gurdit Singh (Civil Appeal No. 1621 of 1921). These two cases are appeals from the order of the learned District Judge passed in the matter of the winding-up of the "Punjab Tannery Company, Limited, Rawalpindi."

A preliminary objection is lodged on behalf of the respondent that these appeals are barred under section 169 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882, which lays down that appeals from any order or decision made or given in the matter of the winding-up of a company by the Court may be had, subject to the restriction that no such appeal shall be heard unless notice of the same is given within three weeks after any order complained of has been made in the manner in which notices of appeal are ordinarily given unless such time is extended by the Court of Appeal. On behalf of the appellants it is urged that the provisions of section 169 of the old Act have not been incorporated in the new Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913 and that in matters of procedure the new Act should be followed and not the old. But section 284 of the new Act lays down that the provisions of the new Act with respect to winding-up shall not apply to any Company of which the winding up has commenced before the commencement of the Act, but that every such Company shall be wound-up in the same manner and with the same incidents as if the new Act had not been passed, and that for the purposes of the winding-up Act VI of 1882 shall be deemed to remain in full force. It is admitted that the winding up in this case commenced before the Act of 1913 came into force and I consider that the provisions of section 284 of the new Act clearly lay down that, for all purposes connected with the winding-up a Company, the old Act shall be regarded as still in force. The present appeal is one of the incidents connected with the winding-up of the Company and I hold that the law applicable is that contained in the old Act of 1882. The same was held in four Single Bench rulings of this Court, namely, Thakar Das v. Official Liquidator, Peshawar Bank Limited (1), Daulat Rai v Wazir Chand [Liquidators, Hindustan Bank Limited] (2), Rhiali Ram v Official Liquidators of the Peoples' Bank of India Limited (3), and Civil Appeal 1753 of 1918, and Counsel is unable to cite any authority to the contrary. I hold, therefore, that the provisions of section 169 of Act VI of 1882 are applicable to this case.

The order of the learned District Judge is dated the 14th June 1921. In the case of appeal filed by Lala Hem Raj and others copy was applied for on the 17th June 1921. The copy was supplied on the 24th of June 1921; the appeal was filed on the 11th July 1921. The Liquidator was not served till October 1921. The three weeks mentioned in section 169 of the Act expired on the 5th of July 1921 and the appeal was not filed by that date. No affidavit explaining cause of delay was put in with the appeal, but the order of the Judge of this Court admitting the appeal to a hearing directed that time for service on the respondent should be extended subject to all just exceptions. I am quite ready to allow extension of time in an appeal of this sort provided that it can be shown to my satisfaction that the appellant has throughout acted with due diligence. The appellant must be presumed to know all the provisions of law applicable to his case and so I shall presume that he knew that he should file his appeal with such promptness that the respondent could be served within the time prescribed by section 169. I am not prepared to say that there was any waste of time in applying for copy of the District Judge's order, seeing that the copy was applied for only three days after the order was passed, but when the copy was supplied on the 24th June the appellant should have realised that out of the 21 days 10 had already passed and only 11 days remained In spite of this, however, the appellant did not lodge his appeal till the 11th June i. e. 17 days after obtaining the copy. The consequence was that owing to this waste of 17 days the appeal was lodged after the period of three weeks mentioned in section 169 had expired. No explanation has been given of this waste of time. The journey from Rawalpindi to Lahore by train takes less than 12 hours and the appeal could have been filed the day after copy had been supplied. I can find no sufficient reason for allowing an extention of time and I dismiss the appeal of Hem Raj and others.

In the case of appeal by Gurdit Singh the copy was applied for on the 17th June 1921 and supplied on the 24th June 1921. This appeal was filed on the 4th July 1921. In this case too no affidavit explaining the delay was filed with the appeal, and no extension of time was asked for or given. Here 10 days were wasted after the copy had been supplied, though the appellant must be presumed to have known of the provisions of section 169. The consequence was that the appeal was lodged only one day before the expiry of the three weeks and it was then quite impossible to effect service of notice on the respondent within the prescribed period. The appellant is a legal practitioner and the only excuse that is offered in his case is that he was away at Karachi attending to some cases of his own. This I regard as quite insufficient to explain away the delay. The appellant was represented in Rawalpindi during his absence by a legal practitioner who, I am told, was a friend of his, If the appellant chose to go away to Karachi leaving his case in charge of a friend any delay on the part of that friend must be regarded as having the same effect as if the appellant had himself delayed.

In both of these cases I consider that want of due diligence in presenting the appeals promptly to this Court has been shown and that no extension should be allowed. I dismiss both of these appeals as barred under the provisions of section 169 of Act VI of 1882, but as these provisions are undoubtedly strict I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debt—Father, decree against—Liability of father's interest in family property.

Under the Mitakshara Law a simple money-decree against a Hindu father which is not shown to have been on the basis of a debt which was tainted with immorality, can be executed against the ancestral property, and the father's interest therein can be attached and sold.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal, arising out of a suit for a declaration that the order of the 14th of February 1920, disallowing the plaintiffs' objection to the attachment of the property in suit, was wrong and that the property, being the ancestral property of the family, was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree, in suit No, 178 of 1918, passed against the plaintiffs' father. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge has allowed the appeal and reversed the decree of the Court of first instance.

It appears that on the 18th of February 1914 Chhidu Singh, defendant No. 2, who is the father of the plaintiffs, executed a mortgage-deed, in respect of the ancestral property, in favour of Kalyan Singh, the present defendant-appellant. On the 11th August 1917 a suit was instituted on behalf of the sons for a declaration that the said mortgage-deed was not binding on them, inasmuch as the debt had not been contracted for any legal necessity. The suit was ultimately decreed. After this, Kalyan Singh brought a suit on the basis of this deed but only asked for a simple money decree against the father. That suit was decreed and when the decree was put in execution "the rights and interests of Chhidu Singh in the joint family property" were attached. An objection was filed, on behalf of the sons, that the attachment was invalid. This objection having been disallowed, the present suit was instituted.

The learned District Judge seems to be of opinion that inasmuch as it was found in the previous suit, that the debt had not been contracted for any valid family necessity and inasmuch as the father is still alive, it is not open to the simple money decree-holder to attach the family property, and he relies on the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). But in our opinion now there is no question as to the Hindu father's authority to transfer any family property. There is a simple money decree against him, which is not shown to have been on the basis of a debt which was tainted with immorality. That being so, that decree can clearly be executed against the father, and the father's interests in the family property can be attached and sold. The case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) does not lay down any contrary rule. On the other hand, an earlier case of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (2), clearly laid down that where a simple money decree had been obtained against a father, that decree could be executed against the ancestral family property under the Mitakshara Law "unless it were shown that the debt was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes." In our opinion the view taken by the learned District Judge was clearly wrong and is in no way supported by the authority quoted by him.

The result is that we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit.

HARIDASI DASI AND OTHERS— APPELLANTS

BIDHUMUKHI DASI—RESPONDENT.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50— Hindu reversioner, whether entitled to be heard in Probate proceeding—Application for revocation of Probate—Immediate female reversioner not entitled to maintain application—Next reversioner, if can apply —Minor reversioners—Natural guardian omitting to apply for revocation—Reversioners, whether estopped.

Although a reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present interest in the property left by the deceased, yet the reversioner, whether male or female, is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate, and, as such, is entitled to appear and be heard in a Probate proceeding. If the immediate reversioner is a female, the male reversioner in the second or third degree, as the case may be, (for instance, where the deceased has left a widow, daughter, mother and brother), is similarly entitled to be heard. [p. 797, cols 1 & 2.]

Where the immediate reversioner, a female, has rendered it impossible for himself by her own conduct to successfully maintain an application for revocation of a Probate, the application may be made by the next male reversioner who is unquestionably a proper party to the Probate proceedings. JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of dismissal made on an application to revoke a Probate under section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act. Priya Nath Ghose, the alleged testator, died on the 13th November, 1907. He left a widow, Bidhumukhi Dasi, a daughter, Haridasi Dasi, and two sons by her Pramatha Nath and Anadinath. On the 16th July 1908 the widow applied for Probate of a Will said to have been executed by the deceased on the 26th October 1907. The application, which was supported by the affidavits of two of the attesting witnesses, did not mention that the testator had left a daughter or two sons by her who would successively take the estate in the event of intestacy. A general citation was thereupon issued but no special citation was or could be served upon the relatives of the deceased. As there was no opposition, the Probate was granted on the affidavits on the 21st August 1908. On the 21st May 1919, the present application for revocation of the Probate was made by Haridasi and her two sons, Pramatha Nath and Anadinath, on the allegation that the Will set up was not genuine. The application was opposed by the widow. The District Judge has refused the application of Haridasi on the ground that she was aware of the Probate proceedings, and that the fact that no special citation had been issued to her was in the circumstances not sufficient to justify the revocation of the Probate, on the principle explained by this Court in the case of Prem Chand Das v. Surendra Nath Saha (1). As regards the application by Pramatha Nath and Anadinath, the District Judge has held that they had no interest in the property during the lifetime of their mother and were not consequently necessary or proper parties to the Probate proceedings.

It is not necessary to consider whether in view of the decision in Ramgopal Das v. Radhakrishna Das (2), the Probate was properly granted on affidavits or whether the application made by Haridasi Dasi has been properly refused, because there is no room for serious controversy that the application made by Pramatha Nath and Anadinath should have been granted. It is plain that in the event of intestacy Pramatha Nath and Anadinath would be ultimately entitled to succeed to the estate of their maternal grandfather, Priya Nath Ghose, in their own right and not through their mother. Consequently, if the alleged testamentary instrument is not genuine, their position has been seriously affected by the grant of the Probate, inasmuch as the result of the Will is to alter the line of succession and to divert the estate into new channels. In such circumstances, the daughter's sons would prima facie be entitled to intervene in the Probate proceedings, on the well-established principle relating to the true position of reversioner of the second degree, as explained in the case of Abinash Chandra Mozumdar v. Harinath Saha (3) in the following terms:

"In the case in which, upon the death of a full owner, the estate successively passes through the hands of a series of female heirs, who take only a qualified estate, before the property vests in another full owner, they may rightly be regarded in the aggregate as the holder of a limited interest which intervenes between the full ownership of the original owner and the ultimate taker. Each of these recipients of the limited interest has three common characteristics, namely, first, each possesses only a qualified right of alienation; secondly, not one of them can transmit the property to her own heirs, but it passes upon her death to the heir for the time being of the last full owner, and, thirdly, not one of them can alienate the estate absolutely even with the consent of the next female reversionary heir, for where the next reversioner is herself a female who only takes a life-estate, her consent will not bind the next reversioner who takes an absolute estate: in other words, the assent of a female reversionary heir to an alienation made by a female heir cannot confer upon it a character of greater validity than it would have possessed if it had been made by herself. . . There is a substantial distinction between the case in which a remote reversioner who would take an absolute interest, sues for a declaratory decree in the presence of a nearer male reversionary heir and the case in which such a suit is brought in the presence of a nearer female reversionary heir. It follows consequently that a male reversionary heir who would be entitled to the property absolutely, if he succeeded to it, ought to be allowed to challenge an unauthorised alienation by the holder of a qualified estate, whether or not such female heir is his immediate predecessor or is separated from him by the interposition of other possible female heirs."

The view thus expounded has been adopted and applied in a variety of cases. As an example, reference may be made to the judgment of this Court in the case of Harak Chand Babu v. Bijoy Chand Mahatab (4) where the following observation was made: "where there are several reversioners entitled successively under the Hindu Law to an estate held by a Hindu widow, no one such reversioner can rightly be held to claim through or derive his title from another, but he derives his title from the last full owner, and, therefore, although the right of the nearest reversioner for the time being to contest an alienation or an adoption by the widow may have become barred by limitation against him, this will not bar the similar rights of the subsequent reversioner." This principle has been followed by the Madras High Court in Gazzala Veerayya v. Gazzala Ganamma (5) and Narayana Aiyar v. Rama Aiyar (6).

For other illustrations, reference may be made to the decisions in Srinibash Das v. Monmohini Dasi (7) and Bepin Behari Kundu v. Durga Charan Banerji (8). In the case last mentioned, Mr. Justice Doss stated the principle in these words: "if the widow had, with the concurrence of the daughters alienated the property in favour of a stranger, the alience would not have taken any larger estate than the limited and qualified estate of the widow or of the daughters, for the alienee cannot have a larger estate than that possessed by the alienor, and the coalition of the estate of the widow with that of the daughters not having the effect of amplifying the quantum of the resultant estate." This principle was applied in Roja Dei v. Umed Singh (9) and Chidambara Reddiar v. Nallammal (10).

In the case before us, there is no doubt that, apart from all questions of acquiescence, the application for revocation could have been made and was properly made by Haridasi Dasi, the immediate reversioner. The decisions in Khettramoni Dasi v. Shyama Churn Kundu (11), Brindaban Chunder Shaha v. Sureshwar Saha (12) and Shyama Charan v. Prafulla Sundari (13) show that although a reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present interest in the property left by the deceased, the reversioner, whether male or female, is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate, and, as such, is entitled to appear and be heard in a Probate proceeding. If the immediate reversioner is a female, the male reversioner in the second or third degree, as the case may be (for instance where the deceased has left a widow, daughter, mother and brother), is similarly entitled to be heard. In the present case, the immediate reversioner, Haridasi, has rendered it impossible for herself by her own conduct, to maintain the application successfully; consequently, the application may be made by Pramatha Nath and Anadinath who, as the ultimate reversioners, were unquestionably proper parties to the Probate proceedings, this is clear from the decisions in Brindaban Chunder Shaha v. Sureshwar Saha (12) and Shyama Churn v. Profulla Sundari (13).

We have been pressed, however, to hold on the authority of the decisions in Nistariny Dabyu v. Brahmomoyi Dabya (14), Kunja Lal Chowdhury v. Kailash Chandra Chowdhury (15), Nalini Sundari Gupta v. Bejoy Kumar Roy Chowdhury (16), Prem Chand Das v. Surendra Nath Saha (1) that Pramatha Nath and Anadinath should be held incompetent to maintain the present application in the same way as their mother, because the evidence indicates that their father who was their natural guardian was aware of the Probate proceedings. It is clear, that at the time of those proceedings, Anadinath and possibly Parmatha Nath also had not attained majority. Assuming that their father was aware of the Probate proceedings and yet did not intervene therein, on their behalf, we cannot hold that his omission can prejudice the position of the infants. The case of Nistariny Dabya v. Brahmomoyi Dabya (14) is clearly distinguishable. There a person professing to be the guardian of the infants had intervened for their protection. He succeeded in the Court of first instance, but upon appeal the decision of the primary Court was reversed. In these circumstances, this Court held that the infant could not be permitted to re open the proceedings through another guardian. No such consideration obviously arises in this case. Nor is there room for application of the theory, as there was in the case of Hindu Law—Gift—Gift by Hindu lady with reservation of usufruct for her life, validity of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 123, effect of, on gift by Hindu - Gift, how effectuated—Statutes, interpretation of—Long and established interpretation.

A Hindu lady who is the full proprietor of immoveable property can by a registered document, duly signed and attested, validly make an immediate gift of it, although she reserves to herself the enjoyment of the usufruct or profits of a part of the property for her lifetime and without retaining power of alienation over it.

There is nothing in the Hindu Law which on principle would make a reservation of the usufruct of a part of the property for life by the donor, or the postponement of the enjoyment by the donee of a part of the profits till after the donor's death, a repugnant condition and render the gift invalid. [p. 801, col. 2.]

The effect of section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act is to supersede the rule of Hindu Law, if there was any, for making the delivery of possession absolutely essential for the completion of the gift, and a provision in a deed of gift that no such delivery is to take place during the lifetime of the donor would not necessarily invalidate it. The effect of section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act is that a gift of immoveable property even in the case of a Hindu can be validly effected by a registered instrument, signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses, and that such a gift cannot be effected in any other way. [p. 799, col. 2.]

Where the terms of a Statute or Ordinance are clear, a long and uniform course of judicial interpretation of it may be overruled, if it is contrary to the clear meaning of the enactment; but where such is not the case, it is the duty of a Judge to accept the interpretation so often and so long put upon the Statute by the Courts, and not to disturb those decisions. First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point referred to the Full Bench for consideration is the question of the validity or otherwise of a deed of gift, dated the 29th of January 1894, executed by Musammat Tulsha Kunwar, in favour of her only daughter, Musammat Naraini Kunwar. This document recites that Musammat Naraini Kunwar was her sole issue, and the donor wished to give the entire property in seven villages to her; but that, inasmuch as during her lifetime she had also to provide for her own maintenance and other necessary expenses, and it was reprehensive and forbidden for her to receive any benefit or to take anything from her daughter, she considered it proper to get the name of her daughter recorded over four villages at once, but to remain in possession of the other three villages for her life, meeting the expenses of her maintenance and other necessary expenses from the profits thereof. But all the seven villages were comprised in the gift, and it was stated that she had no longer any claim or right left in respect of all the property gifted, and the donee would have all the powers of a proprietor, with this exception that the three villages last mentioned would remain in her possession during her life and she would bring the profits thereof into her use, but she would have no power of sale, mortgage, gift, or other transfer, and they would after her death come into the proprietary possession of her daughter.

It is an admitted fact that Musammat Tulsha Kunwar allowed Musammat Naraini Kunwar to obtain possession over the four villages first mentioned, and got her name recorded in respect of them in the revenue papers. There is thus no doubt as to the genuineness of her intention. It is assumed for the purpose of this reference that Musammat Tulsha Kunwar was the full proprietor, and the only question is as to the validity of the gift in respect of the three villages, over which she had retained the right of remaining in possession for life and did in fact retain possession. Musammat Naraini Kunwar died in the lifetime of Musammat Tulsha Kunwar, and the present dispute is between the respective heirs of the two ladies.

Reading the document as a whole, there can be no doubt that it was not a bequest of the three villages by Musammat Tulsha Kunwar in favour of her daughter, but that she did intend to effect a transfer in presenti of her proprietary interest in the three villages, though she stipulated that she would have the right to remain in effective possession of them by appropriation of their profits for her life.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant has urged, (1) that under the Hindu Law delivery of possession was absolutely essential for the completion of the gift, (2) that that provision of the Hindu Law has in no way been affected by the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and (3) that in any case a provision, that the donor is not to deliver possession during her life-time to the donee, vitiates the gift altogether.

As to the first point it may be conceded at once that the general trend of the authorities prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act was to the effect that under the Hindu Law a gift, unaccompanied by delivery of possession, was invalid. A number of cases on this point have been cited on behalf of the appellant, but we consider it unnecessary to review them. It may be assumed for the purpose of this case that the defendant's contention is correct.

We are, however, of opinion that whatever might have been the strict Hindu Law prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, it must now be held that a gift of immoveable property can be validly effected by a registered instrument, signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses, and that nothing further is necessary to effectuate a transfer. Section 129 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that nothing in Chapter 7 shall, save as provided by section 123, be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu Law. This clearly indicates that section 123 might supersede a rule of Hindu Law. Section 123 provides that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument duly signed and attested, whereas for the purpose of making a gift of moveable property the transfer may be effected by a registered instrument duly signed or by delivery. It is obvious that under the latter clause a gift of moveable property can be effected by a duly signed and registered instrument and without delivery. This does away with the provision of Hindu Law, requiring delivery of possession as regards moveable property. Now, the first clause uses the word "must" which is significant, and omits the words "or by delivery". A reasonable interpretation of section 123 would, therefore, be that a registered instrument duly signed and attested is quite sufficient to effect a gift of immoveable property, and that such a gift can be effected in no other way.

Dr. Katju, on behalf of the appellant, has strongly contended that by section 123 it was merely intended to add one more requirement of law, namely, that of attestation and registration, to those enjoined by the Hindu Law, and that the section did not mean that where there was a registered document duly signed and attested, all the other requirements of Hindu Law were dispensed with. Section 123 has, however, been interpreted by all the High Courts continuously for a very long period in the way first indicated, and there is now a uniform consensus of opinion that the effect of section 123 is to supersede the rule of Hindu Law, if there was any, for making the delivery of possession absolutely essential for the completion of the gift. We may only refer to a few cases for the sake of reference, Dharmodas v. Nistarini Dasi (1), Balbhadra v. Bhowani (2), Alabi Koya v. Musia Koya (3), Madhavrao Moreshvar v. Kashibai Dattubhai (4), Man Bhari v. Narindh (5) Balmakund v. Bhagwan Das (6)and Thul Chand v. Lakhhu (7). Where the terms of a Statute or Ordinance are clear, then even a long and uniform course of judicial interpretation of it may be overruled, if it is contrary to the clear meaning of the enactment; but where such is not the case, then it is our duty to accept the interpretation so often and so long put upon the Statute by the Courts, and not to disturb those decisions, vide the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Sri Sri Gopinath Thakur (8). We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that it must now be accepted that the provisions of section 123 do away with the necessity for the delivery of possession, even if it was required by the strict Hindu Law.

The third point raised by the learned Advocate for the appellant requires a little consideration. It has been very strenuously contended that where the deed of gift itself provides that the donor is to retain possession over the property and appropriate the profits, the transaction is void ab initio and is not a valid gift under the Hindu Law at all. Reliance is strongly placed on a number of cases which were decided prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, in which it was held that the delivery of possession was absolutely essential, and it is contended that when the delivery of possession was essential, then a provision in the deed that no delivery was to take place at all, invalidates the gift altogether.

In the first place, these earlier cases were decided prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and the provisions of section 123 of the Act were not applicable. Now that the delivery of possession is no longer necessary, it would follow that a provision in the deed of gift that no such delivery was to take place during the lifetime of the donor, would not necessarily invalidate it.

In the second place, the reservation of a temporary advantage or a limited benefit does not necessarily militate against a complete transfer of the title, and unless there is something in Hindu Law which is repugnant to it, it must be upheld. Now, according to our interpretation, the true intention of the donor was to effect a transfer in presenti of the proprietary interest in the three villages in dispute and to vest the same in the donee, with a reservation of the right to enjoy the usufruct during her own lifetime. We do not consider that she meant to create two distinct and separate estates; one, which she reserved for herself, and the other which she bestowed on the donee, providing that the estate which she had reserved for herself would also vest in the donee after her own death. On the other hand, we are distinctly of opinion that the whole interest in the three villages vested immediately in the donee, and the donor had no power of disposal left over it. The only right that was reserved to her was to enjoy the profits thereof. There was an immediate gift of all the seven villages, but the enjoyment by the donee of the profits of three villages was postponed till after the death of the donor.

Such a gift is not in any way opposed to Common Law or to public policy, nor is such a transfer invalid under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. We have, therefore, to see whether there is anything in the Hindu Law which is repugnant to it. No authority which is exactly in point has been cited before us on either side. The learned Advocate for the appellant has however, referred to us the case of Dagri Dabe v. Mothura Nath Chattopadhya (9). There the gift was not governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The view then expressed was that the gift of a house, in a case where the donor reserved to himself the right of remaining in the house for the term of his life and which was unaccompanied by physical delivery, or any symbolical act by which physical delivery could be held to be implied, was invalid. The decision was based entirely on the supposed rule of Hindu Law that delivery of complete possession was absolutely essential. That ruling is hardly in consonance with the opinion expressed by the Calcutta High Court in subsequent cases. The case cited in Macnaghten's Hindu Law, Volume II, at page 207, is not in point, because there the competition was between a gift, unaccompanied by the delivary of possession, which was to take effect after the death of the donor, and a subsequent gift by which the donor delivered possession to another donee. That was strictly not the case of a gift in præsenti, but something in the nature of a bequest. At that time testamentary dispositions not having been separately recognized, the case was treated as falling under the heading of gifts

Lastly, the case of Harjivan Anandram v. Naran Haribhai (10) has been cited, and our attention is particularly drawn to the texts quoted at page 34. But there, too, the possibility of the donor retaining possession of the property with the consent of the donee is recognised. We cannot take these texts necessarily to imply that the donor cannot gift away the property with a condition attached, reserving the usufruct of a part of the property to himself for life. The other cases cited are not directly in point.

A reference has also been made to a passage in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lal Sett (11) to the effect that "gifts are of three kinds—those which convey a present title and interest, and a present right of enjoyment; those which are vested, that is, present in interest, but in which the enjoyment is deferred; and those which are contingent, that is to say, in which neither title nor right of enjoyment is given at present, but both depend upon future and certain events. All these kinds of gifts are admissible among Hindus, all are recognized by the Succession Act, the Hindu Wills Act, and the Transfer of Property Act. All these kinds of gifts may among Hindus be given subject to various restrictions, either inter vivos or by Will, and, speaking generally, the same law applies in either case." But this remark is certainly an obiter dictum.

In West and Buhler's Digest of Hindu Law, 4th Edition, at page 188, it is stated that the grantor may stipulate or provide for various advantages to himself or to others arising out of the property, and so far diminish the advantages of the proprietor in it, and then on page 190 it is said on the authority of Jagannath that the gift of property is valid though it be accompanied by the donor's retention of a life-interest. No distinction was, however, made by Jagannath between a gift and a testamentary disposition. The case of Kasim Husain v. Sharif-un-nissa (12), where a gift of a Muafi Estate with a reservation of the income of that share without power of alienation for life was held to be valid, was a case under the Muhammadan Law and is not applicable to the present case.

In the absence of any clear authority restricting the power of the donor, we are of opinion that there is nothing in the Hindu Law which on principle would make a reservation of the usufruct of a part of the property for life by the donor, or the postponement of the enjoyment by the donee of a part of the profits till after the donor's death, a repugnant condition and render the gift invalid. Furthermore, we are of opinion that, inasmuch as the Legislature has now dispensed with the necessity of delivery of possession in the case of gifts by Hindu donors, a reservation of the kind indicated above would now much less affect the validity of such gifts. Under the Hindu Law gift and its acceptance by donee are essential. Here both these elements exist.

Our answer to the reference, therefore, is that a Hindu lady who is the full proprietor Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 75, O. XXVI—Commission, issue of—Court delegating functions to Commissioner.

Section 75 of the Civil Procedure Code defines clearly the circumstances under which a commission may be issued, and does not authorise a Court to delegate to a Commissioner the trial of any material issue which it is itself bound to try. [p. 803, col. 2.]

Sangili v. Mookan, 16 M. 350; 3 M. L. J. 187; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 951, relied upon.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 17th April 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hissar, dated the 4th March 1915.

Mr. Philip Morton, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Pandit and Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff firm sued the defendants alleging them to be a Hindu joint family and claiming to recover from them as such Rs. 1,217-10-3. The case was carefully tried by the Subordinate Judge and a lucid and well-expressed judgment was written by him, disposing of all the points in dispute and dismissing the suit. On appeal the District Judge first heard the arguments, and then apparently on his own motion referred every question arising in the case, and in fact one question which had not arisen at that stage, to Lala Sheo Narain and issued a most comprehensive commission to him. This gentleman died before he was able to do anything, and his son, Lala Joti Parshad, was appointed in his place. A full report was submitted, but apparently no evidence was taken, though the statements of the parties were recorded. The District Judge then pronounced judgment and accepted the findings of the Commissioner throughout.

On appeal it is urged that the only possible point on which the District Judge could have been justified in issuing a commission was the examination of accounts, and that in this case he was not justified in doing so, as the question of the correctness of the accounts had not only not been challenged but had not even arisen, the defence having been that the defendants had no sort of dealings with the plaintiff firm and the finding being that this was so. Until, therefore, the District Judge reversed the decision of the lower Court and found that there had been dealings, the question of the amount due on those dealings did not arise, and when it did the usual and natural procedure would have been to remand the case for a decision. Not content with issuing a commission which might be necessary at some later stage, the District Judge directed the Commissioner to decide every single material issue whether of law or fact and, in a word, to do his work for him. Counsel for the respondents urges that, even so, there are findings of fact and, in the words of Durga Chowdhrani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (1) that there was evidence before the Court. The very form of the judgment shows that the way in which the District Judge approached the case was to accept the opinion of the Commissioner as final and conclusive unless the plaintiff could show how and where it was wrong. He made no reference to the evidence on the record nor to the well-expressed judgment of the Trial Court, and we are satisfied that, in the sense of being considered by him, the evidence was not before him, though he had the knowledge that ample evidence had been given.

As to the scope of the commission, Counsel for the respondents urges that O. XXVI amplifies and explains section 75 and that the Court is at liberty to issue a commission on any subject whatsoever and not merely on the subjects given in heads (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 75 and dealt with in the first four branches of O. XXVI, the headings of which repeat the wording of that section. With this contention we cannot agree. Section 75 runs:—"Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed," those conditions and limitations being contained in the subsequent Orders. The words on which Counsel relies are to be found in r. 9 of O. XXVI—"In any suit in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute"—and these come immediately under the heading "commissions for local investigations." Here there was no question of a local investigation and no such investigation was made, and all that the Commissioner did, and apparently all that he understood he was required to do, was to give an opinion on the case generally and on each of the issues of law and fact.

Counsel for the respondents further urges that the commission having been accepted by the defendants-appellants they cannot now question it. There is nothing whatever to show that they accepted the commission or agreed to having one issued. All that they did was to accept Lala Joti Parshad after the death of his father as a suitable person to do the work which the Court had decided to entrust to a Commissioner.

The most material point in the case was, whether a certain document had been signed by Sawan Mal, defendant. On this the Commissioner gave an opinion as an expert witness which may be good or bad, and this opinion was accepted by the District Judge. The finding as to the amount shown to be due in the accounts is given by the District Judge in the following words:—"The Commissioner's calculation is not shown by the respondents' Pleader to be erroneous in any way." We are of opinion that section 75 defines clearly the circumstances under which a commission may be issued, and Sangili v. Mookan (2) explains that it does not authorise a Court to delegate to a Commissioner the trial of any material issue which it is bound to try. We find, therefore, that there has been a grave irregularity in the issuing of a commission at all, that the District Judge has not done his duty, inasmuch as he has not come to an independent finding on the material issues in the case, that the findings, such as they are, are not based on the evidence on the record and that, so far as the District Court is concerned, the case has not been tried at all. Counsel for the appellants states that his clients never questioned the correctness of the accounts and do not question them now, and that if their liability be held to be proved a decree should be passed against them for the total amount claimed. The necessity, therefore, for examining the accounts in order to see what amount is due wholly disappears, even if the defendants, or any of them, be held to be liable, and what is required is a clear finding on the various material issues.

We remand the case to the District Judge for a decision on the merits wholly independent of the Commissioner's report which should be entirely ignored. It is unnecessary for us to frame any fresh issues as those framed by the Trial Court are correct and exhaustive.

Second appeal.

Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition instituted by the plaintiff-respondent, Sudarshan Ram Tewari, against the appellants The plaintiff on the 10th February 1914 obtained a conveyance from one Palta Kuer and her son Ram Surat Sukul. Palta Kuer, according to the case of the plaintiff, inherited the share which was of Ram Yad. According to the case of the plaintiff Ram Yad was separate from the predecessors in-title of the defendants. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground that Ram Yad was joint with their predecessors-in-title and that on Ram Yad's death, the interest which was of Ram Yad survived to them and did not vest in Palta Kuer, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff. The Courts below have concurrently held that Ram Yad was separate from the predecessors-in-title of the defendants, and that his share vested on his death in his widow, Sheo Tabla Kuer, and that on her death it vested in her daughter Palta Kuer. On this finding the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition if in fact he had obtained joint possession of the property on the execution of the conveyance in his favour by Palta Kuer and Ram Surat Sukul.

In this Court it has been ingeniously argued by Mr Shiveshwar Dayal on behalf on the defendants appellants that Palta Kuer not being cited in the action as a defendant, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for partition. The argument of Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal is this: that upon the finding of the Court that Ram Yad was separate from the defendants' predecessors-in-title, it is open now to Palta Kuer and to her son Ram Surat Sukul to institute a suit for partition as against them and he says that in order to prevent Palta Kuer and her son Ram Surat Sukul from harassing them, the Court should have insisted upon the plaintiff bringing Palta Kuer and her son in the record as parties defendants. I quite agree that Palta Kuer and Ram Surat Sukul would be proper parties to an action for partition, but I am not prepared to say that they were necessary parties to the action. In my opinion, the appellants would be entitled to succeed on this point only if it could be shown that on the judgments of the Courts below or on the admission of the plaintiff there was an interest which was outstanding in somebody else and was not represented in the action. Now, that is not the conclusion at which the Courts below have arrived. Their conclusion is that the interest of Palta Kuer has properly vested in the plaintiff; there is, therefore, no interest according to the decision of the Courts below outstanding in any body who is not a party to the suit. The Courts cannot possibly prevent Palta Kuer from instituting a suit if she likes against the parties to the suit.

The only question which we have to decide is this: is Palta Kuer a necessary party to the suit? In my opinion she is not, and the argument of Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal on this point must fail.

It was then argued that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for possession since the Court of first instance has come to the conclusion that Palta Kuer is in possession of some of the properties in suit. It has been argued that in order to succeed in a suit for partition there must not only be the unity of title but that there must be unity of possession and that if, on the finding of the Court below, the plaintiff is not in possession of the properties he is not entitled to a decree for partition. That is true, but still the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for joint possession and for partition. That argument is really an argument on Court fees and does not affect the merits of the case. If, indeed, Palta Kuer is still in possession of the property, the plaintiff may have some difficulty in enforcing the decree which he has obtained, but we have nothing to do with that question. The question is one of technicality without any merit to recommend it.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—In our view this appeal fails. It raises in form a nice question of onus in a case where the law has uncontrovertibly placed the onus of proof to support a mortgage of family property upon the shoulders of the creditor. It is sufficient, for the purpose of the preceding statement, to refer to the judgment of Sir John Stanley in the case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (1) which has received the expressed approval and adoption, if one may use the term, of the Privy Council, more than once and particularly in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), and we, of course, faithfully adhere to that decision which may be said to have a force in India equivalent to Statute Law.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 479; 31 A. 176; 6 A. L. J. 263 (F. B.).

We adopt also the principle laid down by the Privy Council, as expressed in the concluding words of the opinion of their Lordships delivered by Lord Shaw in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), where he says that in order to validate a transaction of mortgage of family property by the father or manager there must be not only formal antecedency, but antecedency in date combined with real dissociation in fact. The Courts in India are warned not to give effect to mortgages brought into existence merely to cover a breach of trust and what is called an unreal antecedency.

But the question of onus is not a mere question of law. Once the principle of onus has been settled, the question still remains in the decision of each particular case, as to whether, having regard to the transactions which have been established by evidence, the onus still remains where it was, or whether, on the other hand, it has been made to shift, and one might cite, if any useful purpose would be served by citing them, cases in which the onus has been shifted several times during the process of elucidating a case in consonance throughout with the general principle of law governing the question of onus in such circumstances. So that in each particular case, whether the onus has been shifted or not, it becomes a mixed question of fact and law, or rather a question of the due application of a recognized principle to the shifting scenes and circumstances of the countless varieties of human life in business. An illustration of the way in which the onus may be totally shifted without any express evidence beyond what may be afforded by the documents or the admitted circumstances of the case, which are common ground to both parties, is to be found in the case of Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (3) where ancient documents affecting an alienation by Hindu widows, which would a priori be totally contrary to law and which contain mere recitals of necessity which prove nothing except that the parties to the deeds were anxious to make other people believe that there had been necessity, and the admitted circumstances in which such deeds had been entered into, were held sufficient as a matter of fact and common sense to shift the onus, and in the absence of anything to the contrary, to justify the findings of fact sufficient to support the documents. In this case we have (we do not propose to enter into a detailed history of the transaction), broadly speaking, a document which is sued upon in 1918 dated 1906 in respect of which the creditor has succeeded in showing a sum roughly of Rs. 3,071 to have been made up of various liabilites, not in themselves open to objection, except two earlier mortgage-bond liabilities dated respectively 1898 and 1899. It is in respect of these two mortgage bond liabilities that Dr. Sen in his able argument has seriously challenged the view taken by the learned Judge. On the question of legal necessity these two documents are silent. They do no more than re-open previous liabilities traceable to four prior transactions, two of which had occurred in 1892 and two in 1897, which are brought forward, and re-affirmed as existing liabilities and discharged by the fresh contracts made in 1897 and 1899. These prior transactions are not on the record. Both parties were either content, or compelled, to rest upon the state of the evidence without the assistance of these documents, and to rely upon such inferences as the Court could legitimately draw from the evidence in such condition. There is nothing to show us, and it by no means follows from one's experience of these and other instances, that, if these documents had been brought upon the record, they would not again have opened out a fresh vista of prior transactions of business loans brought forward, and re affirmed by them, and throwing the parties back another stage in the history of this family's borrowings. As a matter of business and common sense, which are really matters of fact, we decline to take judicial notice of the fact that fathers of joint Hindu families, or managers or kartas, as the case may be, where the father is dead, are necessarily and chiefly occupied in going out of their way to borrow money for purposes which they know to be unlawful and which can confer no benefit upon the general body of the family to which they belong and of which they are the respected heads. On the contrary, the presumption must be in their favour, viz., that inasmuch as their own interests are indissolubly interwoven with the interests, and, one may say, also the affections of the other members of the family, it is after all not paying a very high compliment to their character and natural inclination to presume, unless there is something to arouse suspicion in the evidence of the case, that the object of going through all this trouble of raising loans is to assist and benefit the joint family. The learned Judge in this case has contented himself with finding that the Rs. 3,000 was borrowed for legal necessity to pay antecedent debts and for family expenses and that, therefore, to that extent the sons were bound by the mortgage, and nobody can doubt, to apply Lord Shaw's language, that the transactions of 1898 and 1899 were really antecedent and dissociated in fact. The opinion of the Privy Council, as expressed by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (3), seems to us to be peculiarly appropriate. To hold otherwise, that is to say, to hold in cases of transactions which go back beyond the stage at which direct evidence can possibly be expected from the creditor, and to destroy the liability if such evidence is not forthcoming, would result in deciding that a title becomes weaker as it grows older, so that a transaction perfectly honest and legitimate when it took place, would ultimately be incapable of justification merely owing to the passage of time.

We are prepared to hold in this and similar cases that, in the absence of evidence tending to shake confidence in the transactions themselves, or in the conduct and care of the manager, or of the creditor, the onus is shifted back on to the sons or members of the family who desire to repudiate the transactions. We might add to the observations of Lord Buckmaster that to hold otherwise is to hold out to litigants the deliberate invitation, one might use the word temptation, to attempt to conform to an impossible standard of evidence by calling direct testimony which must of necessity be valueless and frequently deliberately perjured. There is enough of this sort of thing in the Trial Courts as it is without any further encouragement being given to it by us. Taking a broad view, although there are exceptions to every rule, we ourselves are not prepared to call upon the creditor to trace every rupee in a transaction which, broadly speaking, is obviously honest and properly entered into. We think that the creditor has done all that he was required to do by the decisions of the Privy Council in this matter, that the learned Judge has come to a right conclusion and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144, object of—Loss caused independently of execution of decree reversed, whether recoverable.

Under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code a decree-holder can claim compensation only for the loss caused to him by reason of the execution of the decree reversed on appeal and not for any loss caused independently of the same.

A entered into possession of certain land in execution of a decree obtained against B, but was again dispossessed by the latter. By and by B got the decree set aside but it was sometime before he entered into possession under the same formally. A eventually got the decree restored in second appeal and claimed mesne profits under section 144 beginning from the time when B got the decree of the first Court set aside :

Held, that mesne profits could be claimed under that section only from the time when B entered into possession in pursuance of his decree formally and not from the date when he got the decree of the First Court set aside, as A, even though dispossessed by B, must be deemed to have been in possession in execution of the decree passed in his favour by the Court of first instance until he was formally evicted therefrom by the process of law.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jhang at Sargodha, dated the 19th November 1919, modifying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jhang, dated the 1st May 1919.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.
Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree for possession of land, and the dispute between the parties relates to the amount of compensation which the decree-holder is entitled to claim on account of the loss suffered by him by reason of the judgment-debtors having realised the produce of the land for which he has obtained a decree from the Court of final appeal. The relevant facts are as follows:—The respondent, Radhu Ram, whose land had been sold during his minority by his two brothers, obtained from the Trial Court a decree for possession of the land on 24th August 1911, and got possession in execution of the decree on 5th March 1912. The decree in his favour was, however, reversed by the Divisional Judge on 3rd January 1913, with the result that the possession of the land was taken back from him on 3rd July 1914. Radhu Ram appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed the decree of the Divisional Judge and restored that of the Court of first instance. This final decree was passed on the 11th March 1915*, but Radhu did not recover possession until the 16th October 1916.

He now claims mesne profits for seven harvests, and his claim for three harvests, namely, Kharif 1914 Rabi 1915, and Kharif 1915, is admitted. The dispute in the Court of the District Judge was consequently narrowed down to the following four harvests, namely, Kharif 1911, Kharif 1913, Rabi 1914 and Rabi 1916, and with respect to all these harvests the learned Judge finds that the judgment-debtors realised the produce to which the decree-holder was entitled. In view of this finding of fact Mr. M. S. Bhagat for the appellant does not dispute the liability of his client in respect of mesne profit for Rabi 1916.

As regards Kharif 1911, the learned Counsel contends that though the decree-holder got his decree in the original Court on 24th August 1911, he did not obtain possession in pursuance of that decree until the 5th of March 1912 and that as the crop in question relates to a period prior to the latter date, the decree holder cannot ask the Court of Execution to award him mesne profits with respect to that harvest. Now, it is clear that section 144, Civil Procedure Code, under which the decree-holder applied to the Court of Execution, empowers that Court only to order restitution, that is to say, to restore to the party what he has lost in execution of an erroneous decree passed against him which decree has been reversed on appeal. The provisions of the aforesaid section would help the decree-holder in getting compensation for any loss caused to him by reason of the execution of the decree of the Divisional Judge, but do not entitle him to recover mesne profits for a period which had elapsed before he executed the decree passed in his favour by the Court of first instance. It was open to him to include in his plaint a claim for mesne profits and the Court could then have awarded him mesne profits for a period not exceeding three years subsequent to the date of the decree, vide, O XX, r. 12, Civil Procedure Code. No such claim was, however, made, and the decree, as it stands, does not grant him any relief with respect to mesne profits.

Mr. Fakir Chand for the decree-holder is unable to cite any law which would justify the award of mesne profits for Kharif 1911 by the Court of Execution. Accordingly I hold that mesne profits for that harvest cannot be allowed to the decree-holder.

*See Radhu Ram v. Mohan Singh, 29 Ind. Cas. 199. —[Ed.]

With respect to the remaining two harvests, namely, Kharif 1913 and Rabi 1914 it is contended that, though the judgment-debtors got the decree of the Court of first instance set aside on 3rd of January 1913, they did not recover possession of the land in pursuance of that decree until the 3rd of July 914, and that, so far as the Court is concerned, the decree holder must be deemed to have been in possession of the property from the 5th March 1912, the date on which he obtained possession in execution of the decree passed in his favour by the original Court, until he was evicted on 3rd July 1914 by the process of law. This contention is, in my opinion, correct. If the judgment-debtors wrongfully realised the produce of the land for a period during which the decree-holder was in possession, he cannot ask the Court of Execution to help him. The object of section 144 is that anything done in execution of a decree reversed on appeal should, so far as possible, be undone; and that the party, who has been finally victorious, should be placed in the position which he would have occupied, if the erroneous decree had not been carried out. Now, as pointed out above that decree was carried out only on 3rd July 1914; and section 144 has, therefore, no bearing upon any act done by the judgment-debtors prior to that date.

Here again Mr. Faqir Chand expresses his inability to invite my attention to any provision of law which would help his client. I must accordingly hold that the decree-holder is entitled to mesne profits for four harvests only; and the District Judge has, after a consideration of the evidence, found that the price of the produce for three harvests amounts to Rs. 268.

As regards interest on the produce, it is sufficient to say that the definition of mesne profits as contained in section 2, sub section (12) of the Civil Procedure Code, includes not only the profits of immoveable property but also interest on such profits. The rate of interest may be such as the Court deems reasonable, and the Courts below have given good reasons for awarding interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The learned Counsel for the appellant has not been able to satisfy me that the rate is, in the circumstances mentioned by the Courts below, excessive, and should be reduced.

The result is that I accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the Courts below remit the case to the Court of first instance, and direct it to ascertain the total amount due to the decree holder in respect of mesne profits for four harvests. The value of the produce should be calculated at the rate of Rs. 268/3=89⅓ per harvest. To the amount thus determined interest must be added at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum from the date on which the sum on account of each harvest became due, up to the date of realisation. The decree-holder shall be entitled to proportionate costs on the amount found due to him.

TULA RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Burden of proof—Execution of document, proof of—Admission of signature by other party—Onus, whether shifted.

An admission by a defendant regarding the putting of a signature or a thumb-mark on a document while he maintains that the paper when he signed it was blank is not such an admission of the execution of the document as to thrust the burden of proving his case upon him. It is for the plaintiff to prove due execution of the document. [p. 810, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiv Prasad Sinha for Messrs. A. Sanyal and Sarkar Bahadur Johri, for the Respondent.

PIRBHU DAYAL v. TULA RAM.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for specific performance of an agreement to sell property the case for the plaintiff being that on the 20th of January 1919 the defendant had executed a written agreement undertaking to convey certain immoveable property to him. The story was that on the day aforesaid, the property of the defendant, Tula Ram, was up for sale in execution of a decree and that this agreement was entered into in order to enable Tula Ram to avoid a public sale of his property and to enable him to satisfy the decree.

The document upon which the plaintiff sued was brought into Court. The defendant, Tula Ram, filed a written statement on the 15th July 1919, in which he denied that he had entered into any agreement with the plaintiff, Pirbhu Dayal. In substance his story was that he had come to some arrangement with his decree-holders and that any agreement relating to the sale of the property was with them and not with the plaintiff. It further appears from an extract from the order-sheet on the record that Tula Ram was brought into Court on the 19th January 1920, the date fixed for hearing, and was examined as a party. The document upon which the plaintiff sued was shown to him and he admitted that the paper on which the document was written bore both his signature and his thumb impression but he declared that when he put his signature and thumb-impression on this piece of paper, it was blank, and consequently, he denied that he was responsible for the agreement to sell which the plaintiff had produced in Court. On this statement being made, it appears from the order-sheet that the Pleader for the plaintiff informed the Court that inasmuch as the burden of proof lay upon the defendant, he (plaintiff's Pleader) was not willing to open the case and to call evidence. He informed the Court that he had already filed such documentary evidence as he had to rely on.

The Pleader for the defendant called no evidence, and, in this state of things, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the suit must fail inasmuch as that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case. It has been argued, before us, that the Court below was wrong in holding, in the circumstances above indicated, that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff. This argument, however, does not commend itself to us. It is obvious, in any case, that the burden of proving the case lay upon the plaintiff, Pirbhu Dayal. We cannot concede in favour of the appellant that any admission which was made by the defendant regarding the putting of a signature or a thumb-mark on the document in question, amounted to such an admission of execution as to thrust the burden of proving the case upon him. Obviously, there was no admission of execution of the document upon which the plaintiff relied when the defendant stated that he had put his signature and his thumb-mark on a blank piece of paper.

We have no doubt at all that in view of the pleadings, it was for the plaintiff to prove the due execution of the document upon which he was suing. We may further observe, and it is apparent from the printed record, that the plaintiff had filed a list of no less than ten witnesses on whose evidence, no doubt, he relied for the purpose of showing that an agreement had been executed in his favour by the defendant.

In spite of this we find the Pleader taking his stand upon the legal point and assuming in his own favour that no burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff but that it was for the defendant to open the case. The result is unfortunate for the plaintiff, but we cannot allow the appeal to prevail notwithstanding. There cannot be the slightest doubt that, on the facts which were before the Court, it was for the plaintiff to make out his case and he could only do that by proving due execution of the agreement itself on the part of the defendant. We affirm the judgment of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale, if any.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 30—Pre-emption suit—Limitation—Physical possession—Land in possession of tenants.

The term "physical possession" used in section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act means personal and immediate possession and not merely proprietary possession.

Land which is in possession of tenants is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 7th June 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Zira, District Ferozepore, dated the 28th July 1920.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit for pre-emption of land sold by defendant No. 1 to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 having been dismissed as barred by time by the lower Courts, he has filed a second appeal to this Court. The sale was an oral one. Mutation having been attested on the 6th May 1919, the suit was instituted on the 6th May 1920. The Courts below have held that the vendees obtained physical possession of part of the land sold in Kharif of 1918. When the appeal first came up before Mr. Bhide, District Judge, he pointed out that the entries in the girdawari papers had been altered and were not altogether free from suspicion. He remanded the case and ordered that further enquiry should be made as to whether the vendees had paid the land revenue of Kharif 1918. Mr. Kennaway, before whom the appeal came, after the return to the order of remand, held that the vendees had paid the land revenue of Kharif 1918 and that the fard ahal bachh for Kharif 1918 and Rabi 1919 also showed that the vendees held possession. It is urged, however, by Counsel in this Court, that mere payment of land revenue does not of itself prove or even indicate physical possession and all that it indicates is ownership. It appears to me that the learned District Judge has confused proprietary with physical possession. Under section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act the limitation is one year from the date on which the vendee takes under the sale physical possession of any part of such land or property, or from the date of attestation in the mutation register, whichever date shall be the earlier. Now, the land sold consists of five khasra numbers of which three were, in Kharif 1918, in the possession of tenants-at-will. When land in possession of tenants at-will is sold it is not capable of physical possession, and under the old law it was held by the Full Bench in Ghulam Mustafa v. Sahab-ud din Khan (1), that the limitation applicable to a suit for pre emption of such land is that provided by clause (2) of Art. 10 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. The Full Bench held that the term "physical possession" in Art. 10 of the Limitation Act means personal and immediate possession. In my opinion, the words "physical possession" in the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913 have the same meaning. Counsel for the respondents frankly admits that the land was in possession of tenants and that, therefore, actual possession was not taken by the vendees. Under these circumstances the date of mutation is the date from which the period of limitation has to be calculated, and the plaintiff's suit is, therefore, within time.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Courts remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. Stamps in this Court and the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—"Sufficient cause," what constitutes—Litigant acting on Counsel's incorrect advice—Time, extension of.

The English rule, that a mistake made by a Solicitor of a party, who is applying for an extension of time, is not a sufficient ground for extending it, is a salutary one and the Courts should ordinarily insist upon legal practitioners giving correct advice. But considering the present state of the profession, an honest mistake, even though a negligent one, ought not to be allowed to operate to the prejudice of clients. [p. 814, col. 2; p. 815, col. 1.]

What constitutes "sufficient cause" within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act cannot be laid down by hard and fast rules, and must be determined on a reference to the circumstances of each case. The expression "sufficient cause" should be liberally construed, so as to advance substantial justice. An honest mistake made by a litigant upon incorrect advice given to him by his lawyer is a sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Act. [p. 814, col. 1.]

Where an appellant is advised by his Vakil that copies of the judgment and decree of lower Appellate Court are sufficient for the purposes of his appeal to the High Court and he honestly believes that the advice given to him is correct and, consequently, makes a delay in the presentation of the copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance and asks that his appeal be admitted although the period of limitation has expired, such an honest mistake made by a litigant upon incorrect advice given to him by his lawyer is a sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act and entitles him to have his appeal admitted. JUDGMENT.

MEARE, C. J.—In this case the appellant applied under section 5 of the Limitation Act and asked that a time barred appeal might be heard on the ground that there was 'sufficient cause' for his having failed to comply with the rules. When a second appeal is presented to this Court, there is no doubt that the copy of the First Court's judgment and a copy of the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court must be filed. The appellant waited until almost the last day for the admission of his appeal, and then, on May 2nd, 1921, filed the judgment and decree only of the lower Appellate Court. The last day of limitation expired on May 3rd, 1921. The appellant having learnt that the appeal could not be admitted without the judgment of the First Court subsequently obtained it and then asked that time should be extended and the appeal admitted. It is stated that his failure to comply with the rules was due to the error of the Vakil, in the district, who had informed him that the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court were alone necessary.

We believe that this is what actually happened, and, therefore, the question arises whether that explanation can in the year 1922 be accepted as sufficient cause. There is no doubt it was the practice in past years to allow applications of this kind and between 1903 and 907 distinguished Judges of this Court did absolve the applicant from the consequences of an error on the part of his legal practitioner. See Wazir Ali Khan v. Zainab (1), Kura Mal v. Ram Nath (2) and Anjora Kunwar v. Babu (3).

In 1914 the case of Dewan v. Buddhu (4) came before Sir Sunder Lal on appeal from the District Judge who had admitted a time barred appeal. The circumstances under which the omission to file the appeal within time took place, were not very clearly put forward by the applicant but it "was not suggested that there was any misapprehension on the part of Mr. Weston (the Counsel employed to file the appeal, as to the time within which the appeal ought to have been lodged." Sir Sunder Lal thinking that the explanation of the delay was "utterly inadequate," overruled the decision of the District Judge. That case is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the present one, and notably from the decision of Stanley, C. J. and Banerji, J., in Kura Mal v. Ram Nath (2). On appeal a Bench of this Court upheld the decision of Sir Sunder Lal on the ground that the lower Appellate Court had no materials upon which a discretion could be exercised, Buthu v. Dewan (5).

During the hearing of this application it was suggested, by Mr. Justice Stuart, that the more correct principle was that laid down in the English decisions by which a default by the legal practitioner is not held to be a sufficient cause for extending the time for an appeal. Except for expressions of regret on the part of Collins, M.R., and Cozens Hardy, L. J., in the case of Coles and Ravenshear, In re (6), the current of English decisions is consistent and the result may be summarised in the words of Davey, L. J., who in Helsby, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (7), concluded his judgment by saying "I cannot see that a mistake made by a solicitor of the party who is applying for an extension of time is a sufficient ground for extending it"

The English Courts have laid stress upon the fact that the proposed respondent to an appeal has a right to hold his judgment and that such right ought not to be interfered with after the lapse of the prescribed time, unless there are special circumstances.

The question which is to be decided is one of policy. If this Court decides to break away from its decisions, pronounced during the period 1903 to 1907, it will not mean that these cases were wrongly decided at the time that they were so decided. In the past 15 years, legal education has progressed in this country and Courts are right in demanding in the public interest increasing competence in legal practitioners. Whilst I am of opinion that the English rule is a salutary one, and the Courts should ordinarily insist upon legal practitioners giving correct advice, it may nevertheless be that to demand at the present time a normal standard of efficiency would impose hardship upon litigants.

In this aspect of the case the decision must turn upon the question whether the profession in the Muffasil is in such a state of efficiency as to make it expedient to depart from the rule which has hitherto prevailed in this Court. Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh laid emphasis on the disadvantages of practitioners in places remote from libraries, and I give weight also to the argument used by him that there is in the Muffassil some want of knowledge of the procedure of the High Court. My opinion as to the general average of efficiency must necessarily be based upon the quality of work as disclosed in the printed records which come up here on appeal. The work, no doubt, has been done with increasing care and discrimination, and, therefore, the records of 1917, 1918 and 1919 now coming before us in appeal do not, I believe, present a fair picture of the standard of the records in current cases in the lower Courts. Every one who practises in this Court will agree that throughout the last two years there has never been one week in which Counsel on one aside or the other, has not admitted himself to be in difficulty, by reason of the way in which the case was launched or conducted in the Court below, and the complaint is always based, not upon some mere technicality but upon a matter of real importance and substance, such as some grave defect of pleading, failure to obtain essential particulars under O. VI, rr. 4 and 5, the omission to call the plaintiff or defendant or some necessary witness or the deliberate withholding of documents or books of account. I am, therefore, of opinion that, at the present, we ought to maintain our existing practice, namely, that mistakes of the kind, into which we are enquiring, should not bar appeals. An honest mistake, even though a negligent one, ought not, in the present state of the profession in the District be allowed to operate to the prejudice of clients. I would, therefore, admit the application.

BANERJI, J.—I, also, am of opinion that the application should be granted and the appeal admitted. The petition of appeal was presented one day before the expiry of the prescribed period of limitation, but on that date a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance was not filed with the memorandum of appeal, as required by the rules of this Court. When the copy was subsequently produced, the period of limitation had expired. For this reason the appellant has now applied under section 5 of the Limitation Act for the admission of his appeal after the expiry of the period of limitation. Under section 5 of the Limitation Act, a petition of appeal may be admitted after the expiry of limitation, if sufficient cause is established to the satisfaction of the Court. What constitutes sufficient cause, cannot be laid down by hard and fast rules. The sufficient cause must be determined on a reference to the circumstances of each case. In my opinion the expression "sufficient cause" should be liberally construed so as to advance substantial justice. In the present case the sufficient cause alleged is that the appellant was advised, by his Vakil in the lower Court, that copies of the judgment and the decree of the lower Appellate Court would be sufficient for the purposes of his appeal. He honestly believed that the advice given to him was correct, and in this honest belief he made a delay in the presentation of the copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance, and, therefore, asks that his appeal should be admitted, although the period of limitation has expired.

It has been held in this Court in the cases to which the learned Chief Justice has referred, that an honest mistake made by a litigant upon incorrect advice given to him by his lawyer is a sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act. These are the cases of Wazir Ali Khan v. Zainab (1), Kura Mal v. Ram Nath (2), Anjora Kunwar v. Babu (3). A similar view was also held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras in the cases to which Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh invited our attention in the course of his argument. The same principle was affirmed by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Brij Mohan Das v. Mannu Bibi (8). In all these cases it was held that if there has been an honest mistake on the part of the litigant, and this mistake has been caused by reason of an incorrect advice given to him by his Counsel, he is entitled to have his appeal admitted under section 5 of the Limitation Act. The case of Budhu v. Dewan (5) was referred to as laying down a different proposition. I do not think that this is so. The question which arises in this case was not the question which was considered and decided in that case. There the Counsel for the appellant had omitted to present his petition of appeal in due time although he had been furnished with the necessary papers and the necessary costs. That was a case in which there was culpable negligence on the part of the Counsel, and for this reason it was held that no sufficient cause had been established for the admission of the appeal after time. I was a party to one of the cases cited above, and I see no reason to alter the opinion which was expressed in that case.

A contrary view was held in the case of Coles and Ravenshear, In re (6 . But two of the learned Judges felt themselves bound by a recent authority in that Court Collins, M. R , said : "I confess that, if the case were free from authority, and I felt myself at liberty to follow my own judgment in the matter, I should unhesitatingly allow the time to be extended." Cozens-Hardy, L. J., observed : "If the matter had been free from authority, I should have preferred, in a case where there has been an honest mistake by the legal adviser of a party,.....to hold that the Court would be justified in giving special leave." He also added that the course of authority on the subject in England had been "far from uniform".

In this Court, as I have pointed out above there is a consensus of authorities and, I think, upon those authorities, from which I see no reason to depart, we should be justified in admitting the appeal, which must be taken to have been filed after the period of limitation.

The remarks which the learned Chief Justice has made as to the duty of practitioners in the Districts have my full concurrence, and I hope that those practitioners will bear them in mind.

STUART, J.—While I am still of opinion that the rule as laid down by James, L. J., in the International Financial Society v. City of Moscow Gas Company (9) and again in Helsby, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (7) is the rule which I should like to see enforced in this Court, I am convinced upon the reasoning of the Chief Justice that the time has not yet come when it would be wise to enforce this rule. I, therefore, concur in the order passed.

BY THE COURT.—Our order, therefore, is that we extend the time for the filing of these two appeals and declare the appeals admitted. Let a date be fixed under O. XLI, r. 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure for hearing.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 57, 64, 85—Suit to recover money from agent after balance struck—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXII, r. 4—Joint contract—Appeal—Death of respondent—Abatement.

Plaintiffs alleging that the defendants were their gumashtas set forth in their plaint that by agreement between the parties the plaintiffs financed the defendants and took with them an equal share in profit and loss on the defendants' transactions. On the other hand, inasmuch as the plaintiffs financed the defendants, defendants undertook to pay interest. The plaint further recited a series of transactions terminating in the striking of a balance by the defendants in the plaintiffs' favour. Plaintiffs brought a suit upon the account supported by the acknowledgment:

Held, (1) that although there had been a mutual and current account between the parties, it was not open and current at the time of the suit, and that, therefore, the suit was not governed by Art. 85 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act; [p. 816, col. 1.]

(2) that if the suit was regarded as one for money payable for money found to be due on an account stated, it was governed by Art. 64 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act; [p. 816, col. 2.]

(3) that if it was regarded as a suit for money payable for money lent, or as a suit for the re-payment of principal and interest less any credit due to the defendants in respect of profit on transactions effected by the defendants, then Art. 57 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act would be applicable. [p. 816, col. 2.]

A contract entered into by one or more promisors can be enforced as against all or any of them. [p. 816, col. 2.]

Therefore, where one of several promisors who are respondents in an appeal dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record, the appeal does not abate as a whole the right to prosecute it survives as against the surviving respondents. [p. 816, col. 2.]

FIRM GURDAS RAM-KOTU RAM v. BHAGWAN DAS.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs, alleging that the defendants were their gumashtas, set forth in their plaint that by agreement between the parties the plaintiffs financed the defendants and took with them an equal share in profit and loss on the defendants' transaction. On the other hand, inasmuch as the plaintiffs financed the defendants, defendants undertook to pay interest. The plaint further recited a series of transactions between May 1905 and August 1907 and the final striking of a balance of Rs 1,531-6-0 by the defendants in the plaintiffs' favour. The suit was brought upon the account supported by the acknowledgment and was decreed by the Trial Court. On appeal the learned District Judge accepted the plea of limitation which was raised only in argument and regarding Art. 85 of the Limitation Act as applicable to the suit, dismissed the suit as having been brought out of time.

The plaintiffs have come to this Court in second appeal and a preliminary objection is raised by the respondent that inasmuch as out of the four original defendants three have died and are unrepresented before this Court, the appeal must fail as a whole. For the appellant it is retorted that he is quite content with a decree against Bhagwan Das only, for the acknowledgment signed by the defendants was signed by Soman Ram, Hanun Ram and Bhagwan Das jointly and Ram Das was a mere pro forma defendant inasmuch as he was alleged to be a co-parcener by the other defendants. In our opinion the appeal does not fail as a whole but the right to prosecute it survives as against Bhagwan Das alone, for a contract entered upon by one or more promisors can be enforced against all or any of them.

With regard to the point of limitation which is the only one argued before us, we cannot agree with the Court below that Art. 85 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act is applicable, for that Article deals with a suit for the balance due on a mutual, open and current account. In the present case there was, no doubt, a current account and a mutual one. The plaintiffs had claims against the defendants for money advanced plus interest. The defendants could set against those claims their share of any profits made in the transactions in which the parties had a common interest but the account was not open and current at the time of the suit. The account had been closed and had been settled by the striking of a balance. In our opinion the Article applicable is Art. 64 which applies to a suit for money payable for money found to be due on accounts stated. Having regard to the nature of the contract between the parties we hold that the balance struck by the defendants was a balance on accounts stated, and inasmuch as the period of limitation for suits falling under this Article has been enlarged by the Punjab Limitation Act of 1904 the suit is within time.

If the suit be regarded, as it might well be one for money payable for money lent, Art. 57 would be applicable and the suit would be within time; if the suit be regarded as a suit for the re-payment of principal and interest less any credit due to the defendants in respect of profit on transaction effected by the defendants, then Art. 57 would seem to be applicable.

On the merits there is nothing to be said for the defendants nor has anything been said on their behalf. The appeal is accepted and the decree of the First Court is restored with costs throughout.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 73, 395, 397—Dacoity—Use of deadly weapons—Conviction—Separate sentences—Solitary confinement—Period spent in lock-up.

Where several persons join in committing a dacoity and some of them use deadly weapons, all of them are liable to be punished under section 397 of the Penal Code. The provisions of section 34 of the Penal Code are applicable to such a case. [p. 817, col 2.]

Crown v Mohna, 16 P. R. 1901 Cr., Queen-Empress v. Mahabir Tiwari, 2 A. 263; A. W. N. (1899) 76; 9 Ind. Dec (N s.) 876, relied upon.

Where a person is convicted of separate offences, separate sentences of solitary confinement are not illegal, but as a matter of practice a sentence of more than three months' solitary confinement should not be passed on a person convicted at one trial of more offences than one. [p. 818 col. 1.]

Ibrahim v. Queen-Empress, 7 P. R. 1897 Cr., relied upon.

A Magistrate in awarding a sentence has no jurisdiction to direct that any portion of the period during which the accused has been detained in custody as an under-trial prisoner should count as part of the sentence.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate First Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Mianwali, dated the 24th January 1922.

Mr. Alim Khan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sularia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is no doubt that on the night of January 24th, 1921 a dacoity was committed at the house of Dalil Khan. Dalil Khan after being prodded with knives was taken away by the dacoits and was kept by them for four days and then effected his escape. Four persons viz, Dangar, Khalaq Din, Zarin and Mohammad Jan, have been held by the Magistrate to have taken part in the dacoity and they have been convicted under sections 397 and 365, Indian Penal Code. A joint appeal has been filed an behalf of Dangar, Khalak Din and Zarin and a separate appeal has been filed an behalf of Muhammad Jan. This judgment will dispose of both these appeals.

The conviction of the first three appellants rests solely upon their identification by Dalil Khan. Muhammad Jan has been identified by Dalil Khan and there is against this appellant the additional evidence that his house is said to be one of the places to which Dalil Khan was taken by the dacoits, and that a lungi which has been identified by Dalil Khan as part of the property stolen from him was recovered from another house belonging to Muhammad Jan. The evidence shows that Dangar was identified in the Mianwali Jail on May 7th 1921, Khalaq Din in the Bannu Jail on May 11th 1921, Zarin at Isa Khel on August 3rd, 1921, and Muhammad Jan at the Isa Khel Thana on June 9th of 1921. In each case precautions were taken and the accused were placed with other persons. Dalil Khan had his eyes bandaged most of the time that he remained with the dacoits but he states that the bandage was removed on two occasions and there is no reason why he should not have been able to identify his captors. No enmity of any kind between him and the appellants has been established.

In the case of Muhammad Jan there is the additional evidence referred to above which appears to be reliable. Muhammad Jan does not claim the lungi as his own and admits that it was found in his house, but states that it was placed there by an enemy. There is, however, nothing to support this allegation. The defence evidence produced to show that the appellants were in different places at the time of the dacoity is obviously of no value. I see no reason to doubt that all the appellants took part in the dacoity and abduction of Dalil Khan.

The convictions under section 397, Indian Penal Code, are obviously wrong. The convictions should be under section 395, Indian Penal Code, and section 397, Indian Penal Code, should be applied in awarding the sentences.

The appellants are liable to the minimum punishment provided by section 397, Indian Penal Code, because though it is not proved that they were among the persons who used deadly weapons at the time of the dacoity it has been held in Crown v. Mohna (1) following Queen-Empress v. Mahabir Tiwari (2) that section 34, Indian Penal Code would apply.

PO ME v. EMPEROR.

The separate convictions under section 365, Indian Penal Code, appear to be justified. The two offences, though committed in the course of the same transaction, were quite distinct.

The separate sentences of solitary confinement are not illegal, but as a matter of practice a sentence of more than three months' solitary confinement should not be passed on a person convicted at one trial of more than one offence. (See Ibrahim v. Queen Empress (3).

The Magistrate has directed in the case of each appellant that half of the period during which he was detained in custody as an under-trial prisoner shall count as part of the sentence. This order is quite wrong. If the Magistrate considered that the appellants were entitled to leniency on account of their having remained a long time in custody he should have passed a a smaller sentence. To set aside this order would have the effect of enhancing the sentences, unless the sentences are also reduced. The sentences passed under section 364, Indian Penal Code, are therefore, reduced in each case to six years' rigorous imprisonment (without solitary confinement.) The convictions under section 397, Indian Penal Code, are altered to section 395, Indian Penal Code, and under that section taken with section 397, Indian Penal Code, the sentences will be seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement. The order directing that half the period spent as an under-trial prisoner will count towards completion of the sentence is set aside.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), s. 4—Arms—Dah—Criterion for determining whether dah an arm.

In determining whether any given dah is an arm within the meaning of that term in section 4 of the Arms Act, the true criterion is the intention of the maker as regards its purpose. A dah having a blade $22\frac{3}{4}$ inches long, not intended for domestic purposes, is an arm.

Reference, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Prome, to set aside the sentence passed on the accused by the Second Additional Magistrate, Paungde.

JUDGMENT.—Read Reference by the learned Session Judge, Prome. The weapon referred to in Emperor v. Hamyit (1) was held 'to be intended primarily for domestic and agricultural purposes. It was called a "dashe-u-pyat' and was said to be of the usual type. Exhibit B is clearly intended to be used as a sword or dahlwe and is sheathed as such. It also has a grip bound with cane to give the hand a secure hold. I consider it to be an arm as defined in the Arms Act.

Next, I will deal with dahs, Exhibits A and D. Exhibits A and D are "dashe-u-pyat" in the sense that the point (if any was ever there) has been cut off. But they are both of very great length, and Exhibit A has decorations and a "thwe chaung" which, apart from its length, tend to show that it was not intended primarily for domestic purposes. Exhibit B has no such decorations or "thwe chaung" but its extreme length and handiness serve to show that it was intended primarily for a weapon of offence.

It is my opinion that these two dahs, of which the blades are $22\frac{3}{4}$ inches long, are arms, and that the true criterion is not whether any given dah is an "u-pyat" but what was the intention of the maker as regards its purpose.

As regards Exhibit C this is, in my opinion the ordinary village dashe-u-pyat. The blade is only $16\frac{1}{4}$ inches long and it is adapted more clearly to domestic and agricultural needs.

I would remark that Exhibits A and D appear to be the usual kind of dashe which is carried in Lower Burma by persons who commit dacoity. They are indescriminately known "Lingin" dahs, "Hngetiyidaung" dahs, or "dashe u-pyat" and I have no doubt that they are intended to be weapons. I see no reason, therefore, to set Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 12th August 1921, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Gurgaon, dated the 15th July 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the stay of criminal proceedings pending decision of a civil suit in regard to the same matter.

On the 13th May 1921 one Ram Kanwar executed four sale-deeds, one of them in favour of Janki Das and the other three in favour of the father and sons of Janki Das. On the 21st May 1921 Ram Kanwar made a report to the Police that he had been cheated. On the 26th May 1921 Janki Das filed a civil suit for possession of the property purporting to have been conveyed to him by one of the sale-deeds. On the 9th July 1921 the Police challaned Janki Das and another under section 420, Indian Penal Code, as the result of Ram Kanwar's report of the 21st May 1921. On the 15th of July the Magistrate framed a charge and filed without orders an application by the two accused for stay of proceedings. On the 12th August the Sessions Judge rejected a petition by the accused for revision of the order framing the charge remarking that he saw no good reason to interfere with an interim order in criminal proceedings, although probably it would have been better for the Magistrate to await the result of the civil suit before framing the charge.'

I have seen the records of the criminal case and of the civil suit. The second accused in the criminal case, Hardwari, is not directly involved in the civil case, but in both cases the main questions for decision are the same, namely, whether Ram Kanwar was deceived when he executed the sale-deed and whether or not he received consideration. The civil suit, although instituted after the Police report, was brought without undue delay, and the same reasons for staying the criminal case appears to apply in the present instance, as were held valid in Bhoja Ram v. Emperor (1). Other authorities which support the petitioner are Emperor v. Bishen Das (2) and Paras Ram v. Emperor (3).

I order that proceedings on the charge under section 420, Indian Penal Code, framed against Janki Das, and Hardwari, be stayed until the civil suit, Janki Das v. Ram Kanwar, filed on the 26th May 1921 shall be decided by the Munsif, Gurgaon. The Magistrate should note that, if the criminal proceedings should be revived, the charge framed by him requires amendment, since it does not set out the manner in which the alleged cheating was committed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 34—Isolated assaults—No common object—Joint trial, legality of.

During a trial, for a political offence a crowd gathered with a view to make a demonstration and as a result a number of Policemen posted to keep order received injuries and the assailants were tried together under section 332/34 of the Penal Code and convicted:

Held, that their joint trial was illegal and section 34 of the Code did not apply, because the assaults on individual members of the Police force were isolated and the accused were not actuated by any common object. [p. 821, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Officiating Fourth Additional Sessions, Judge, Aligrah.

Messrs. Nehal Chand, S. Zafar Mehdi and M. A. Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sanker Saran (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—During the forenoon of the 5th of July 1921, a large crowed gathered in front of the District Magistrate's Court during the trial of one Malkhan Singh for some alleged political offence. The trial created a good deal of excitement and, it appears, that, in the light of previous disturbances, the Police authorities gathered an unusually large number of Policemen to keep order. Apparently, it was feared, rightly or wrongly, that an attempt might be made by the crowd to rescue Malkhan Singh. During the course of the morning there was some sort of a melee, and nine individual Policemen were hurt, although with the exception of one man, who had his lip cut, none of the others received more than the most trivial injuries. The result was a magisterial enquiry, and 27 men were committed to the Court of Session charged under sections 147 and 332/149 of Indian Penal Code. Now, that was a perfectly intelligible charge and implied that the 27 men committed were actuated by a common object, and in pursuance of that common object, assaulted the Police in the discharge of their duties. At the trial the learned Sessions Judge found that there was no common object and that the accused were not acting in concert. He, therefore, held that the charge under section 147 could not be maintained. After discussing the evidence, he says:—

"This leads to the inference that the whole crowd did not collect with an unlawful object nor was it excited in the manner stated by the prosecution. On the other hand, these circumstances show that only those men who wanted to follow Mr. Sherwani offered resistance to the Police when the latter wanted to push them back and very likely those who were in the front joined them. Such being the case, only those men who committed the act can be held liable."

I entirely agree with this observation of the learned Judge. He goes on to say:—

"In this case all the circumstances lead me to think that the crowd had collected with a view to make a demonstration at the trial of Malkhan Singh. That object was not unlawful nor was it considered objectionable by the authorities as not only such crowds had assembled on previous occasions but the authorities had been watching the gradual increase in the crowd without ever thinking of dispersing it. It was certainly wrong on the part of some men to go to the Court-room after Sherwani did. There can be no doubt that they knew very well that only the persons who had permission could go there. The order passed by the authorities to prevent people in general going to the Court-room was a lawful one. The Policemen posted on the drive, to see that the order was carried out, were undoubtedly engaged in the discharge of their duty, and if they were assaulted or resisted by the men, whom the Policemen wanted to prevent from going, they certainly committed the offence under section 332 of the Indian Penal Code, and every man who joined in the assault can also be held guilty of that offence under the provisions of section 34 of the Indian Penal Code; but I do not think the offence of riot was committed nor can every man who happened to be present in the crowd be held guilty under section 332 of the Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, find that the offence of riot was not committed but an offence under section 332 of the Indian Penal Code was, of course, committed but only those men who took part or joined those assaulting men, can be held guilty."

He then goes on to consider the evidence against each one of the accused, and in the end he convicted 11 and acquitted the rest. These 11 accused have appealed. It seems to me that on the finding that these accused persons were not actuated by any common object, it must be taken that there were merely a number of isolated assaults on individual members of the Police force, and, in the absence of any common intention, the provisions of section 34 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be called in aid. Nine Policemen are said to have been assaulted in different parts of the maidan and apparently by different people acting quite independently of each other. The Court has made no attempt to find out who were the particular individuals who assaulted a particular Policeman but has held that any one who was seen assaulting any Policeman during that morning in front of the District Magistrate's Court, must be held to be guilty of the offence, not of assaulting the particular Policeman but of what he considers to be an assault on the Police, under section 34 of the Indian Penal Code, and that any one who assaulted the Police on that morning must be held guilty. I cannot agree with this view. If there was no common intention or concert between the accused persons, they cannot, in my opinion, be tried together. There were so many isolated assaults and there should have been as many separate trials. I do not think it necessary in this case to order a re-trial. On the findings, I think, the accused are entitled to an acquittal. They were only sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment of which many have served more than half, and before this they were eight months in Police custody. Under these circumstances, specially as the hurt inflicted was of the very slightest, I think it unnecessary to order a re trial.

I allow the appeal and, so far as this charge is concerned, they will be released, and, such as are on bail, need not surrender.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 9th December 1921.

Mr. Philip Morton, for the Appellants.

Mr C. H. Carden Noad, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ahmad Nur, son of Karam, and Feroz, son of Buta, have been convicted of the murder of Feroz, son of Ghulam Muhammad, and of a young lad named Anwar, and sentenced to death. Buta father of Feroz, convict, who was co accused with them, has been acquitted. Both the convicts have appealed to this Court and their case is also before us for confirmation of the sentences of death. Their appeal has been argued by Mr. Philip Morton, while Mr. Carden Noad has argued the case on behalf of the Crown.

The only direct evidence in this case is given by one Khan Bahadur, son of Samond, who has received a pardon and who gives evidence as an approver. The story as narrated by him is that he was on friendly terms with Feroz and Ahmad Nur and was asked by them to join them in murdering Feroz, deceased. He was also told that Buta would take part in the proposed murder. He was promised a payment of Rs. 100.

AHMAD NUR v. EMPEROR.

On the evening of the 18th April 1921 Buta came to his house with an axe under his arm. The witness accompanied him and armed himself with another axe. They went towards Chak Naurang and found Ahmad Nur and Feroz waiting for them, both the latter also being armed with axes. Ahmad Nur said that he had ascertained that the deceased had gone to the threshing floor and there would be no one with him except a relative named, Anwar, a lad of about 14. The four men then went to the threshing floor and Feroz deceased was given blows with axes by Ferez, appellant, and the approver, while Anwar was similarly injured by Ahmad Nur and Buta. After committing this double murder, the four men went away and no body saw them or met them in the way. The murders were discovered next morning, when the report (P. A.) was made to the Police at Chakwal, on the 19th of April 1921, at 10 A. M. by Allah Yar, father of Anwar deceased.

The report stated that the suspicion about these murders was against Buta, his son Ferez and Ahmad Nur, and also added the names of Laru and Nabhu, as the possible co-adjutors of the three men named above. The reason for this suspicion, as given in the report, was that Feroz, appellant, had an illegal intimacy with Musammat Bahishtan, wife of Ferez deceased, and that it was the desire of the former that the latter should divorce her and thus enable Ferez, appellant, to marry her. It was further stated that Ahmad Nur had been promised by Ferez, appellant, the hand of an unmarried sister of the latter, named Musammat Nekan. Thus it was shown how the three persons, named as the principal accused, were interested in doing away with Ferez, deceased. It is not seriously disputed that the murder of the young lad Anwar was not really intended by anybody but was committed simply to avoid his becoming an eye witness in the case.

Musammat Bahishtan, widow of Feroz deceased, and Musammat Bakhat Nur, sister of Ahmad Nur, appellant, were cited by the prosecution as witnesses, who were in a position to give evidence against the appellants. In their depositions before the Committing Magistrate they stated that Buta and the appellants had expressed a desire to get rid of Feroz, deceased, and that they were taken into confidence by them and asked to give information when the said Feroz should go out alone. Musammat Bakhat Nur admitted that she gave information on the evening in question and Musammat Bahishtan deposed that she was told by Musammat Bakhat Nur that she had done so. She also admitted the existence of an intimacy between herself and Feroz, appellant. These two women, however, retracted their statments in the Sessions Court and said that the evidence that they had given before the Committing Magistrate was induced by Police pressure and was not true. They denied the existence of any connection between Musammat Bahishtan and Ferez, appellant, as well as any intended marriage between Ahmad Nur and Musammat Nekan. They also said that they gave no information on the evening in question to any one. The learned Sessions Judge brought on the record the previous statements of these two women under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, and being of opinion that the statement first made by them, during the committal stage of the case, were true and that they had gone back on their statements owing to close relationship between them and the appellants, he held that their original statements furnished material corroboration of the evidence of the approver.

There is some other evidence in this case by which it has been sought to corroborate the statement of the approver but that does not require very serious notice, because it is admitted by the learned Counsel for the Crown that if the corroboration furnished by the statements of Musammat Bahishtan and Musammat Bakhat Nur fails, then there is no corroboration worth the name on the record. Certain witnesses have been produced, for instance, to say that the appellants and the approver were seen together at a fair before this occurrence. A cobbler has been produced to state that Feroz, appellant, got his shoes mended by him and this evidence is introduced to corroborate the introductory part of the statement of the approver, who says that Ferez asked him to wait while he got his shoes mended. It need hardly be remarked that evidence of this kind is in the nature of padding. There is some other evidence showing that the reasons for implicating the appellants, as given in the first report, had some foundation. We need not detail that evidence, because we are prepared to agree with the learned Sessions Judge in holding that the evidence on the record does show that there was an intimacy between Musammat Bahishtan and Feroz, appellant, and that Ahmad Nur probably wanted to get the hand of Musammat Nekan in return for getting Musammat Bahishtan divorced by Feroz, deceased, this evidence certainly supplies the motive for the murder of Feroz, deceased, but the main question in this case is whether the story of the approver is corroborated in material particulars by the evidence of the two women or can be so corroborated, when the evidence of the latter is itself tainted. Mr. Morton contends, in the first place, that the statements of these women, as made at the trial, must be taken to be correct and that it is not unlikely that pressure may have been brought to bear upon them to state what they did against their own near relatives. We are not impressed, however, by this argument, because we think that in all probability the earlier statements of the two female witnesses were more reliable than their depositions in the Trial Court. It is in evidence that shortly after the double murder in question another murder took place in the family, when a young man named, Muhammad Sharif, brother of Musammat Bahishtan, was murdered by one Muhammad Khan, nephew of Ahmad Nur. Muhammad Khan was convicted of that murder and his conviction was maintained up to the High Court, and it was alleged in that case that one reason why Muhammad Sharif was killed was that his sister insisted on giving evidence against Ahmad Nur and Feroz in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. It is not to be wondered at that after such a terrible incident she should make a complete change of front, but even taking her previous statement to be correct, on the whole, the question remains whether it is of any use as corroborative evidence as far as the evidence of the approver is concerned. We think Mr. Morton is on much surer ground on this point than he was on the point referred to before. He contends that the evidence given by Musammat Bahishtan and by Musammat Bakhat Nur does not go beyond stating that the appellants and Buta wanted to kill Feroz and with that object got information from them of his movements on the night in question. This is not inconsistent with the possibility that they might depute the approver only to do the foul deed. There is nothing in the statements of the women which would throw light on what actually happened at the scene of the murder. In the second place, he urges that even if these statements did furnish any kind of corroboration they cannot be used for that purpose, because the women are accomplices, according to their own showing, and their evidence would require corroboration before it could be relied upon. He adds that the statements brought on the record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, though admissible in evidence, are to be taken with great caution and that, therefore, their value as corroborative evidence is next to nothing. He refers to Shahrah v. Emperor (1), where a Division Bench of this Court held that a wife, who knew all about the proposal to murder her husband and was a consenting party to the commission of the crime, was in the position of an accomplice and her evidence should not ordinarily be accepted either as corroborative of the evidence of an approver or as sufficient, apart from independent corroboration, to justify the conviction of the accused. He also cites Lad Khan v. Emperor (2), to show that the approver's evidence must be corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence, which he says is not the case here. He also relies on Mamun v. Queen-Empress (3) to show that the evidence that is itself tainted cannot be useful for purposes of corroboration of tainted evidence. We think there is force in these contentions of Mr. Morton. Khan Bahadur, the approver, was a hired assassin according to his own admission. He asked for money as soon as the proposal for murder was mentioned to him. There is no doubt that there is sufficient evidence on the record to show that, whoever else may have taken part in the double murder, the approver, Khan Bahadur, was certainly in it, as certain blood stained things have come out from his possession. He is not a man, however, whose uncorroborated word can be trusted as sufficient for the condemnation of any one for murder and that corroboration is unfortunately not forthcoming in this case. There is certainly serious reason to suspect the appellants of having taken part in the crime, but on the grounds given above, we do not think it safe to uphold their convictions in the absence of any corroboration of the approver's statement. The appellants must be given the benefit of doubt owing to the evidence on the record being insufficient to warrant their conviction. We, therefore, accept their appeal and acquit them. They will be released forthwith.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 802 OF 1221 (CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 656 OF 1921).

July 17, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Ramesam.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Order of discharge—Further inquiry, direction of, when justified—Improper direction—Revision.

The essential matter for consideration in setting aside an order of discharge and directing a further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, is the prospect of any public advantage from the case being re-opened. Where there is no such prospect, by reason of the comparatively insignificant character of the offence, of the considerable time which has elapsed since its commission and of the evidence being of no special strength, an order directing further inquiry would be without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside by the High Court in revision.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Ramnad at Madura, in Criminal Revision Case No. 39 of 1921 presented against the judgment of the Court of the Hazur Sheristadar, and First Class Magistrate, Ramnad at Madura, in Calendar Case No. 1 of 1921.

Dr. Swaminadhan for Messrs. T. Rangachariar, S. Subramania Iyar and A. N. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The order before us is one passed by the District Magistrate under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code ordering further enquiry into a case, in which the petitioners were discharged. The occurrence in question in that case took place on 23th July 1920. It is unnecessary to go in detail into the subsequent progress of the proceedings. The petitioners were once convicted and on their conviction being set aside by the Sessions Judge, were re-tried. That re-trial ended in an order of discharge, which the District Magistrate has set aside in the order before us.

The facts for investiga ion amounted to a petty riot between the members of two factions in a village in the Madura District. In the course thereof a certain amount of violence seems to have been used and stones were thrown; but no injuries of any gravity were inflicted and, so far as appears, there is no question of any loss of valuable property. The evidence, so for as we can judge of it from the records before us, was of the kind usual in such cases and of no special strength. The District Magistrate's order is based on criticisms of the reasoning in the order of discharge, which are very possibly well-founded. But he has entirely failed to consider the essential matter; the prospect of any public advantage from the case being re opened. That prospect, in our opinion, is exceedingly small. In view of the period of two years, which has elapsed since the occurrence, its comparatively insignificant character, and the nature of evidence available, we think that the order of the District Magistrate passed, without regard to what is really the material consideration in cases of this kind, was passed without jurisdiction. We, therefore, set it aside in the exercise of our powers of revision, Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 16th January 1922, reversing that of the Magistrate, First Class, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 24th October 1921.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Petitioners.

Lala Lachhmi Narain for Said, Complainant, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Attock directing that the petitioners, who were prosecuted for the murder of one Ali Akbar alias Barra and were discharged by the Magistrate, be committed to the Sessions Court for trial. The application has not been opposed by the Crown, but has been opposed by the deceased's father, Said, who had lodged a complaint of murder against the petitioners.

The case for the prosecution rests on the evidence of the four alleged eye witnesses, Waris son of Ibrahim, Waris son of Baloch, Ahmad son of Mahbub, and Mir Baz, who were not examined in the first instance, but whose evidence has been taken in accordance with my order of the 20th May 1921, in Criminal Revision No. 207 of 1921.

In Sultani v. Emperor (1) it was held that a Committing Magistrate was entitled, at any rate to some extent, to weigh the evidence of direct witnesses and to pronounce as to their credibility, and that, as in that particular case the evidence for the Crown was of a kind on which no Court would convict, the Magistrate had exercised a sound discretion in discharging the accused men.

In Bai Parvati, In re (2) it was held that where a Committing Magistrate finds that the evidence tendered for the prosecution is totally unworthy of credit it is his duty under section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code to discharge the accused.

Similarly, in Dharam Singh v. Joti Prasad (3) it was held that when a Magistrate has heard the evidence for the prosecution with entire disbelief, when he considers himself in a position to show that the prosecution witnesses are totally unworthy of credit, and a fortiori when after examining certain witnesses named on behalf of the accused he has come to the conclusion that the evidence given by them is reliable and disproves that given by the prosecution, he is well within his discretion in discharging the accused.

Now, in the present case the Magistrate gave detailed reasons for his conclusion that a prima facie case had not been made out against any of the accused and that the evidence of the witnesses mentioned above was unworthy of credit, and he held further that the alibi of two of the five accused had been established. The learned Sessions Judge has not dealt with any of the points discussed by the Magistrate and has given no reasons for his opinion that the accused persons should be committed for trial.

Three of the four alleged eye-witnesses of the murder were the deceased's brothers in-law and it is a curious coincidence that they should have happened to assemble at the deceased's hujra at the time when he was killed. The story is that the five accused came to the hujra, Qalander being armed with a knife and the other four men with spears, and attacked Barra without any provocation, Gulab holding him, while Waris son of Nawab struck him on the neck with his spear and then Qalandar struck him with the knife on the head. This story does not appear to be consistent with the medical evidence, which shows that the wound on the neck, which was just above the middle of the right clavicle, had cut the right pleura and lung. As the Magistrate observes such injury could not have resulted from a horizontal thrust with a spear, but must have been the result of a downward blow, which could hardly have been dealt with a spear while Burra was standing up, as the witnesses say he was. Moreover, the Assistant Surgeon has stated positively that the wound could not have been caused with a spear.

Next it is to be noted that in the report made by Said at the Thana the names of the accused Ahmad and Azim were not mentioned. Said says he was informed of the occurrence by Waris son of Baloch, and if the latter had witnessed the murder, and had named all five accused to Said as having taken part in the murder, Said would certainly have mentioned the names of all in his report.

Then the statements of the four witnesses mentioned above do not account for the injuries sustained by the accused Ahmad and the witness Abdul Majid. The latter says that on hearing the noise coming from the deceased's hujra he went there and saw Ahmad and Azim (not the accused Azim) and Shah Afzal struggling with one another, and that on trying to separate them he was hit on the head by some one. He also says that he saw Burra in a sitting posture twelve paces off and saw him fall, but did not see any one striking him. The eye-witnesses of the murder make no mention of any fight between Ahmad, Azim and Shah Afzal, and according to them Abdul Majid did not come to the spot at all. There appears, however, to be no reason for disbelieving Abdul Majid, who was the Imam of both parties and is corroborated by the witness Bostan.

Without going into other matters of minor importance referred to by the Magistrate, I think that for the reasons above mentioned the evidence of the four alleged eye-witnesses of the murder must be rejected as untrustworthy and that the order of the Magistrate discharging the petitioners was a proper one.

I accordingly accept this application; set aside the order of the Sessions Judge directing the committment of the petitioners to the Sessions Court, and maintain the order of the Magistrate discharging them.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Jurisdiction of Court to investigate offence committed before it, after transfer of case—Revision—High Court, duty of.

If a Court is of opinion that there is ground for enquiry into any offence referred to in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code committed before it in the course of a judicial proceeding, it can proceed under section 476 of the Code even though the case has passed out of its hands and been decided by another Court which has arrived at a different conclusion on the merits. [p. 828, col. 1.]

King-Emperor v. Zalim Singh, A. W N. (1901) 177, Girwar Prashad v. Emperor, 1 Ind. Cas. 706; 6 A. L. J. 392 at p. 398; 9 Cr L. J. 219, Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor, 31 M. 140; 7 Cr. In such a case, however, when the matter is brought to the notice of the High Court in revision it is its duty to satisfy itself that there has been no unreasonable delay, that the order passed under section 476 is not vexatious and that the charges are not of a flimsy character. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Basti.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this application for revision has arisen, are as follows:—Mr. Parmanad Singh, Tahsildar of Basti, as Magistrate of the Third Class, tried in 1921 a Criminal case in which Adhar Singh made a complaint against Devi Bakhsh Singh under the provisions of sections 352 447 of the Indian Penal Code. In the course of the trial, Sundar Lal Patwari gave evidence. As a result of the examination of this evidence, Mr. Parmanand Singh came to the conclusion, that Sundar Lal was not telling the truth in his evidence, and that he had falsified certain of his records. Mr. Parmanand Singh did not complete the decision of the case, for, after he had heard practically all the evidence, the case was transferred for decision to the Court of Mr. Sarju Prasad, Honorary Magistrate, by an order of the District Magistrate of Basti. There is nothing before me to show why the order of transfer was passed. Such order was, however, passed and the case left Mr. Parmanand on the 3rd of September 1921. Mr. Sarju Prasad decided it on the 7th of October 1921. He acquitted the accused persons and found that the Patwari, Sundar Lal, was telling the truth, and that the entries in his records were correct. Mr. Parmanand then proceeded to make a preliminary enquiry into the truth of the Patwari's statements in the case in question, and into the nature of the entries in the Patwari's records to which I have already referred. He appears to have lost no time in sending for the Patwari and to have made a careful enquiry, in which the Patwari was given every opportunity of meeting the charges. He finally passed an order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and sent Sundar Lal Patwari, to the District Magistrate to be tried on certain charges. This order is dated the 25th of January 1922. Sundar Lal applies in revision to have the order set aside.

The points taken by the learned Counsel, who represents Sundar Lal, are:—That Mr. Parmanand Singh having ceased to be seised of the case on the 3rd of September 1921, had no jurisdiction to pass the order which he passed, and that on the merits, the offences suggested have clearly not been committed upon the finding of Mr. Sarju Prasad, SUNDAR LAL v. EMPEROR.

The plea raises a question which, as far as I know, has not been decided by any Court so far. If a Court is of opinion that there is ground for enquiry into any offence referred to in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure committed before it in the course of a judicial proceeding, even if the case has passed out of the hands of that Court and been decided by another Court, it cannot be held that the First Court's powers under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code came to an end.

The circumstance that a case has passed out of the hands of a Court, in so far as an effective order regarding its disposal is concerned, does not deprive the Court of its jurisdiction under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure according to the view taken in this Court. In King-Emperor v. Zalim Singh (1), Knox, A. C. J., decided that a Subordinate Judge was competent to take proceedings under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure after another Court had finally decided the case. In a decision of a Bench in Girwar Prashad v. Emperor (2), an order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure passed considerably after the matter had left the hands of the Court passing the order, in so far as its final determination of the matter before it was concerned, was upheld. The views enunciated by the Madras High Court in Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (3) and Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (4) were not accepted in their entirety by that Bench. The view which I take is that under the provisions of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure proceedings can undoubtedly be taken by a Court after the decision in the substantive case has been delivered and the Court is functus officio in respect of the decision of the substantive case. There can, I think, be no doubt on this point on the plain reading of the section. The further point remains: does the circumstance that another Court has arrived at a different conclusion on the merits, take away this jurisdiction? I do not see how any finding by another Court can take away this jurisdiction; so my opinion is that Mr. Parmanand had jurisdiction to pass this order.

I would not, however, leave the matter there. This Court has decided that it is the duty of the High Court, when matters such as these are brought to its notice, to satisfy itself that there has been no unreasonable delay, that the orders are not vexatious and that the charges are not of a flimsy nature, and, I consider it necessary to examine the order of Mr Parmanand Singh from these points of view. There has certainly been no unnecessary delay in this matter. Mr. Parmanand Singh was well advised in awaiting the decision of the case before he proceeded with the 476, Criminal Procedure Code proceeding, and it appears that, once the case had been decided, he put the enquiry through as expeditiously as he could. I am perfectly ready to examine the matter upon its merits. For obvious reasons—largely in the interest of the applicant himself—I do not propose to arrive at a definite conclusion. If I were satisfied with Mr Sarju Prasad's reason for believing the Patwari to be telling the truth and for believing the entries made in the Patwari's records to be correct and genuine entries or considered his reasons of such weight as practically to conclude the matter, I should have had no hesitation in setting aside this order, and if I were satisfied that Mr. Parmanand Singh had passed the order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for insufficient reasons, I should have been ready, apart from anything which Mr. Sarju Prasad has said, to set aside that order. But upon the merits I do not find Mr. Sarju Prasad's reasons convincing, and I find Mr. Parmanand Singh's proceedings to have been most careful and his order to have been well thought out. It would be unfair to the applicant to carry the matter further. For the above reasons, I dismiss this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195 476—Grounds of inquiry—Duty of Court.

If a Court believes that a false charge has been made in proceedings before it and there is a fair possibility that enquiry will lead to the discovery of evidence sufficient to make a conviction highly probable these are grounds for an enquiry of which section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code speaks, and the Court fails in its duty if it does not hold an enquiry of its own motion under that section and leaves it to be taken by a party under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 829, col 2; 830, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, dated the 10th June 1922 in Criminal Case No. 1 of 1922.

Mr. Gangadhar Sitaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Non-Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The applicant, Tulsiram, was prosecuted by the Police on the complaint of the opposite party, Tilokchand, for an offence punishable under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate found reason to believe that three documents produced by Tilokchand were forgeries and ultimately discharged Tulsiram. The latter then applied for sanction to prosecute Tilokchand for offences punishable under sections 193 and 211 of the Indian Penal Code. This was refused on the ground that the evidence on the record of the trial of Tulsiram did not give rise to a reasonable probability that a prosecution would result in a conviction. An application to the Sessions Court under section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code was also rejected and Tulsiram has now applied to the Court for revision. All the parties to these proceedings including the Crown represented by the learned Standing Counsel, are agreed that the proper order to be passed in it is an order that the Magistrate shall himself make a proper enquiry into the offences against public justice of the commission of which there are at least strong indications, and shall thereafter either refuse sanction or grant it or else, if it should seem proper, should take action himself under sanction 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(2) The existence in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which it is to be hoped is not to be continued much longer, of an alternative procedure for the prosecution of offences against public justice appears to have led to nearly complete oblivion of the obvious duty of every Court to deal with every instance in which there is even a suspicion that such an offence has been committed. In many such cases a very little thought will show that no amount of enquiry will procure sufficient evidence for a conviction or that the offence is too trivial, having regard to the lamentable frequency of such offences, to make it worthwhile instituting a prosecution. The Court is none the less bound to take such action as is involved in giving that much thought to the matter. But where further action may possibly result in a conviction, that action must be taken and it must not be left to the public spirit or private spite of some injured party to initiate it. It is for the Court to strive for the conviction and punishment of every person that it even suspects of having committed such an offence, and if this very elementary truth were not so consistently forgotten there would never be such a thing as an application for sanction to prosecute by a private person, or at least never a successful one.

(3) In both the Courts below the matter has been examined solely with a view to ascertaining whether a conviction would probably result if the evidence given in the case already tried were laid before the Court. The answer to that is naturally in the negative. But it is abundantly clear that there is a strong probability that forgery has been committed and a false charge made and that there is nothing trivial about them and also a fair possibility that enquiry will lead to the discovery of evidence sufficient to make a conviction highly probable. These are the grounds for an enquiry of which section 476 of the Criminal Pro-sedure Code speaks, and when they exist the Court fails in its duty if it does not hold an enquiry of its own motion. An application for sanction under section 195 is in most cases a reminder to the Court of a very important duty that it has omitted to perform, and ought to be so treated. The spirit in which it is almost invariably treated in practice is illustrated in the concluding words of the Magistrate's order, which are: "The parties are on bad terms and I do not consider that I shall be justified in giving one party a handle to harass the other party."

(4) Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not mention the making of an enquiry, but it is manifest that such enquiry as may be necessary must be made before any final order can be passed on any application. And in the view of the matter set out above I am distinctly of opinion that the Court, in deciding whether there should or should not be a prosecution, ought not to be satisfied with examining such evidence, as the applicant is not in a position to produce all the available evidence. Still less ought the Court to rest content with examining such evidence as there may be in the record of the original case for the reason that the burden of proof in regard to the matters in question are on opposite sides in the original case and the subsequent prosecution. The Court must itself be astute to discover any evidence that may bear on the matter either way, and use its best endeavours to ensure that the person who appears to have committed an offence against itself does not escape punishment if he is guilty and is not unduly harassed if he is innocent.

(5) The proper attitude of the Court and the principles that should guide it are exactly the same as those of a Police Officer who actually sees the commission of what appears to be a cognisable offence. He must make full enquiry and can then refrain from arresting the person suspected only if he is satisfied that he is innocent or only technically guilty, or that the available evidence would not lead to his conviction though he is convinced himself of his guilt or that the offence is so trivial that no more than a nominal sentence would be passed on his conviction; he fails in his duty if he takes no action at all but merely waits for some aggrieved party to complain and also if, when such a complaint has been made, he does no more than scrutinise the evidence put before him by that party or that of the facts he happens to have seen himself.

(6) It has always appeared to me that the granting of sanction under section 195 is an admission that the Court has failed to carry out its duty of initiating a prosecution itself and that logically any Court that is about to grant a sanction ought to refrain from doing so and to make a complaint itself under section 476. The two sections of the Criminal Procedure Code are really parts of the same section, as was explained in Abdul Husen v. Emperor (1) and the only practical difference between the two procedures is that when the Court makes the complaint the prosecution is conducted by the Government and in the case of a sanction the fate of the trial is left largely in the hands of a private person who has less resources at his command, and may possibly ruin it from overzeal or excess of vindictiveness combined with lack of scruple. It is perhaps not necessary to push matters to the logical conclusion of initiating a prosecution under section 476 on most applications for sanction under section 195, or in the present case, but that is still the logical conclusion and the matter should be kept in mind. The orders of the Magistrate and of the Additional Sessions Judge are set aside. The former will now take up the case again, with advertence to the principles set out in this order.

JUDGMENT.—One Murad has been convicted under section 379, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment which has been reduced by the learned Sessions Judge to 8 months and a fine of Rs. 20, the finding being that he stole two goats from the herd of one Mangu on the 14th of April. I find on going through the record that the only evidence against this man is the statement of Mangu complainant and that what he says is that either Murad or Khuda Bakhsh was in possession of this goat on the following morning. Khuda Bakhsh has been made a witness for the prosecution and does not say anything against Murad. Neither of the witnesses who stated that they caught Murad saw any goat. At the best, therefore, the only case against him is that either he or Khuda Bakhsh is guilty and under these circumstances his conviction cannot stand. In the judgment of the Trial Court the following passage occurs: "The witnesses for the prosecution, as far as Murad is concerned, seem to have been won over. Anyhow they were convinced of the guilt of Murad and Khuda Bakhsh at the time and, as deposed to by Ali Gauhar and Roshan Singh, P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 10, brought them to the village." It appears to me that Murad has been convicted on evidence which it is believed the witnesses might have given, had they not been won over, which is wholly impossible position, for an accused person must be convicted upon evidence which is on the record and on nothing else.

I accept the application for revision and acquit Murad.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 23, 425—Mischief—Wrongful loss—Causing injury to neighbour's wall by digging one's own land, whether mischief.

The essential element of the offence of mischief in section 425, Indian Penal Code, is the causing of "wrongful loss" to another's property, which is defined in section 23 of the same Code as being loss caused by "unlawful means".

The right to lateral support from an adjacent land belonging to others is a right which can only be acquired by prescription.

Therefore where a person by digging his own land causes injury to the wall of his neighbour provided the latter has not acquired by prescription the right to lateral support from that land, his action, however malicious, does not amount to mischief within the true construction of section 425 of the Penal Code.

Dalton v. Angus, (1881) 6 A. C. 740 at p. 804; 50 L. J. Q. B. 689; 44 L. T. 844; 30 W. R. 191; 46 J. P. 132, referred to.

ORDER.—This case raises rather an interesting question as regards the true meaning of section 425 of the Indian Penal Code. What happened was, that the complainant had a wall on the boundary of the accused's land. They had some dispute, because the complainant would not let the accused lean the rafters of a building which he desired to to erect on the complainant's wall and thereupon the accused dug a trench along his own land in places going down to lower levels than the foundations of the complainant's wall. The Magistrate took the view, which is doubtless right, that this was done deliberately in order to annoy the complainant and the probable effect of it will be that the complainant's wall in course of time will tumble down. It is clear, ever since the decision in Dalton v. Angus (1), that the right to lateral support from an adjacent land belonging to others is a right which can only be acquired by prescription and by prescription for the required number of 20 years in this country in respect of land in the state in which it has been throughout the period, so that if you put an additional burden on land by a superstructure, you can have prescriptive rights for the land so burdened, only if you have had 20 years' enjoyment of the land in that condition without any interruption. Mischief is defined in section 425 as follows:—"Whoever with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, causes the destruction of any property,...or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously, commits 'mischief'." "Wrongful loss" is defined by section 23 as being "the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled." Therefore, in order that what happened may come within this section, we must find that what was contemplated and caused was by unlawful means. The question then is, is it unlawful to do something on your own land without trespassing on your neighbour's land which something necessarily causes injurious effects to the property of your neighbour. In Dalton v. Angus (1) occurs this passage: "It is the law, I believe I may say without question, that at any time within 20 years after the house is built the owner of the adjacent soil may with perfect legality dig that soil away, and allow his neighbour's house, if supported by it, to fall in ruins to the ground." That passage appears to us completely to cover the present case and to make it clear that what the accused did, however malicious, was not mischief within the true construction of section 425 of the Indian Penal Code.

We, therefore, think that the conviction must be set aside and that the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was convicted under section 4 of the Public Gambling Act III of 1867 and sentenced to fine. In addition, a sum of Rs. 130-0-3 which was seized from his person was ordered to be forfeited and credited to the Government. The applicant prays that conviction be set aside and the fine and the money seized from his person be refunded. I see no ground to interfere so far as the conviction is concerned but the order of forfeiture seems to be wrong. Section 8 of the Act provides that on conviction of any person for keeping or using a common gaming house or being present therein for the purpose of gaming, the Committing Magistrate may order, among other things, all monies seized therein to be forfeited. Section 5 authorizes, subject to certain conditions, entry into the common gaming house and the seizure of, among other things, monies found therein. It also authorizes a search of all parts of the common gaming house when there is any reason to believe that any instruments of gaming are concealed therein and of the persons of those who have been taken into custody and the seizure of instruments of gaming found upon such search. It is clear from this section that money can be seized only when found in the common gaming house. Money found upon search of persons is not authorized to be seized and cannot be forfeited. This view finds support in Tulla v. Emperor (1). I, therefore, hold that the sum of Rs. 130-0-3 which was seized from the appellant's person is not liable to be forfeited and direct that it be returned to the applicant.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Mianwali, dated the 13th February 1922.

Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Sher Ali was chalanned under section 20 of the Arms Act for having in his possession a gun without a license and for concealing it from the Police. He has been convicted by a Magistrate exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years. He has appealed to this Court through Lala Nawal Kishore, whom I have heard and I have also heard Mr. Niaz Ali for the Crown.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—The Police were informed by one Sanjar that two outlaws had taken shelter in the house of the appellant. They went in search of the outlaws to the hut of the appellant, but found no outlaws there. In the course of the search of the house in that connection, however, they found a gun concealed in a corn bin. A list of this recovery was prepared and was signed by the Head Constable, who conducted the search and by some other persons who had accompanied him. Allah Bakhsh Head Constable (P. W. No. 2) states that before looking into the corn bin he questioned the appellant if there was anything in it and the reply was in the negative and that when the gun was discovered the convict said he had purchased it. This recovery is further proved by the evidence of Muhammad Khan, Constable (P. W. No. 3), Sanjar (P. W. No. 4) and Fateh Khan (P. W. No. 5). The appellant admits that his house was searched on the suspicion that he had harboured some outlaws, but denies that he had the gun concealed in his house or that he was ever in possession of it. The defence theory is that this discovery has either been manufactured by some one importing the gun into the house or is without foundation.

Lala Nawal Kishore argues that the search was defective, as the provisions of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, requiring the presence of respectable citizens from the neighbourhood were not duly observed. I do not think there is much force in his criticism, as, besides the evidence of the Policemen and Sanjar, there is the statement of Fateh Khan (P. W. No. 5) that he was present at the search and this technically satisfies the essential requirements of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, that is, the presence of some independent witnesses of the search. The hut seems to be in a comparatively isolated place and the Police having gone there originally in search of some outlaws and the firearm in question having been accidentally discoverd, I do not think the Police could have done better under the circumstances as far as the presence of outsiders to witness the search was concerned. I, therefore, agree with the Trial Court in holding that the gun was found in the house of Sher Ali when it was searched and that the evidence given by the prosecution on this point is reliable.

Lala Nawal Kishore next comes to a question of law. He says that section 20 of the Arms Act is not applicable to this case, because, as held by the Punjab Chief Court in Ibrahim v. Emperor (1), every case of concealment of arms does not come under section 20 and that the section applies to cases where import or export of arms is intended. He argues further that if, on the authority above referred to, it is held that section 20 is not applicable to the present case, then the conviction must be set aside as there can be no prosecution under section 19 (f) for a mere possession of arms without a license, unless the sanction of the District Magistrate is previously obtained, which has not been done in this case. Mr. Niaz Ali, in reply to this part of the argument relies on a Division Bench ruling of the Punjab Chief Court, Khem Singh v. Emperor (2), in which a man who had a chhavi blade concealed in his loin cloth was convicted under section 20 of the Arms Act by a Bench consisting of the late Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith. The learned Judges remarked in that case that each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own facts and they found, on the circumstances of the case before them, that it was shown that the concealment was made so that the possession of the weapon should not be known to the Police. I think this last ruling is entitled to greater weight than Ibrahim v. Emperor (1) and furnishes better guidance in cases where the question is whether a particular act of concealment falls under section 20 or under section 19. I am of opinion, in the light of the observation made in Khem Singh v. Emperor (2) that on the facts proved in the present case the gun appears to have been placed in the corn bin in order to conceal it from the Police. I hold, therefore, that section 20 is applicable and that the appellant has been rightly convicted of an offence under section 20.

The last question argued before me is that of the sentence. Lala Nawal Kishore says that a very heavy sentence has been awarded by the learned Magistrate, who has taken into consideration the insecurity of the tract to which the appellant belongs. He says this is an extraneous circumstance which should not have been imported into the case. Though this is a circumstance which may be taken into account to a certain extent, yet it seems to me that the sentence awarded is too severe in a case, which, in spite of what I have said above, might possibly have been originally chalanned under section 19 (f) as a case of simple possession, and it does not seem to be necessary to award in this case a punishment heavier than the maximum punishment which the appellant could have got under the latter section.

I, therefore, reduce the sentence to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment and to this extent only, this appeal is accepted.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Benares.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellant.

Mr. Sankar Saran (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of the convictions in two trials of the appellant under sections 408 and 477A, respectively, of the Indian Penal Code. The accused was, at first, tried in a single trial under both these sections and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. That trial was set aside by this Court on the ground that a joint trial like that was illegal. The Sessions Judge thereupon tried the accused separately under each of the two sections aforesaid and has convicted him as stated above. The accused comes up here in appeal and one of the points raised by him here, which was raised before Mr. Pullan, is that he has, as the result of the separation of the trials under the two different sections, been sentenced to a heavier sentence than he was sentenced before. As to this aspect of the case, the learned Sessions Judge observes as follows:—"I have been asked to recommend the Local Government to order that the sentences in this case should run concurrently with those in the connected case under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code. As, however, the question of sentence will, no doubt, be brought before the Hon'ble High Court in appeal, I see no reason to take the unusual course proposed by the defence."

I take up first Criminal Appeal No. 355 of 1922 in which he has been convicted under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code. The argument advanced before me is that, on the finding of the learned Sessions Judge, the entries in question were made to cover defalcations for which he was convicted under section 477A, was illegal inasmuch as the object was not to defraud any one by making the false entries but it was in the main to save himself from the consequences of defalcations. Reliance is placed on the rulings of Empress of India v. Jiwanand (1), Empress v. Mazhar Husain (2), Queen-Empress v. Nand Kishore (3) and Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal (4). There are some cases of other High Courts which take a different view but I am bound by the view taken by our own High Court as to the main ingredient which constitutes an offence under section 463 of the Indian Penal Code, the section which defines what forgery is. Section 477A deals only with a special class of forgeries. As found by the learned Sessions Judge, the object of making the false entries in the present case was to cover defalcation made by the accused. His conviction, therefore, for forgery is not sustainable. There is no other section of the Code under which his conviction can be upheld.

I, therefore, acquit him of the offence charged and set aside his conviction and sentence in this case.

Report by the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, for the quashing of the committal proceedings.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a report under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, recommending the quashing of committal proceedings in the case of Crown v. Haji Jiand who had been tendered a pardon in a dacoity case, but whose evidence was considered false by the Committing Magistrate when examined as a witness before him and who, after holding a preliminary enquiry, directed his committal to the Sessions Court to be tried with the co-accused who had been previously committed for an offence under section 395, Indian Penal Code. Now, under section 215, Criminal Procedure Code, a commitment once made can be quashed only on a point of law, and the question that has arisen is, whether Criminal proceedings against the approver can be taken

According to sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code every person accepting a pardon under this section must be examined as a witness in the case and if not on bail shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial of the other accused by the High Court or the Court of Session, as the case may be. If the approver fails to comply with the conditions on which the tender was made either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, he forfeits his pardon and may, in terms of section 339, Criminal Procedure Code, be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon is tendered. As the word "forfeit" has been substituted for the word "withdrawn" in the Code it is not necessary for the pardon to be withdrawn by the Magistrate before the trial of the approver, the only point is whether the approver by any act of his own has forfeited the pardon that was tendered to him and the pardon stands forfeited if the approver refrains from making a full and true disclosure. Under the law, therefore, as it stands, at present there is no necessity for any formal withdrawal of the pardon or its cancellation. But was the Committing Magistrate justified in holding that the approver had forfeited his pardon, and in commencing proceedings against him before the termination of the main trial? Sub-section (3) of section 337, Criminal Procedure Code, states that the approver after his examination shall be detained in custody till the termination of the trial by the Sessions Court and it would be the Sessions Court, therefore, that would have to determine on the evidence before it whether the pardon has been forfeited. And this could only be done after the termination of the trial. Therefore, no action is to be taken against an approver till after the conclusion of the case in the Court of Session, and if it be desired to proceed against him, his trial should commence de novo. This would give effect to clause (3) of section 337 that the approver shall be detained until the termination of the trial by the Sessions Court, and when the trial is concluded in the Sessions Court it is not within the power of the Sessions Judge to direct the prosecution or committal of the approver I incline to the view of Beaman, J., in the case of Emperor v. Kothia (1) that "at the termination of the trial in which the pardon was given, the accomplice must be discharged by the Court. Then, if so advised, the Crown may re-arrest and proceed against him for the offence in respect of which he was given a conditional pardon."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the committal proceedings are bad in law and should be quashed. If any action is proposed to be taken against the approver in the present case for not having complied with the conditions on which a pardon was tendered to him, it should be after the conclusion of the principal trial in the Sessions Court, and it should not be overlooked that in proceedings against the approver for the offence in respect of which a pardon was tendered to him, he is entitled to plead his pardon in bar and the issue whether this pardon has been forfeited should be tried before the Court proceeds with the trial of the offence charged.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Hamirpur.

Mr. O. Ross Alston, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

WALIA v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision from an order purporting to have been passed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It appears that one Maqbul Ahmad is the proprietor of a market-place where there are grain shops. One set of persons claims to have the right of weighing grain in that market. Maqbul Ahmad asked the said men to give him a certain percentage on the earnings on the weighing as his dues as a Zamindar. They objected and would not pay him. Thereupon Maqbul Ahmad permitted the applicants to weigh the grain in the market and the applicants agreed to pay Maqbul Ahmad his Zamindari dues.

The Police reported that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace between the old weighmen and the applicants. The learned Magistrate thereupon issued a notice to the applicants under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code calling upon them to show cause. The notice that was issued by the learned Magistrate stated that

"Whereas on the report of the Police it had come to his notice that there was a dispute between the two parties, with regard to the right of weighing and with regard to the possession of the right of weighing, the notice is, therefore, issued to show cause."

The applicants appeared and showed cause. The learned Magistrate passed an order, to the effect, that the weighmen are entitled to possession of the weighing dues until evicted therefrom in due course of law. In revision, to this Court, it is contended, on behalf of the applicants, that section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not applicable to them. There is no dispute between the applicants and the old weighmen about possession of land or water. I think the contention for the applicants is correct. The dispute between the old and the new weighmen could have been decided by the learned Magistrate, if he was of opinion that the said dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace, under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The claim to weigh grain in a market and realize the weighment dues is not, in my opinion, covered by section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I, therefore, allow the application and set aside the order of the Magistrate.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Enticing away married woman—Husband minor—Complaint by father-in-law.

Except where the husband of a woman is absent and she is left in the care of her father-in-law, the latter cannot lodge a complaint under section 498 of the Penal Code in respect of enticing the woman away, even though the husband may be a minor.

There is nothing to prevent a minor husband from lodging a complaint under section 495 of the Penal Code.

Petition for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Montgomery, dated the 21st November 1921, affirming that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Okara, District Montgomery, dated the 8th October 1921.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner Walia has been convicted under section 498, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment for enticing or taking away Musammat Fatteh, wife of Chiragh Din, a boy of about 15 years of age. The facts found are that Kullu, maternal uncle of Musammat Fatteh, went with others to the house of Muhammad, father of Chiragh Din, to pay a visit of condolence, and at the end of the visit took his niece away with him to his own home with the consent of Muhammad. While the woman was on this visit to her uncle she contracted an intrigue with Walia, who eloped with her.

ERADA PADINHAREDIL GOVINDAN NAIR, In re.

The complaint was lodged by Muhammad, father of Chiragh Din. Section 199, Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under section 497 or 498 of the Indian Penal Code except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or in his absence by some person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed.

Now, in this case the husband was living with his father at Gugera in the Montgomery district. The abduction took place from the house of the uncle who lives in Montgomery town. I doubt if it can be said that Chiragh Din was absent, within the meaning of section 199, Criminal Procedure Code. If he was absent, it was merely absence from the town where the abduction took place, and in that case the complaint might be lodged by the person who had charge of the woman on his behalf, but that person was the uncle and not the father, so it would be only the uncle who could lodge the complaint and not the father. (I note here that the uncle is one of the persons against whom the complaint was made, though all but Walia were acquitted).

Taking it that Chiragh Din was not absent within the meaning of section 199, then I am of opinion that no body could lodge a complaint on his behalf. There is a reference on page 424 of the 8th Edition of Handerson's Criminal Procedure Code to Madras High Court proceedings of 7th February 1871. I have not been able to trace the proceedings referred to, but apparently it was held that a minor husband cannot be represented by another for the purpose of instituting a prosecution. In Sohoni's Criminal Procedure Code, 10th Edition, page 566, I see that it is doubted whether this is now good law, but I note that whereas in some cases the Code does provide for representation of a minor, [see, for instance, section 345 (4)], there is no such provision in section 199. There is nothing to prevent a husband under the age of 18 from lodging a complaint so far as I can see and so I imagine it was not considered necessary to provide for representation except in the case of his absence. In case of absence representation might be highly necessary, take for instance the case of a soldier going on active duty out of India and leaving his wife in care of his father or elder brother. I am of opinion that, except where the husband is absent, the father in-law cannot lodge a complaint even though the husband be a minor. And as I have already said, if the husband is to be regarded as absent because the wife was not living under the same roof when the offence was committed, then the only person who can be regarded as having charge of the woman on the husband's behalf was the uncle of the woman, and he alone could represent the minor.

I hold, therefore, that the Courts had no jurisdiction to enquire into the complaint preferred by the father of Chiragh Din, and I reverse the conviction and sentence and acquit the petitioner and release him from his bail. This, however, will apparently be no bar to fresh proceedings being taken if Chiragh Din himself lodges a complaint. See Umer uddin v. Emperor (1).

(Authorities reviewed.)

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of habeas corpus on the jailor, camp jail, Bellary, directing him to bring the bodies of the prisoners connected in Summary Case No. 21 of 1921 on the file of the Court of the Summary Magistrate, Mannarghat, before this Honourable Court, so as to ascertain the legality or otherwise of their detention.

Messrs. K. P. M. Menon and P. Govinda Menon, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus by two persons undergoing a sentence of 18 months for alleged participation in the Moplah rebellion. They were charged with rioting under section 147, Indian Penal Code, an offence cognisable by the ordinary Courts. It was alleged that they had assisted the rebels in destroying a bridge. This they admitted but stated that they were compelled to do so under threat of death. They alleged, owing to the trial being summary and taking place away from the scene of action and far from their homes, they were not in a position to substantiate this defence by evidence which they could have called if the trial had taken place under the ordinary law and in its proper place.

It is admitted that they were tried by a Summary Magistrate appointed under Ordinance II of 1921 who held his Court at a place outside the area in which Martial Law was proclaimed, the alleged offence having been committed inside such area. Acting under the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, this Ordinance was made and promulgated by the Governor General. By it Martial Law was put in force in certain areas called Administration Areas, and by section 6, Summary Courts of Criminal Jurisdiction might be constituted in any Administration Area with summary powers of trial of certain minor offences connected with the rebellion. The Military Commander had power to direct cases to be tried by Summary Courts and to distribute the work among such Courts. By section 7, no Summary Court can try any offence unless committed in the Administration Area in which such Court is established except as so provided, the ordinary Criminal Courts continued their functions.

From the decision of such Summary Courts there is no appeal and further by section 16 of the Ordinance all powers of interference with such decision by writ of habeas corpus or otherwise is prohibited. It follows that if the Court that tried the petitioners was a properly constituted Court under the Ordinance we have no power to interfere. But in our judgment this was not a Court properly constituted under the Ordinance, for we can find no right at all to hold a Summary Court except in the Martial Law area, and by the words of the Ordinance the jurisdiction of these Courts is local. Outside the area the ordinary rules of law prevail and there is nothing in the Ordinance to prevent this Court interfering with the decision of any Court outside the area purporting to exercise a criminal jurisdiction which it does not possess. That this is the proper construction of the Ordinance seems to have been recognised by the Government of India after these convictions by section 10 of the Ordinance V of 1921 promulgated on November 11, 1921. By that section it was enacted: "Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, the Local Government may, by general or special order, appoint places outside the area in which Martial Law is in force at which any Summary Court, constituted under the Martial Law Ordinance, 1921, or Special Magistrate may sit for the trial of offences."

It follows that the conviction of the petitioners was illegal and that there is no justification for their detention in prison. This view was also expressed by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. in Kochunni Elaya Nair, In re (1), a case in which it was not neces.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 26; 45 M. 14; 41 M. L. J. 441; 14 L. W. 465; (1921) M. W. N. 708 23 Cr. L. J. 490, sary for the decision, but we think the Law was correctly laid down by that learned Judge.

The question remains, and has been fully argued before us, whether this Court has any power to interfere by the issue of a writ of habeas corpus to the jailor of the jail in this Presidency in which the petitioners are confined.

The law can be stated to be that in every part of the British Empire every person has a right to be protected from illegal imprisonment by the issue of the prerogative writ of habeas corpus. The King's Bench in England exercised the power of issuing such writs throughout the British Empire until the Statute known as the Habeas Corpus Act, 25 & 26 Vic. c. 20 was passed. By that Act the powers of the King's Bench are limited to England and such places outside England which have no local Court competent to exercise the power. It follows that these petitioners must have a right to such a writ and it is a matter of absolute right, either from a Court in this country, if there be one competent to grant it, or from the Court of the King's Bench sitting in London. In our judgment it is fully established that this Court has all necessary powers and is competent to grant the writ. That it has such or other similar powers in the Presidency Town of Madras is clear from section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. But that Code makes no provision for the exercise of that power in the Mofussil. This Court has, however, succeeded under the High Courts of Judicature in India Act, 24 & 25 Vic. c. 104 and the Letters Patent issued thereunder, to all the powers of the Supreme Court of Madras; and that Supreme Court had by its Charter of 1800, Art. 8 given to it the powers over "all the Territories which now are, or hereafter may be, subject to, or dependent upon, the Government of Madras aforesaid; and to have such jurisdiction and authority as our Justices of our Court of King's Bench have, and may lawfully exercise, within that part of Great Britain called England, as far as circumstances will admit" These words give to the Supreme Court the right usually exercised by the King's Bench in England of issuing the writ of habeas corpus.

This was definitely decided in the analogous case of Calcutta, Ameer Khan, In the matter of (2), in the able and illuminating judgment of Norman, J. approved and followed in this Court in Nataraja Iyer, In re (3).

It has been contended on behalf of the Crown by Mr. Adam in his very able argument that as the Criminal Procedure Code in sections 491 and 456 makes provision for the exercise of similar powers in Madras and for the granting of such writs in the case of British subjects in all parts of India, it must be taken to have been the intention of the Legislature to confine the powers of this Court to such cases, and that the power to issue the writ in the Mofussil which had been established in Ameer Khan, In the matter of (2) must be taken to have been impliedly taken away. In our judgment this is not sound for three reasons. In the first place, section 491 merely substitutes or adds for the Presidency Towns a different form of procedure less cumbersome than the granting of the writ of habeas corpus; while section 456 was necessary because in certain parts of India there was no High Court established by Charter, and as there was no Court in this country which could grant a writ of habeas corpus even to a European British subject in those parts it was thought necessary to give that power and such power was given by that section.

Secondly, the right which had been established was a substantive right and it could hardly have been the intention of the Legislature to take that right away by making rules of procedure or giving adjective rights for the exercise of similar powers. It is the sort of case where it can be fairly argued that if the Legislature intended to take away such an important right from the subject, it must use plain and unambiguous language Thirdly, to adopt such a construction of the Criminal Procedure Code would lead to this absurdity, namely, that a European unlawfully imprisoned would have the right to obtain the writ in this Court while an Indian subject would have to go to the King's Bench in London for his remedy and there is a sound rule that where one possible construction leads to an absurdity and another does not, the latter is to be preferred.

In our judgment, this Court has the power to issue this writ and in this case it is its duty to do so.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164, 364—Incomplete chalan—Statement of accused, record of, by Magistrate—Section applicable—Confession—Informal procedure, effect of—Dead body, pointing out of.

If an incomplete chalan is sent up and the evidence available is recorded by a Magistrate, the statement made by the accused is not a statement made under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure but a statement recorded under section 364 of the Code [p. 843, col 1.]

Where proceedings as to the recording of a confession are not in conflict with any section of the Criminal Procedure Code, the confession of the accused person should not be rejected simply on the ground of informality of procedure [p. 843, col 2]

The mere pointing out of the dead body by the accused would not by itself be sufficient evidence for sustaining a conviction for murder, but it would be otherwise where the accused fails to explain how he came by his knowledge of the place where the body lay. [p. 843, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, dated the 1 th December 1919.

Mr. I. M. Mackay, for the Appellant.

Sardar Mehtab Singh, S. B., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bhai Khan, the appellant in this case, has been sentenced to death for the murder of one Hetam on the night of the 14th October 1919; his case is before us on appeal and also in connection with the confirmation of the sentence of death.

The conviction reposes upon the deposition of Musammat Sattan, widow of the deceased Hetam, supported by a confession made to the Committing Magistrate by the appellant and some other corroborative details, the most important of which is the alleged discovery of the corpse in a karir bush, not far from the appellant's bhan, or hut, on appellant's indication. The story told by Musammat Sattan is that Hetam a year or so before his murder paid Rs. 240 to her first husband who dwelt in another village and having secured her divorce from him married her, that some six months before the murder she struck up an intimacy with the appellant who had undertaken to kill her husband if she promised to marry him. She states that shortly before the murder she induced her husband Hetam to take her to her own village Kuraddi in the Shahpur District. After her husband's departure from Kuraddi Bhai Khan came to the village and interviewed her for a few minutes, but next day returned with Nura Musalli and spent the day with her. In the afternoon she followed them to Ushhali to the house of Nura and the next morning Bhai Khan took her back to Kuraddi where they spent the day and night together. On the day following they again went to Ushhali and the next day left Ushhali for Wan Bhachran where her husband's bhan is situated. They did not, however, proceed that evening to her husband's hut but in the afternoon halted at the bhan of Muhammad Azam and had their evening meal there. Musammat Sattan stayed there the night but Bhai Khan and Nura went on and at dawn next morning Bhai Khan returned alone and told that her husband had been killed by him. They then started for Wan Bachran but separated on the road, Bhai Khan going to his own hut while she went to her husband's.

By noon of that day, the 15th of October, the disappearance of Hetam had given cause to the villagers for apprehension and in the evening a report was made to two Sub-Inspectors who happened to be engaged in some investigation at Wan Bachran. The Police Sub Inspector came to the house of Hetam that same night and upon close examination Musammat Sattan stated that Nura Musalli had murdered her husband. At that time she made no mention of Bhai

Khan and next morning took the Police to a well called Kauri Khuhi, because she says she had learnt from Bhai Khan that her husband's corpse had been thrown into that well. The Police had the well searched but without result, whereupon Musammat Sattan admitted Bhai Khan's share in the affair and made a further statement that they had spent the evening before at the bhan of Muhammad Azam which appears to be some five kos away from Hetam's bhan. The Sub Inspectors proceeded with her to Muhammad Azam's bhan and in the meantime a third Sub-Inspector proceeded to Bhai Khan's bhan which he locked up. After some discussion Bhai Khan made a statement and took the Police party to a thick karir clump hundred yards away from his hut, where he pointed to the body of the deceased Hetam.

The Police then presented Bhai Khan before a First Class Magistrate, Iqbal Singh, on an incomplete chalan. The Magistrate after recording the statement of Musammat Sattan as a witness called upon the appellant for his statement. Thereupon the appellant made a statement in which he admitted that he and Nura had inveigled the deceased out of his hut on the previous evening and had strangled him. He added that he had had no cause of enmity with Hetam but that he had done the deed solely for the sake of Musammat Sattan. Nura was tried along with Bhai Khan for this murder, but the case against him was, at a very late stage of the trial, withdrawn by order of the District Magistrate. Consequently, the appeal before us does not concern Nura. On the 12th November 1919 after the Magistrate had taken the remaining evidence in the case the statement of the appellant was again taken and he then resiled from his earlier statement, alleging that he had made it under Police pressure having been severely beaten and that the case was the result of his enmity with Alam Sher of his village. But he called for no witnesses in his defence. The witnesses regarding the discovery of the body on information supplied by the appellant are the Police Officers and witnesses Nos. 7 and 8 for the prosecution, Alam Sher and Ghulam Muhammad, whose evidence there seems to be no reason to reject. Further evidence in support of Musammat Sattan's story is supplied by witness No. 11, Muhammad Azam, who deposes that Nura, Bhai Khan and Musammat Sattan came to his bhan the day before the Police came to make inquiries, that they had a meal at his house and that Musammat Sattan stayed the night there and was taken away by Bhai Khan who returned early next morning. He is corroborated by Muhammad Chaughata, P. W. No. 12; and Raja P. W. No 13 says that on that day which he fixes in the same way from the date of the Police arrival, Bhai Khan and Musammat Sattan were travelling together towards Wan Bachran.

On behalf of the appellant learned Counsel has argued that the witnesses for the prosecution are not to be credited and has urged, firstly, that Musammat Sattan must have been under the influence of the Police; secondly, that the appellant had no motive to murder Hetam, because on Musammat Sattan's own showing he was able to enjoy her favours even though her husband was alive. The third point was that as the distance between Muhammad Azam's bhan and Hetam's hut was about ten miles, it was impossible or at any rate improbable that the appellant between the hours of 9 o'clock in the evening and 5 o'clock next morning could have covered 15 or more miles and in addition found time to murder Hetam. His last point was that even if Bhai Khan pointed out the body thereby indicating that he knew where the body lay, he was not in actual exclusive possession of the corpus delicti and, therefore, his action did not raise the presumption of his guilt. The reply to these points is as follows :—

Musammat Sattan would certainly have been pressed by the Police to make disclosure in the case. On her own showing she is an accomplice and it is for this reason that we have required corroborative evidence of her statement. As for the appellant's opportunities for enjoying Musammat Sattan's society in the lifetime of her husband, it is obvious that those opportunities would come rarely and were attended by a risk of surprise which objections would not exist if once Hetam had been removed. It is true that there is evidence that Bhai Khan has been married but it is also on the record that the marriage has not yet been consummated, and if Musammat Sattan's evidence is true, we see no reason to doubt the inadequacy of the alleged motive. With regard to the objection on the score of distance between Muhammad Azam's bhan and the scene of the murder it is very unfortunate that there is no accurate map on the record showing the exact situation of the deceased's hut with reference to the bhan of Muhammad Azam. But even if we suppose that the appellant had to walk ten miles to the scene of murder and ten miles back we find, having regard to the fact that the date was the 15th of October, that he had at least 8 hours at his disposal. He is quite a young man and was familiar with the country that he had to traverse, and we see nothing improbable on the score of the distance to be traversed in the story told by Musammat Sattan and also by the appellant in his confession to the Committing Magistrate. As for the final objection we do not say that the mere pointing out of the body would be by itself sufficient evidence for sustaining a conviction for murder: but the appellant has never explained how he came by his knowledge of the place where the body lay. Indeed he does not admit that he pointed out the body; his explanation was that there was a general search by the Police in the jungle and that the body was found by nobody in particular in the course of that search.

The learned Sessions Judge has discarded the entire confession made to the Committing Magistrate by the appellant on the ground that all the formalities prescribed by section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, were not observed. We, however, do not see the necessity for dealing so drastically with the confession. The confession looks like truth, and the learned Sessions Judge has overlooked the fact that the statement was not recorded by the Magistrate under the provisions of section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. We do not propose to discuss the general desirability of sending up incomplete chalans, but if an incomplete chalan is sent up and the evidence available is recorded by Magistrate, the statement made by the accused is not a statement made under section 164 of the Code, but a statement recorded under section 364 of the Code. The Committing Magistrate seems to have been a gentleman of little experience, for there are indications in his procedure that he was uncertain whether his proceedings should be under section 164 or under section 364. But as his proceedings are in fact not in conflict with any section of the Code we see no reason why the confession of the appellant should be rejected on the ground of informality of procedure.

To resume then, we find against the appellant the statement of Musammat Sattan which is corroborated in material points and most strongly by the conduct of the appellant himself in revealing to the Police the place where the corpse lay. The motive for the act is patent and we have no doubt that the appellant has been rightly convicted of the crime with which he was charged. We consequently dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 5th December 1921, of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Devakottah Division, in Calendar Case No. 97 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C.S. Vencatachariar (with him Mr. M.S. Ramanuja Aiyangar), for the Petitioner.—The lower Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. The offence under section 40 of the Income Tax Act must be deemed to have been committed in the place where the accused verified the petition, that is, Kottaipatnam and the Court having jurisdiction over that place only could try the case. The petition was no doubt received by the Divisional Officer in Devakottah. But that will not give jurisdiction to the Divisional Magistrate of Devakottah. That is not a place where any consequence of the offence ensued to attract the applicability of section 179, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The lower Court had jurisdiction on the application of section 179, Criminal Procedure Code. Some consequence must have ensued where the verified petition was received.

ORDER.—We are asked in this revision case to interfere with an order passed by the First Class Sub Divisional Magistrate of Devakottah Division disallowing the objection of the petitioner in a criminal case.

The case was instituted on a complaint by the Income-tax Assistant Tahsildar of Devakottah. In that complaint the accused was charged under section 177, Indian Penal Code, within the meaning of section 40 of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918. The facts set out are that the accused verified a petition, which he afterwards presented to the Revenue Divisional Officer under section 21 of the Income Tax Act. That verification was made at Kottaipatnam in the Tanjore District. But the last sentence of the complaint states that the offence was committed at the place where the return was received by the Revenue Divisional Officer, Devakottah, within the lower Court's jurisdiction.

It must be borne in mind that the complaint is statedly of an offence, punishable under section 177, Indian Penal Code, within the meaning of section 40 of the Income Tax Act. We are, therefore, concerned with the wording of the latter section and have to deal with it as it stands. Section 40 of the Income Tax Act says that "if a person makes a statement in a verification mentioned in section 17 or section 21 (3) which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, he shall be deemed to have committed the offence described in section 177 of the Indian Penal Code." Where then did the petitioner make the statement in his verification? According to the complaint he made it in Devakottah. The learned Public Prosecutor, however, has argued that, with reference to section 179, Criminal Procedure Code, the offence constituted by the verification will be triable, not only where the verification was effected, but also where any consequence thereof ensued, and that some sort of consequence must be held to have ensued, where the verified petition was received by the authorities. We have not been able to understand from the learned Public Prosecutor what is the exact consequence, to which he refers. For the receipt of the petition would in no sence be the consequence of its verification, since the verification would go no way towards putting the petition in transit from one place to the other. In Rambilas, In re (1) it was held in effect that the consequence contemplated in section 179 must be an essential part of the offence charged. That requirement is not fulfilled in the case before us. It has been suggested that an absurdity will be entailed by the petitioner's construction of section 40. For on that construction any person who verified a petition would be punishable even though no use of the petition were made and it never left his possession. We think that any such anomaly is sufficiently executed by the reference to sections 17 and 21 (3) in section 40. Taking this view we must hold that the charge can legally be tried only by the Court having jurisdiction over Kottaipatnam, Tanjore District, the place where the verification of the petition took place.

We, therefore, direct the lower Court to return the complaint to the complainant for presentation to the Court having jurisdiction.

A search conducted after the issue of a warrant under section 5 of the Public Gambling Act is not a search under Chapter VII of the Criminal Procedure Code, and section 103 of the Code has, therefore, no application to such a search. [p. 846, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, with his No. 104G of 26th January 1922.

FACTS.—The Superintendent of the Dera Ghazi Khan Police having received information that the house of Khilinda Ram, accused No. 1 in the case, which is situated in the Town of the Dera Ghazi Khan, was used as a common gaming house, issued a warrant under section 5 of Act III of 1867.

Under the authority of this warrant the City Sub-Inspector, accompanied by some Police force and one Motan Ram, raided the house mentioned in the warrant on the night between 8th and 9th November 1921, and found Khilinda Ram and 11 others present there. On a search being made in the house playing cards, some kauris and cash aggregating to Rs. 100-2-3 were found and all the 12 persons were arrested and sent up for trial, accused No. 1 under section 3 and the rest under section 4 of the Gambling Act.

GROUNDS.—It would appear that the joint trial of the keeper of a common gaming house and of other persons for being found in such a house, is illegal.

It seems also that the search was illegal. The provisions of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, should be followed in all searches as a general provision of law. In the present instance only one respectable person of the vicinity was called to witness the search.

For these reasons I forward this case on the Revision Side for orders.

Accused No. 1 was released on bail of Rs. 500 by order of this Court dated 14th January 1922. The fines imposed upon the rest of the accused have all been paid

Lala Har Goval, for the Petitioners.

Babu S. C. Chatterji, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The joint trial of Khilinda Ram and the other accused was not illegal. (See Bhana Mal v. Emperor (1)].

I am of opinion that the provisions of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code do not apply to a search conducted under section 5 of Act III of 1867. Under section 5, Criminal Procedure Code, investigations into offences under any special law are to be made according to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code but subject to any enactment for the time being in force. Chapter VII of the Code, which deals with processes to compel the production of documents and other moveable property and for the discovery of persons wrongfully confined, contains three sections (95, 98 and 100) authorising the issue of a search warrant by a Court in certain circumstances, and a search warrant under this chapter can only be granted by a Court. Section 103 provides that searches under this chapter shall be conducted in the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality, and under section 165, Criminal Procedure Code, this provision applies also to searches conducted by the Police.

Section 5 of Act III of 1867 prescribes a special procedure which may be followed when a District Magistrate, First Class Magistrate, or District Superintendent of Police receives credible information and has reason to believe that any house, walled enclosure, room or place is used as a common gaming house. The section is to some extent analogous to section 98, Criminal Procedure Code, but it authorizes the issue of a warrant to enter and search buildings and to take possession of certain articles when the circumstances would not justify the issue of such a warrant under the Criminal Procedure Code. The warrant, moreover, may be issued by the District Superintendent of Police as well as by a Magistrate.

A search conducted after the issue of a warrant under section 5 of Act III of 1867 is not, therefore, a search under Chapter VII of the Criminal Procedure Code, and section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, can have no application. In the case of searches under the Opium Act the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code have been expressly made applicable by section 16, but Act III of 1867 contains no corresponding section.

I decline to interfere. The accused, Khilinda Ram, must surrender to his bail and serve the remainder of his sentence.

Z. K. Order accordingly.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 120, 121—Obstructing Railway servant—Abuse, whether obstruction—Travelling without ticket—Removal from carriage.

Travelling without a ticket is not one of the circumstances mentioned in section 120 of the Railways Act as justifying the removal of a person from a Railway carriage by a Railway servant.

The complainant, a Station Master, removed the accused from a Railway carriage as the latter was travelling without a ticket. Accused used abusive language towards the Station Master and was convicted of an offence under section 121 of the Railways Act:

Held, (1) that abuse or insult did not necessarily constitute obstruction or impediment to a Railway servant in the discharge of his duties, and that there was nothing to show that it had done so in this case:

(2) that, therefore, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under section 121 of the Railways Act.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 18th June 1921, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 26th January 1921.

Lala Niamat Rai, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case appear to be perfectly clear. On the 24th January 1921 one Radha Kishen and two of his employees got into a train at Campbellpur station without tickets just as the train was about to start. The Station Master made them get down and Radha Kishen used abusive language towards him. Radha Kishan has been convicted of an offence under section 121 of the Indian Railways Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25. In the first place, abuse or insult does not necessarily constitute obstruction or impediment to a Railway servant in the discharge of his duty, and does not appear to have done so in this case. Secondly, it is doubtful whether the Station Master was legally entitled to remove these persons from the train. Travelling without a ticket is not one of the circumstances mentioned in section 120 of the Act as justifyng removal from a Railway by a Railway servant. There is no evidence that the persons were travelling without tickets with fraudulent intent.

The conviction does not appear to be justified by the evidence, I accept the petition for revision, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107 514—Proceedings under s. 514 initiated within period of bond—Expiry of period under bond no bar to prosecution.

Where proceedings under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code are initiated within the period prescribed in a bond furnished under section 107 of the Code, the expiry of the period before the completion of the case is no legal bar to its prosecution under section 514 of the Code.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Benares.

Messrs. Satya Chandra Mukerji and Narmadeshwar Prasad Upadhiya, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The argument put forward in support of this application has the merit of ingenuity but I do not think it ought to be allowed to prevail.

The proceedings which are attacked were proceedings under section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The applicant, Uma Dat Misser, was, by an order passed on the 14th of March 1921, bound over to keep the peace for a period of one year. In or about the month of July, certain facts transpired which led to its being believed that Uma Dat had been guilty of a breach of the conditions of the bond, and as a result of this information, proceedings were initiated against him under section 514. There can be no doubt that these proceedings were taken within the period provided by the bond. For one reason or another it became necessary to transfer the proceedings under section 514 from the Court in which they were taken. It was held by this Court that those proceedings could only properly be taken in the Court of the District Magistrate of Benares and not in the Court of the Joint Magistrate who had taken up the case under section 514. An order was accordingly passed directing the District Magistrate of Benares to take the proceedings on to his own file. Instead of complying with this Court's order, the learned District Magistrate made over the case to a Subordinate Magistrate, Mr. Gada Husain. Further application was made to this Court which resulted in the proceedings taken in Mr. Gada Husain's Court being set aside as being without jurisdiction and the learned District Magistrate was directed to hold an enquiry de novo.

By the time all this happened, the period of one year limited by the bond had expired, and it is now contended that inasmuch as the period has lapsed, no proceedings under section 514 are possible. I have been referred to a case in Ram Chunder Lalla, In re (1), which had already been dissented from by a Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Raja Ram (2), of the Calcutta High Court in which it was held that where no proceedings under section 514 were taken by a Magistrate within the period limited by the bond, no action could be taken under this section after the term of the bond had expired. This, however, is a different case. There can be no doubt that action was taken within the period laid down in the bond and that the only reason why the case did not reach the stage of completion was that the learned District Magistrate had made a mistake in transferring the case from his own file to the Court of a Subordinate Magistrate. It was this illegality in the procedure of the District Magistrate which led to all the delay. As I understand the position, the learned District Magistrate is now only carrying on the proceedings which were initiated within the period of one year from the date of the bond, namely, the 14th of March 1921. In other words, the order of this Court was to direct the Magistrate to take up the case at the stage where he passed the illegal order and to continue the proceedings therefrom. I hold that there is no legal bar to the prosecution of this case under section 514, and I dismiss the application accordingly.

(1) 1 C. L. R. 134.
(2) 26 A. 202; A. W. N. (1903) 237.

F Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), s. 13—Public place—Blind alley removed from highway.

A blind alley approachable by a circuitous lane and at a considerable distance from a highway is not a "public place" within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act.

Moula v. Emperor, 56 Ind. Cas. 672; 104 P. L. R. 1920; 21 Cr. L. J. 512, Badr-ud-din v. Emperor, 57 Ind. Cas. 931; 21 Cr. L. J. 691, relied upon.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, dated the 9th December 1921, modifying that of a Bench of the Honorary Magistrates dated 31st October 1921.

Mr. G. J. Mackay, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision of the order of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore dated the 9th December 1921, upholding the convictions of a number of persons for an offence under section 13 of the Gambling Act, III of 1867. The Trial Court found that the four petitioners and their companions had been surprised by the Police while they were gambling in a public place and that cards and dice, etc., were found on the spot and some money was recovered from each of the men. The petitioners were sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment each as they had been previously convicted of gambling and the rest to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment each.

On appeal the sentenses of the four men were reduced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment each and the remaining six men were given a sentence of a fine of Rs. 10 each instead of the sentence of imprisonment awarded by the Trial Court and were ordered to undergo 10 days' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of fine.

Mr. Mackay, who appears for the petitioners in this Court, had raised various questions in his grounds for revision relating to the findings of the Courts below but he has now rightly confined his case to a point of law. He contends that the place where the petitioners were found gambling is not a "public place" and that, therefore, the petitioners should not have been convicted of gambling in a public place. Reference to a plan of the spot shows that the place in question is removed a considerable distance from the Napier Road and in order to get to it one has to pass through a circuitous lane before one gets to a blind alley where the petitioners were seen sitting. Reference is made to two decisions of this Court, where a public place, for the purposes of section 13 of the Gambling Act, is defined. In Moula v. Emperor (1) [Criminal Reference No. 615 of 1920 published as 56 Ind. Cas. 672] it is laid down that "where the accused were found gambling at a place near a public street and exposed to public view but which was not part of the public street they could not be convicted of gambling in a public." The same view was expressed in Criminal Revision No. 793 of 1920 [Badr ud-din v. Emperor (2)] where certain persons were found gambling "near the water tank within the premises of Railway Station" and it was held that the place was not a public place under section 13 of the Gambling Act. I think the present case is parallel to the above mentioned cases and the decisions referred to above must be followed.

I accept this revision, and, setting aside the convictions of the petitioners, acquit them.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Remand, order of—Appeal, when lies—Appeal, second, when competent—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), ss. 41, 42.

An appeal from an order of an Appellate Court remanding a case under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, lies in all cases except those in which absolutely no right of second appeal against an appellate decree is given in the body of the Code or by any other law. [p. 853, col. 1.]

Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din, 11 Ind. Cas. 315; 50 P. R. 1911; 137 P. W. R. 1911; 210 P. L. R. 1911, overruled.

Sawan Singh v. Mothu, 23 Ind. Cas. 817; 85 P. R. 1914; 162 P. W. R. 1914; 120 P. W. R. 1914, discussed.
Fati v. Gaddi, 20 Ind. Cas. 788; 158 P. W. R. 1913; 279 P. L. R. 1913, approved.

In order to determine whether an order of remand is appealable or not, the test is, suppose, the Court instead of making an order of remand passed a decree on the strength of the adjudication constituting the order of remand, would there be a second appeal from that decree? If a second appeal would lie from the decree, then the order of remand is appealable, otherwise not. [p. 854, col. 1.]

Per Martineau, J—The competency of a second appeal is not dependent on the question whether the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based on a finding of fact or on a finding of law, for even when the decision is based on a finding of fact a second appeal will lie on one of the grounds mentioned in section 41 (1) (b) and (c) of the Punjab Courts Act. Whether or not a second appeal lies depends on the nature and value of the suit, a second appeal being barred by section 42 (2) only in a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes where the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500. Section 42 (1) merely restricts the grounds on which a second appeal can be entertained to those mentioned in section 41. [p. 854, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 20th December 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Lyallpur, dated the 10th June 1918.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

MARTINEAU AND ABDUL RAOOF, JJ.—(May 21, 1921.)—Shah Muhammad obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife, Musammat Umri. In the execution proceedings the latter pleaded that she had become a Christian, and that, therefore, in accordance with the Muhammadan Law, the marriage with the decree-holder was dissolved and the decree could not be executed. After taking evidence the Munsif found that the judgment-debtor had embraced Christianity, and dismissed the application for execution. On appeal by the decree-holder the District Judge, being of opinion that the enquiry made by the Executing Court was not sufficiently full, set aside the order and remanded the case under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision on the merits, observing that what had to be decided was whether Musammat Umri had embraced Christianity, or whether her conversion was a fraudulent and colourable one. Musammat Umri has appealed to this Court from the order of remand.

Mr. Oertel, on behalf of the respondent, takes the preliminary objection that the appeal does not lie, relying on Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1).

O. XLIII, r. 1 (u), Civil Procedure Code, allows an appeal from an order under O. XLI, r. 23, remanding a case where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. The question in what cases an appeal lies from such a decree is to be determined by the provisions of the Punjab Courts Act.

The ruling Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1) has ceased to have any application, as that case was decided when the old Punjab Courts Act XVIII of 1884, as amended by Act XXV of 1899, was in force, and the law contained in those Acts on the subject of appeals from Appellate decrees was entirely changed by the enactment of Punjab Act I of 1912.

After the passing of Act I of 1912, which contains the same provisions as the later Act III of 1914 in regard to appeals from appellate decrees it was held in

Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2) that there could be no appeal from a Divisional Judge's order of remand under O. XLI, r. 23 Civil Procedure Code, if that order was based on a finding of fact only, but that an appeal was competent if the preliminary point on which the decision of the First Court was reversed involved a question of law, which would allow of a second appeal if the order appealed from were a decree.

With all deference, we venture to doubt the correctness of this decision, and we think that the error consists in confusing the question whether an appeal lies from an appellate decree with the question as to the grounds on which an appeal will lie. The competency of a second appeal is not dependent on the question whether the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based on a finding of fact or on a finding of law, for even when the decision is based on a finding of fact a second appeal will lie on one of the grounds mentioned in section 41 (a) (b) and (c) of the Punjab Courts Act. A second appeal is prohibited by that Act only in a case of the nature mentioned in section 42 (2), viz, a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500. Section 42 (1) does not bar a second appeal in other cases, but only restricts the grounds of the appeal, providing that no second appeal shall lie except on the ground mentioned in section 41.

Further, the rule laid down in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2) does not provide for a case like the present in which the Appellate Court has passed an order of remand without having reversed the decision of the First Court on a preliminary point.

The words "where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court," which are contained in O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, did not find a place in the corresponding section, viz., section 588 (28) of the old Code, and it was held in a series of cases, viz., Collector of Bijnor v. Jafar Ali Khan (3), Mahadev Narsing v. Ragho Keshav (4), Kirte Mohaldar v. Ramjan Mohaldar (5), Chinnatambi Gounden v. Chinnana Gounden (6) and Agandh Mahto v. Khajah Aliullah (7), that section 588 (28), Civil Procedure Code, (corresponding to section 42 (2) of the present Punjab Courts Act) was not controlled by section 586 and that an order of remand passed on an appeal from a decree in a suit of the nature described in section 586 was, therefore, appealable. It seems probable that it was simply for the purpose of excluding an appeal from an order of remand in cases of that description that the words "where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court" were added in O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

The view, therefore, which we are inclined to take is, that every order of remand passed under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, is appealable except when it is made in appeal in a suit of the nature mentioned in section 42 (2) of the Punjab Courts Act, or in any other case in which an appeal from the appellate decree would not be allowed by law. As a different view has been taken in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2) we think that the point should be determined by a Full Bench.

We accordingly refer the following question to a Full Bench :—

When does an appeal lie from an order of an Appellate Court remanding a case under O. XLI, r. 23 Civil Procedure Code.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Oertel and D. C. Ralli, for the Respondent.

ORDER OF THE FULL BENCH.

ABDUL RAOOF, J. (February 21, 1922).—This is a reference to a Full Bench which has been made under the following circumstances :—

Shah Muhammad, respondent, came into Court on the allegation that Musammat Umri was his wife and claimed restitution of conjugal rights. Khan Muhammad Sher Nawab Khan, Munsif of Lyallpur, held that Musammat Umri had embraced Christianity and under the Muhammadan Law the marriage had been dissolved. The prayer for restitution of conjugal rights accordingly was disallowed.

(3) 3 A. 18; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 4.

(4) 7 B. 292; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 197.

(5) 10 C. 523; 5 Shomo L. R. 159; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 350.

(6) 19 M. 391; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 978,

(7) 11 C. W. N. 862.

Shah Muhammad appealed to the Court of the District Judge and urged that the alleged conversion was colourable and not genuine. The learned District Judge accepted the appeal and, holding that the real issue had not been tried by the First Court, remanded the case for re-trial under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, suggesting the following points to be decided in the case:—

(1) Has Musammat Umri embraced Christianity and has her marriage with the appellant, therefore, become dissolved? and

(2) Is her conversion a fraudulent and a colourable one and, therefore, she is still the wife of the appellant?

Against this order of remand an appeal was preferred to this Court and registered as Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 89 of 1919. When the appeal came up for hearing before a Single Judge a preliminary objection was taken to its competency on the basis of the ruling in Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1). Owing to the importance of the question raised the appeal was referred to a Division Bench for decision. Before the Division Bench the question was discussed at some length and reliance was placed on the ruling in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2), in addition to the one already referred to. The Division Bench in its turn thought that the question raised was of sufficient importance to be referred to a Full Bench for decision. Accordingly the following question was referred and has come up for decision before us:—

When does an appeal lie from an order of an Appellate Court remanding a case under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code?

The terms of the reference are somewhat wide in their scope but the argument addressed to us requires an answer to a much narrower question. The argument put forward by Mr. Oertel, Counsel for the respondent, in support of the preliminary objection is as follows:—

(1) That under O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (u) an appeal from an order under r. 23, O. XLI, remanding a case would lie only where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court;

(2) that as provided in section 101 of the Code no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100, Civil Procedure Code;

(3) that under section 100 an appeal can lie to the High Court on any of the following grounds only:—

(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits;

(4) that no second appeal would lie on findings of fact;

(5) that it is impossible to say whether the decree which might have been passed by the District Judge, had he not remanded the case, would have been open to objection on any of the grounds mentioned in section 100, and that it was quite possible that the decision of the Appellate Court might have been based on findings of fact;

(6) That applying in this case the rule laid down in Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1) and Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2), the present appeal from the order of remand does not lie under O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (u).

The decision in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2) does not support the contention of the learned Counsel. So far as I am able to understand the judgments of the two learned Judges of the Division Bench, they held that orders of remand can be appealed against on exactly the same ground on which the appellate decree can be challenged in second appeal. Mr. Justice Chevis observed that: "I believe it is intended to put such orders on exactly the same footing as appellate decrees, and to make them appealable on precisely the same grounds." Mr. Justice Shah Din made the following pertinent remark on the subject at page 306* of the report:—

"Suppose the decision of the First Court was one dismissing the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation (assuming that the question of limitation decided was a pure question of law) or on the ground that the matter in dispute was res judicata between the parties, and suppose that on appeal the Divisional Judge were to hold that the suit was not barred by the law of limitation or by the rule of res judicata and were to remand the case for a fresh decision on the merits, under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u), Civil Procedure Code, an appeal would, in my opinion, lie to this Court from the order of remand, inasmuch as an appeal would lie if the order of remand, which involved the decision of questions of law, were treated as a decree finally disposing of the suit; although after the remand the First Court might dispose of the suit only on facts, in which case, on an appeal being preferred to it, the Appellate Court would also have to record findings of fact only and dispose of the appeal on that basis. From the 'final decree' of the Appellate Court, based as it would be only on findings of fact there would be no appeal to this Court; and yet in the view that I take of r. 1 (u) of O. XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, an appeal would lie to this Court from the Appellate Court's order of remand because the preliminary point involved questions of law and the decision on it would be open to second appeal if the order appealed from were a decree and not a mere order."

The decision in Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1) appears to be in conflict with this opinion. In this case the Court of first instance had dismissed the suit holding it to be barred by time, and the learned Divisional Judge on appeal had held that the suit was within time and had remanded it under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judges of the Chief Court held, "that as it was impossible to say whether the decree which might have been passed by the Divisional Judge, had he not remanded the case, would have varied or reversed otherwise than as to costs the decree of the Court below and whether a further appeal would lie or not from the Divisional Judge's decree no appeal lay under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Civil Procedure Code, against the orders of remand." If the question of limitation decided by the Divisional Judge was a question of law an appeal from the order of remand in the case was competent according to the ruling of the learned Judges in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2).

In my opinion this rule was correctly laid down and the decision in Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1) cannot be accepted as laying down the correct law. It must, however, be observed that Mr. Justice Shah Din, while considering clause (u) of r. 1, O. XLIII, never intended to lay down a general rule governing all cases, as is manifest from the following remark in his judgment:

"The right construction of the words 'where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court' as used in clause (u) of r. 1 of the Order under consideration appears to me to be a matter of some difficulty, and it is not easy to lay down a rule which would govern all conceivable cases falling within the purview of the clause in question." Upon almost all the points in the case there was a general agreement between the two learned Judges who decided the case reported as Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2). The only difference of opinion was on the question whether an appeal from an order of remand dealing with a question of custom would lie at all. Mr. Justice Chevis being of opinion that as an appeal lay from the appellate decree on a certificate so an appeal would lie from an order of remand if a certificate were produced. Mr. Justice Shah Din, on the other hand, was of opinion that as section 40 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act did not in terms apply to such an appeal the party aggrieved by the order of remand could not claim the right under the said section to apply to the Appellate Court for a certificate on a point of custom involved in the preliminary point, and as the Appellate Court had not, by necessary implication, the power to grant a certificate to such an applicant, it would be perfectly within its right in declining to adjudicate upon the application submitted to it. From this circumstance he came to the conclusion that no appeal lay to the Chief Court from the Divisional Judge's order of remand, because it could not be found definitely that an appeal would lie from the decree of the Divisional Judge. Speaking for myself, this was too narrow a view to take. The object of the Legislature, by enacting sub-section (3) of section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act, was to make an exception in matters of second appeal regarding a question of custom or usage of sufficient importance, and to allow an appeal on evidence also. To hold that the right of questioning a decision on custom exists in appeals from decrees and does not exist in appeals from orders of remand would create an anomaly. As rightly held by both the learned Judges, it was intended by the Legislature to put orders of remand on exactly the same footing as appellate decrees and to make them appealable on precisely the same grounds. If a mistake in deciding the question of custom can be corrected in an appeal from an appellate decree it is reasonable to hold that it can and ought to be corrected in an appeal from an order of remand also.

Exactly the same question which is urged in the present case was raised in Lati v. Gaddi (8) and my learned brother Mr. Justice Scott Smith was asked to extend the principle enunciated in Faiz Ahmad v. Badar Din (1) to the case before him, but he refused to do so, for the reasons stated in his judgment. I entirely agree in the interpretation put by my learned brother on clause (u) of r. 1, O XLI, Civil Procedure Code.

My answer to the question put in the reference to the Full Bench is that an appeal from an order of an Appellate Court remanding a case under O. XLI, r. 23, does lie in all cases except those in which absolutely no right of second appeal against the appellate decree is given in the body of the Code or by any other law.

SHADI LAL, C. J.—The facts relevant to the question submitted for consideration are set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, and I agree with him in holding that the preliminary objection that no appeal lies from the order of remand is wholly untenable and must be overruled. I consider that the Legislature by using the words "where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court" in clause (u) of O. XLIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, intended to make it clear that the law does not allow an appeal from every order of remand under r. 23 of O. XLI, but that the order of remand is appealable only in those cases in which there would be a second appeal from the decree which the Appellate Court would have passed, if, instead of remanding the case for re-decision, it had decided the whole case itself.

It will be observed that section 588 (28) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, gave a right of appeal from every order of remand irrespective of the nature and value of the suit in which the order was made, and it was consequently held that an order remanding a suit of the nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes was appealable, even though the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit did not exceed Rs. 500. While section 586 of the old Code (corresponding to section 102 of the present Code) expressly enacted that no second appeal lay from an appellate decree passed in a suit of small cause nature not exceeding Rs. 500 in value, there was no such restriction on the right of appeal from an order of remand. It was obviously anomalous that an adjudication, e. g., a decision on a question of limitation, which was not appealable if it formed part of a decree, should be open to appeal to the High Court if it was incorporated in an order of remand. Indeed, it was held in some cases that a person appealing from an order of remand was not confined to the grounds enumerated in section 584 (section 100 of the present Code) on which a second appeal could be entertained, but could impeach the order of remand even on a question of fact.

To remove the anomaly pointed out above, the Legislature has now restricted the right of appeal from an order of remand by providing in O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, that an appeal lies only in cases in which, "an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court." It seems to me that the framers of the Code intended to place the right of appeal from an order of remand on the same footing as the right of appeal from an appellate decree.

I cannot accept the argument urged on behalf of the respondent that no appeal from an order of remand is allowed unless it can be predicated with certainty that the appellate decree, which may ultimately be passed in the case, would be open to one of the objections enumerated in section 100 and would not be concluded by a finding of fact. If this contention were allowed, I cannot imagine a single case in which there would be an appeal from an order of remand because it is possible to contend in every case that the decree of the Appellate Court might proceed solely on a finding of fact and might not involve any of the questions mentioned in section 100 of the Code. In that case there could never be an appeal from an order made under r. 23 of O. XLI, and clause (u) of O. XLIII, r. 1, would be wholly meaningless.

I cannot give effect to a contention which would lead to such a manifest absurdity, and I have no hesitation in holding that the interpretation which the learned Counsel for the respondent seeks to place upon the words quoted above, is wholly wrong. The object of the Legislature clearly was to assimilate the right of appeal from an order of remand to the right of appeal from an appellate decree by imposing upon the former right the same restrictions as are applicable to the right of second appeal.

In order to determine whether an order of remand is appealable or not the test, in my opinion, is this:—Suppose, the Court instead of making an order of remand passed a decree on the strength of the adjudication constituting the order of remand, would there be a second appeal from that decree? If a second appeal would lie from the decree, then the order of remand is appealable otherwise not. This is my answer to the question referred to the Full Bench. The case must now go back to the Divisional Bench.

MARTINEAU, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice and have only to add a few remarks with regard to the rule laid down in Sawan Singh v. Mothu (2), with which I am unable to agree. It was there held that there could be no appeal from an order of remand under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, if the order was based on a finding of fact only, but that an appeal was competent if the preliminary point on which the decision of the first Court was reversed involved a question of law which would allow of a second appeal if the order appealed from were a decree. As pointed out in the order of reference to a Full Bench the error in that decision consisted in confusing the question whether an appeal lies from an appellate decree with the question as to the grounds on which an appeal will lie. The competency of a second appeal is not dependent on the question whether the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based on a finding of fact or on a finding of law, for even when the decision is based on a finding of fact a second appeal will lie on one of the grounds mentioned in section 41 (1) (b) and (c) of the Punjab Courts Act. Whether or not a second appeal lies depends on the nature and value of the suit, a second appeal being barred by section 42 (2) only in a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes where the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500. Section 42 (1) merely restricts the grounds on which a second appeal can be entertained to those mentioned in section 41.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 7—Pension, attachment of—Facts showing attachability be set out.

Ordinarily a pension is not attachable for sale. Where a decree-holder wishes to attach and sell a pension, and his case is that the pension belongs to that class which is referred to in section 7 of Act XXIII of 1871, it is his duty to set out the facts and prove his case by appropriate proof.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Walsh, reported as 62 Ind. Cas. 273, reversing a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated 30th March 1920.

GANPATI TELI v. DAJI.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—As we are in agreement with the findings of fact and the proposition of law enunciated by Mr. Justice Walsh*, we can dismiss this appeal with very few words. The decree holder wished to attach and sell a pension. It was his duty, if his case was that the pension belonged to that class which are referred to in section 7 of Act XXIII of 1871 to set out the facts and to prove his case. He did not do so. No body, even to-day, knows whether the pension was granted prior to the Act of 1871 or subsequent to it. Nevertheless, it has been argued here very strenuously that the executions-creditor did all that was necessary and that he is entitled to attach and sell the pension. He has not proved any right to attach and sell the pension. There is no reason to infer that it was granted before 1871 nor is there any reason to infer that it was granted after 1871. The matter is entirely open. A pension ordinarily is not attachable for sale. If the decree-holder wanted to bring this within the exception and show that this individual pension happened to be attachable for sale, he should have done so by appropriate proof. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs and fees on the higher scale.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920)—Lessee of proprietary interest in village—Right to obtain and execute decree for arrears of rent—Ejectment of tenant—Tenancy right, extinction of.

A person other than the landlord, for instance, a holder of the proprietary interest at the moment, is entitled to obtain and execute a decree for arrears of rent but he cannot execute it by the special process of ejecting the tenant, as nobody but the landlord can eject a tenant for arrears of rent.

Ejectment of a tenant merely extinguishes the tenancy right, it does not transfer it to the ejector.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 9th December 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 118 of 1921.

Messrs. A. V. Khare and A. V. Zinzarde, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. A. V. Khare and Mr. Zinzarde have appeared for the appellant. It is clear beyond all question that nobody but the landlord can eject a tenant for arrears of rent. If that were not clear from the words of the Tenancy Act, a consideration of the futility of such an ejectment would make it so. The landlord could give the tenant so ejected a fresh lease the moment after his ejectment or could hold the land himself or give it to a third party, but the benefit obtained by the decree-holder and the extent to which he had executed his decree would be limited to the satisfaction of having flung out the tenant, perhaps momentarily. There is no reason why a person other than the landlord, that is, the holder of the proprietary interest at the moment, should not obtain and execute a decree for arrears of rent, but he cannot execute it by the special process of ejecting the tenant, if only because that process would be meaningless and no more than an empty formality. It is urged that the appellant here has a right after ejecting the tenant to fill the vacuum caused by the destruction of the tenancy right himself, because it is a lease; it is admitted that he would have no such right if he had sold the village instead of leasing it. In this respect there is no difference whatever between a lease and a sale. Confusion of thought arises out of regarding the tenancy right as something carved out of the proprietary right which leaves a vacuum when it is destroyed. It is a right superimposed on the proprietorship, an encumbrance differing only in details from a possessory mortgage, and when it is destroyed it leaves the proprietary right unencumbered in the hands of the owner. Ejectment of a tenant merely extinguishes the tenancy right; it does not transfer it to the ejector. The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondents.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, dated 2nd August 1921 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 273 of 1920.

Mr. T. L. Venkatramier, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SCHWABE, C. J.—In this case the mortgagees brought a suit to enforce the mortgage. The mortgage was executed by an executor under a Will. That Will gave the executor express power to sell any part of the estate, moveable or immoveable, as the executor might wish for purposes of paying off debts. It was contended before the learned Judge that, this power being an express power of sale, he had no power to mortgage. The learned Judge with regret came to the conclusion that that was the proper construction of the Will and that he was bound by Haldenby v. Spofforth (1) and Indian cases following that case so to hold. On a careful examination of that case, so far from being authority in favour of the proposition that the executor with power of sale cannot mortgage, it is in my judgment, direct authority for the proposition that he can, except in cases such as the case where a prohibition against mortgage can be inferred. The Master of the Rolls, Lord Longdale referring to a case of Ivy v. Gilbert (2) said thus:—"Lord Macclesfield also observed that the Court had decreed, that the trusts declared concerning the term, empowered the trustees to sell the premises, and a power to sell, implied a power to mortgage which was a conditional sale. This I conceive to mean, that where it is intended to preserve the estate, there, under a direction for sale, a mortgage will sufficiently answer the purpose." The facts of Haldenby v. Spofforth (1) were that the direction there was not to preserve the estate but to convert the whole estate into money.

Turning to the authorities in this country it is sufficient to quote Purna Chandra Bakshi v. Nobin Chandra Gangopadhya (3) which is a direct authority for the proposition that where by a Will power is given to sell the property to pay off debts that power includes the power to mortgage. By section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the power of an executor to dispose of immoveable property is subject to any restrictions which may be imposed by the Will. But, in my judgment, the power of sale is not a restriction imposed by the Will and the power of mortgage, so far from being inconsistent with it, is, as pointed out in the English case, included in it unless there be some reason to be gathered from the terms of the Will itself why it should be excluded. We are then asked to remand the case so that further evidence may be given. The learned Judge held, as I understand his judgment, that the onus was on the defendant to show, if it was open to him to show that there were no debts and that the executor was not mortgaging for the purpose of paying off debts. No evidence of that kind was tendered and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether, if it had been tendered, it would have been admissible. In my judgment

(1) (1839) 1 Beav. 390; 48 E. R. 991; 8 L. J. (N. s.) Ch. 238; 3 Jur. 241; 49 R. R. 390.

(2) (1722) 2 P. Wms. 13; Prec. Ch. 583; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 644; 24 E. R. 622, affirmed on Appeal (1723) 6 Bro. P. C. 68; 2 E. R. 937.

(3) 8 C. W. N. 362.

it was a pefectly proper ruling that it was not upon the mortgagee to prove as part of his case that the executor with power of sale was acting properly in effecting the mortgage. On those grounds I think the judgment must be reversed and judgment must be entered for the plaintiffs as prayed for with costs here and below.

WALLACE, J.—I agree. I just wish to say a few words on the second point. I agree with the Trying Judge that, where an executor has the power to mortgage, the mortgagee cannot be called upon to show the reality of the testator's debts for which their money was borrowed and as the defendant here merely does not admit that there were debts other than the mortgage-debt of 24th February 1918 and does not assert that there were no other debts, there seems to me no sound ground for remand for proof of the reality of the debts for which the mortgage was taken. I agree that the second mortgage is binding on the defendant.

Custom—Succession—Re-marriage of widow—Issue, whether legitimate—Manjh Rajputs of Jagraon Tahsil, Ludhiana District.

Although among certain sections of Manjh Rajputs of the Jagraon Tahsil, in the Ludhiana District, the re-marriage of widows is not recognised, yet where such a re-marriage takes place the issue of the marriage are legitimate and have an equal right of succession to the property of their father, along with the issue of any other marriage. [p. 858, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 27th May 1918.

Mr. Philip Morton, for the Appellant.
Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case are Manjh Rajputs of Jagraon Tahsil, Ludhiana District, and the suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the son of Dargahi Khan, a Manjh Rajput, for a declaration that he alone was entitled to his father's estate to the exclusion of the three minor defendants, the sons of Dargahi Khan by another wife, on the ground that the defendants' mother was a widow when she married Dargahi Khan and that in accordance with the custom which governs the parties, the issue of such an union was illegitimate.

The suit has been dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge on the grounds that the custom alleged is opposed to general law and custom and requires very strict proof and that, though the custom is recorded in the riwaj-i-am or statements of custom of the Settlement of 1882, those statements carry very little weight as they are unsupported by instances. It is contended before us on behalf of the appellant that the demand made by the Court below for instances in support of the custom is unreasonable, inasmuch as it is impossible to give negative evidence of a custom by instances, and our attention has been drawn to the oral evidence which is to the effect that in four villages of Jagraon Tahsil widows are never re-married and that consequently those four villages are full of widows. The oral evidence for the plaintiff is generally to the effect that in the four villages concerned re marriage of widows is not recognised by Manjh Rajputs, and it is asserted, though not very convincingly, that Dargahi Khan on his marriage with the mother of the defendants was ostracized. That Dargahi Khan, however, was not completely outcasted and that he had adherents in the village who recognised him in spite of his marriage with the widow is clear from the fact that the marriage caused a riot in the village and persons on either side were sent to jail. Muhammad Hussain (P. W. No. 2), whilst alleging that the issue of such a marriage is not illegitimate, stated that it was debarred from succession. The reason alleged for this extraordinary custom is that the Manjh Rajputs were originally Hindus who, on their conversion to Islam, retained their aversion from re-marriage of widows.

It cannot be doubted that in 1882 popular opinion amongst these Manjh Rajputs, at any rate, in four villages of Jagraon Tahsil, was opposed to the re-marriage of widows, but in the more recent Settlement of 1909-10 the Settlement Officer recorded his opinion that although in these four villages the same custom was alleged to prevail, there was no doubt that all tribes of Rajputs practised Karewa, that is, re-marriage of widows, and that it was common even among Manjh Rajputs residing in villages other than the four villages referred to in this case. Before us, although this was denied in the Court below, it is conceded that Dargahi Khan was formally married to the mother of the defendants and that the defendants are the sons of Dargahi Khan, and the question for decision now is whether the issue of an otherwise legal marriage is illegitimate merely by reason of the fact that the re marriage of a widow is regarded by certain sections of the Manjh Rajputs as opposed to custom. We are constrained to find that among this restricted community of Manjh Rajputs there is a prejudice against re-marriage of widows but that the prejudice, we hold, is inhuman and opposed to natural justice, equity and public policy. We find that Dargahi Khan broke through the popular prejudice, married a widow and succeeded in retaining his position in the society of the village, and we hold that his offspring, the defendants, are his legitimate issue.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT-SMITH (June 1, 1922).—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether the rule laid down in Chajju v. Dalipa (1) namely, that the son of an appointed heir, who predeceased the appointer, is entiled to succeed to the latter's property is correct. The Judges, who decided that case, admitted that there was no authority on the point and decided it in accordance with what they considered to be the general principles of the customary law. In coming to their decision they were mainly influenced by two considerations; firstly, that an element of absurdity would be introduced into the matter if the ultimate effectiveness of the appointment were made to depend on the accident whether the appointer or the appointed should die first; secondly, that all through the discussions about adoption in the Punjab it appeared to be clearly recognised that there is no real distinction between adoption and gift. The Judges were of opinion that the intention of the alienor is the same in both and that it is more a matter of habit than anything else that he should proceed in one way rather than the other. They said that the gift, if valid, would benefit the donee's son whether the donee himself predeceased the donor or not.

As regards the first of these considerations, I do not, with all deference see much, force in it because there is no authority that I know of, which prevents a person from appointing another heir if the one appointed by him dies. As regards the second consideration it appears to me that the appointment of an heir just as much resembles a bequest as a gift.

In the case of Mehra v. Mangal Singh (2) at page 371* of the report the following passage occurs:—

"It has been held in many cases that the appointment of an heir is tantamount to a gift which comes into operation on the death of the appointer and that the property received by the appointee should be regarded in the nature of a bequest." A passage from the judgment of Sir Meredyth Plowden at page 231 of 50 P. R, 1893 (F. B.) [Ralla v. Budha (3)] is then quoted, and the Judges go on to say:—"The appointee is a legatee of the property and the son of a legatee has absolutely no right to control an alienation by the father of the property bequeathed to the latter."

Art. 49 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law states that the relationship established between the appointed heir and the appointer is purely a personal one. There is ample authority for this in the rulings of the Chief Court and of the High Court. In Tulsi v. Ram Rakha (4) the Judges said:—"It seems to us clear that in a case of customary appointment of an heir the appointment is personal to him and does not operate to make all his relatives, or even his existing sons, members of the agnatic family of the adopter." In Mehra v. Mangal Singh (2) it was held that property which comes to the appointed heir as such is not ancestral qua the latter's son. The difference between a ceremonial adoption of the Hindu Law and the customary appointment of an heir was referred to (page 369* last paragraph, of the report) and it was pointed out that it had been repeatedly held that such an appointment does not involve the transplanting of a person from one family to another. The tie of kinship with the natural family is not dissolved and the fiction of blood relationship with the members of the new family has no application to the appointed heir. The relationship established between the appointer and the appointee was said to be a purely personal one and not to extend beyond the contracting parties on either side. The Judges went on to say that it followed that the appointer or his male lineal ascendant could not be called an ancestor of the appointee's son.

In the same case at page 372* of the report the following passages occur:—

"It is, however, significant that in the case of Kritrima adoption which, as has been pointed out in several judgments of this Court, resembles the customary appointment of an heir in the Punjab, the Calcutta High Court has held that the sons of a person adopted in the Kritrima form are not entitled to inherit the property of the adoptive father [vide, inter alia, Juswant Singh v. Doolee Chand (5). At page 258 (2) of the report the learned Judges make the following observations:—

"'Under the Hindu Law as laid down in Macnaghten, Volume 1, page 76, and also in a decision of this Court in Doolee Singh v. Bussunt Koeree (6) the relation of Kritrima son extends to the contracting parties only, and the son so adopted will not be considered the grandson of the adopting father's father, nor will the son of the adopted be considered the grandson of his adopting father.'

"These observations are, in our opinion, equally applicable to the person appointed an heir under the customary law."

With regard to the position of a Kritrima son the following authorities may be referred to. In Hindu Family Law by Trevelyan, bottom of page 205 it is stated that "A Kritrima adoption does not transfer the subject of it from his natural family. It gives him, in addition to his rights in that family, rights of inheritance to the person (man or woman) actually adopting him, and to no one else. His sons acquire no rights of inheritance to his adoptive father."

In Collector of Tirhoot v. Huropershad Mohunt (7) it was held that a Kritrima son succeeds to the property of the person adopting him only. The same was held in Doolee Singh v. Bussunt Koeree (6). In Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 268, paragraph 204, the following passage occurs :—

"As regards succession, the Kritrima son loses no rights of inheritance in his natural family. He becomes the son of two fathers to this extent, that he takes the inheritance of his adoptive father, but not of that father's father, or other collateral relations,.....Nor do his sons, etc., take any interest in the property of theadoptive father, the relationship between adopter and adoptee being limited to the contracting parties themselves, and not extending further on either side."

In support of this the learned author quotes the case in Juswant Singh v. Doolee Chand (5). Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition at page 415 states the same rule as to the Kritrima son's rights of inheritance.

For the respondent we were referred to a recent decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Waryaman v. Kanshi Ram (8) [Civil Appeal No. 939 of 1918]. That was a case of Jats of the Hoshiarpur District and it was held that the adoption of Kanshi Ram was intended to be a complete adoption with the effect of bringing about a complete change of family. It was held that he was a fully adopted son and could succeed collaterally. The Judges in that case laid down no general principle, but merely held on the facts of that particular case that the appointed heir could succeed collaterally. It does not appear to me to have any bearing upon the point referred to us.

Another argument urged was that if the son of an appointed heir is debarred from inheriting the property of his father's appointer; he may in certain instances be deprived of inheriting in either family. Suppose, for instance, that A appoints B to be his heir. B has a son C and has brothers D, E, etc. B's natural father dies first and his brothers exclude him from inheritance in his natural family in accordance with the rule enunciated in paragraph 48 of the Digest of Customary Law. B dies next and then A, his appointer. B has been excluded from inheriting in his natural family and if his son C be debarred from succeeding to A, he will succeed in neither family. The case supposed would certainly be a very hard one, but I do not see how we can let the possibility of such a case influence us in deciding the point referred. Counsel for the appellant urges that though B would be excluded from inheriting in his natural family, it does not follow that his son C would be so excluded. The point is not before us at present and will be decided if and when it arises.

It was suggested to us that we should order a remand for enquiry into the custom. This, I think, would be a matter for the Division Bench to have considered and it does not appear that such a course was suggested to it. The Full Bench has only to consider whether the rule laid down in Chajju v. Dalipa (1) is correct or not. In my opinion it follows from the authorities and considerations referred to above that:—

(1) The customary appointment of an heir in the Punjab is a purely personal relationship, resembling the Kritrima form of adoption of the Hindu Law;

(2) it affects the parties thereto only;

(3) the appointed heir does not become the grandson of the appointer's father;

(4) his son does not become the grandson of the appointer.

It, therefore, follows that the son of an appointed heir, in the absence of proof of a special custom to the contrary, has no right of succession to the appointer. I would accordingly answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the negative but would add that it is always open to a party to plead a special custom which, as laid down in Pala Singh v. Lachhmi (9) and Amin Chand v.

(9) 82 Ind. Cas. 16; 105 P. R. 1915; 192 P. W. R. 1915.

Bujha (10) and Gulab Khan v. Chiragh Bibi (11), must be proved by instances and not deductively.

SHADI LAL, C. J. (June 12, 1922).—I have read the judgment of Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and reached to the conclusion that the son of an appointed heir, who predeceased the appointer, is not entitled to succeed to the latter's property. As pointed out by me in Mehra v. Mangal Singh (2) the customary appointment of an heir does not involve the transplanting of the heir from one family to another. The tie of kinship with the natural family is not dissolved, and the fiction of blood relationship with the members of the new family has no application to the appointed heir. The relationship established between the appointer and the apointee is a purely personal one and does not extend beyond the contracting parties on either side.

It follows, therefore, that the son of an appointed heir cannot be regarded as the grandson of the appointer; and there being no relationship between the two, neither of them can inherit the property of the other. If the appointed heir dies in the lifetime of the appointer, the existence of the former's son would not debar the latter from appointing another heir, and it is clear that the second appointed heir would succeed to the estate of the appointer.

It is to be observed that the customary appointment of an heir resembles in many respects the Kritrima form of adoption of Hindu Law, and as regards the Kritrima son, it has been held that he does not succeed to the property of his adoptive father's father, nor do his sons take the inheritance of his adoptive father. I would, therefore, hold that, in the absence of a special custom to the contrary, the son of an appointed heir acquires no right of inheritance to the appointer.

HARRISON, J.—(June 23, 1922.)—I agree.

Cross-objections—Petition stating reasons for supporting decree—Court-fees, payment of.

If, for the purpose of supporting the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the plaintiff's claim, the defendant files a petition in the Appellate Court stating the reasons on which he supported the decree, that would not amount to cross-objections for which an ad valorem Court-fee would be payable.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 22nd May 1920, confirming a decree of the Munsif, Jaunpur, dated the 2nd July 1919.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. M. Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We do not agree with the office report. In our opinion no ad valorem Court fee was payable in regard to the cross objections filed by the respondent. The decree of the Court of first instance was in favour of the respondents as it totally dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The respondents could support that decree on any ground, even on a ground other than that taken by the Court of first instance. If for that purpose they filed a petition stating the reasons on which they supported the decree, that did not amount to cross-objections for which an ad valorem Court-fee was payable. The result of the office report would be that the appellant had to pay Court fee on the full amount claimed and the respondents, who held the decree of the Court of first instance, had to pay another Court-fee for the same claim, that is to say, two sums of Court-fees would be realised in respect of the same claim from both the parties. This surely could not be the intention of the Legislature and we do not think that the respondents were bound to pay ad valorem Court-fees on their cross-objections in this case.

Cutchi Memons—Succession—Hindu Law, applicability of—Ancestral property, son whether takes vested interest in—"Marketable title," meaning of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 25.

The application of the rules of Hindu Law by custom to Cutchi Memons is limited to rules of inheritance and succession, and does not extend to the rules relating to the joint property as applicable to Hindus. [p. 865, col. 1.]

A son of a Cutchi Memon has no vested interest by birth in the ancestral property of his father, and dealings with the property belonging to Cutchi Memons are conducted on this basis. [p. 866, col. 1.]

The phrase "marketable title" is equivalent to the phrase "a title free from reasonable doubt" in section 25 of the Specific Relief Act. [p 868, col. 1.]

The question whether a "marketable title" free from reasonable doubt has been made out or not, must be answered with reference to the facts of each case. [p. 864, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Crump. The suit out of which the appeal arises was filed by the plaintiffs to enforce an agreement to sell certain immoveable properties to the defendant for Rs. 1,55,000. The defendant agreed to buy the properties in suit and paid Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money to the plaintiffs. The vendors had agreed to make out a marketable title. It is not necessary to refer to other terms of the agreement. Two of these properties had been previously purchased by the plaintiffs from the defendant, and there was no difficulty as to the title to those properties. The third property had been bought by the plaintiffs from one Fakir Mahomed, a Cutchi Memon, who conveyed the property to them on April 29, 1920, on behalf of himself and his minor brother. That conveyance is Exhibit E. The property belonged to the father of Fakir Mahomed who had bought it in 1884 from one Hajee Adam Oosman Nurani. That conveyance is Exhibit B.

It appears from the correspondence that there was some difficulty felt by the purchaser with regard to this property. By the letter of October 9, 1920, the defendant called upon the vendors to obtain Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased Joosub Hajee Cassum Pirmahomed, on the ground that the recitals in the conveyance were not sufficient evidence of the fact that Joosab Hajee Cassum Pirmahomed had died intestate in 1911 and had left only two sons. The vendors did not accept the position taken by the defendant that Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased father of their vendors were necessary. Subsequently, in the requisitions for title, an inquiry was made as to whether Fakir Mahomed had any male issue. It appeared that Fakir Mahomed had two sons, and in the letter of December 7, 1920, the defendant raised the objection that as the sons of Fakir Mahomed would have a vested interest in the property according to the law applicable to them the title was defective. The vendors did not accept the correctness of this position. In the letter of December 15 objections to the title were categorically stated on behalf of the purchaser, namely, first, that the objection as to the want of satisfactory proof of the fact that Joosub Hajee Cassum Pirmahomed had died intestate and had left only two sons Fakir Mahomed and Mahomed Saleh as his heirs was not removed, and that in order to meet that difficulty they insisted upon Letters of Administration being taken out to the estate of the deceased Joosub Hajee Cassum Pirmahomed, and, secondly, that the sons of Fakir Mahomed had a vested interest in the property in question, and that as their interest was not conveyed to the plaintiffs the title was defective. The plaintiffs offered, by their letter of December 18, to give further proof by way of a declaration from two respectable members of the Jamat to the effect that Joosub Pirmahomed had died intestate and had left only two sons as his heirs according to the rules of Hindu Law as to succession applicable to Cutchi Memons; and, as regards the second objection, they contended that, according to the law applicable to Cutchi Memons, the sons had no vested interest in the property of their father. The purchaser replied, by his letter of December 22, that he was not prepared to accept a declaration of two respectable members of the Jamat as proposed.

In the end, on account of the difference between the parties on these two points, the present suit was filed by the vendors to enforce the agreement between the parties. The defendant in his written statement pleaded that he was right in insisting that Letters of Administration should be obtained to the estate of Joosub Pirmahomed, that the two sons of Fakir Mahomed had a vested interest in the property and, as the interests had not been conveyed to the plaintiffs, the title was not marketable. The defendant counter-claimed the earnest-money paid by him, and Rs. 15,000 by way of damages for failure on the part of the plaintiffs to make out a marketable title. Parties gave no evidence beyond the documents which have been put in, and which are printed in Part III of the Paper Book, subject to this that the proceedings in a certain suit were sought to be put in by the defendant but rejected by the Court as irrelevant. The notes of the Trial Judge indicating that fact should have been printed: but they are not to be found in the Paper-Book. The issues raised were: (1) whether the plaintiffs deduced a marketable title to the property thirdly described in schedule B of the plaint; and (2) whether the defendant should be entitled to his counter-claim. The learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had deduced a marketable title, and accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim for specific performance of the agreement. The prayer for damages in the plaint was not pressed and a decree was passed on that basis, the defendant's counter-claim being rejected with costs.

In the appeal before us the questions raised relate to the marketable nature of the title of the plaintiffs with reference to the property in question. It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the sons of Fakir Mahomed would have a vested interest in the property in question according to the Hindu Law applicable to the Cutchi Memons. It is pointed out that the decisions on the point that the Hindu Law applies to Cutchi Memons so far as it relates to succession and inheritance and no further are conflicting, and that there is no decision of the Court of Appeal on the point. It is contended that, under the circumstances in spite of the later decisions limiting the application of Hindu Law to the Cutchi Memons only to questions of succession and inheritance, the question may be raised by any son in this community that he has a vested interest in his father's ancestral estate, and that the title which the plaintiffs are in a position to make out is not free from reasonable doubt and not marketable on that ground. It is further urged that there is no satisfactory evidence in the case to show that Joosub who died in 1911 had only two sons, and further that he died intestate. It is pointed out that, though as a matter of law it may not be obligatory upon the sons to take out Letters of Administration, it is still open to the sons of Joosub to do so, and to place the fact of representation to the estate of Joosub beyond all doubt and dispute, and that, as the plaintiffs have refused to adopt that course, the evidence on the record should not be accepted as sufficient to establish the two facts mentioned above beyond all doubt, and that, in that state of things, the title, such as it is, should not be forced upon the defendant.

Before dealing with these two points, I may mention that several English decisions were cited to us in the course of the argument on the question as to what is a marketable title which the Courts would force upon an unwilling purchaser. I do not propose to examine those decisions in detail. It is enough to refer to the summary as given in Fry on Specific Performance, paragraphs 890 and 891, indicating the result of the decisions on the point.

On the other hand, for the respondents it is contended that the "marketable title" means "a title free from reasonable doubt," and for this purpose reliance is placed upon the provisions of section 25 (b) of the Specific Relief Act where the expression "free from reasonable doubt" is used. In support of this view reliance is placed upon the view taken by Mr. Justice Farran in Haji Mahomed Mitha v. Musa i Esa i (1), where "a good title" is treated as meaning "a title free from reasonable doubt" and also upon the observations of Lord Eldon in Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip (2), where the question for the Court was stated to be "whether the doubt is so reasonable and fair, that the property is left in his (purchaser's) hands not marketable." It seems to me that it would serve no useful purpose to attempt to define the exact meaning of the expression "marketable title," or, in other words, to lay down what should constitute, under the circumstances of a particular case, a marketable title. If there is to be any general test it must be accepted as laid down in the Specific Relief Act that it should be "free from reasonable doubt." Whether the doubt under the facts and circumstances of a particular case is reasonable or not must necessarily depend upon the nature of the objections and the facts of that case. It is clear that, so far as the objections to the title in the present case are concerned, they are of such a nature that they must be examined on their own merits. The English decisions cited to us do not throw any light on those objections. The question whether among Cutchi Memons the position that a son has a vested interest in the ancestral property of his father, just as a Hindu son in this Presidency would have, is a point which must be examined with reference to the law applicable to the Cutchi Memons and the decisions bearing on that point. The other objection raised is purely one of fact and must be decided with reference to the evidence in the case.
